SCHOOL MUSIC
BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

THE ELFIN HILL
AN OPERETTA.

"'The Elfin Hill' is founded on one of Hans Anderson's charming stories, and the libretto has been written in dainty and graceful language by Miss Baldwick. The operetta opens with a short overture describing moonlight on the Dovrefeld Mountains, and Mr. Gaul has been particularly happy in infusing the Norse spirit into that portion of his music which deals with goblin life in Norway. When the goblins become visitors in fairyland, the character of the music changes; lightness is its predominant feature, perhaps the choicest fragment being a fairy dance. This latter, together with a very characteristic dance of elves and a shadow dance, were beautifully executed."—Birmingham Gazette.

Price Two Shillings.
Words, Seven Shillings and Sixpence per hundred.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP
CANTATA
FOR FEMALE VOICES
Verse by JAMES STRANG.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

THE MONTHS
TWELVE VOCAL DUETS
Words by EDWARD OXENFORD.

"There are in this series of duets the sweetest things of the kind we have ever met with. Things to be treasured in households where sisters or friends delight in joining voices."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE BIRDS
SIX VOCAL TRIOS
Words by EDWARD OXENFORD.

1. The Robin.
2. The Nightingale.
3. The Dove.
4. The Skylark.
5. The Owl.
6. The Swallows.

"A valuable addition to the many beautiful and useful compositions he has formerly given to the public. Mr. Gaul's music is unfailingly charming, the voice-parts being so disposed that they may be easily learnt, and the accompaniments are as characteristic as they are pretty. Each separate piece is so good that we cannot make references to special favourites."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE MUSIC STUDENT'S MANUSCRIPT NOTE BOOK
AND PRACTICE REGISTER
ARRANGED BY
C. EGERTON LOWE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept, or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

THE KING SHALL REJOICE

(Third Edition)

AND

BEHOLD, O GOD OUR DEFENDER

Both for Four Voices, with Organ Accompaniment.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC ODDIN TAYLOR.

Price Threepence each.

"There is much merit in this setting of 'The King shall rejoice.' The choral portion is in four parts throughout, and will present few difficulties to the singers. The part-writing is fluent, the harmonic scheme is direct and well knit, and the most important lines of the text are allied to music of a solid and emphatic nature."—Musical Times, May 1, 1899.

"'The King shall rejoice' was sung at the Special Service, at Sandringham Church, on Jubilee Day, 1897, and 'Behold, O God our Defender,' at Sandringham Church, on Queen's Accession Day, 1898."

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

NOVELLO'S
SCHOOL OF PIANOFORTE MUSIC

EDITED BY

KARL KLINDWORTH.

PREFACE.

The characteristic features of Novello's School of Pianoforte Music are accuracy of text, minuteness of phrasing indications, and careful fingering. With these fundamental principles of good editing has been combined the important, though often neglected essential of the artistic presentment of the music to the eye. Special attention has accordingly been paid to clearness, especially in the direction of ample spacing of the notes, legibility, and, as far as possible, in providing convenient turning-over places—important matters which will materially assist the player in the study of the pieces contained in this series. The annotations of the Editor, the use of which will greatly aid the students in a proper interpretation of these works, speak for themselves.

MANUAL OF THE ORCHESTRAL LITERATURE OF ALL COUNTRIES

COMPILED AND EDITED BY

A. ROSENKRANZ.

In cloth, price Two Shillings and Sixpence net.

The Manual contains an almost complete list of the orchestral compositions written by composers of all countries, from Lully and Rameau (1651) up to the present time—Edward Elgar, Camille Saint-Saëns, and Richard Strauss (1902)—a period covering 250 years.

The 5012 separate works for Orchestra scheduled in the Manual are written by 1337 different composers, and are classified as follows:—

Overtures	1272	Miscellaneous Pieces ...	434
Symphonies	588	Marches	467
Various Concert Pieces...	1542	Music for String Orchestra	709

A special table, showing the degree in which the different nationalities of the various composers are represented, is given in the preface.

An alphabetical list of the names of the composers is placed at the end of the Manual, and whenever it was obtainable, the year in which each composer was born is stated.

In order to keep "The Manual of Orchestral Literature" up to date, and make it absolutely reliable as a Handbook of reference, supplementary lists will be issued at regular intervals.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)		2s. od.
2A.	DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)		2s. od.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

MR. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—
"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.
"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.
"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.
"HENRY J. WOOD."

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL
(BARITONE).
(Assistant Vicar-Choral, Westminster Abbey)
"ELIJAH."—BROMLEY.—"The title part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionalism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

MR. CHARLES TREE
"ELIJAH."—ASHBY.—May 3, 1902.
"In 'Elijah' the baritone may only anticipate success when he feels he is living the part. Even a casual observer would notice that Mr. Tree was singing not only with his voice, but from his heart, for his energy and expression, which brought forth all the finer qualities of the recits., testified this. His rich full voice thrilled the audience, and the ease with which he adapted it to the stern and the pathetic exemplified his power of discretion with the use of that great gift with which nature has endowed him. His performance will long be remembered."—Guardian.
Address, 23, Clifton Road, Maida Vale, W.

(BASS)
CANNOCK.—"LAY OF THE BELL," April 16, 1902.
"Mr. Arthur Sedgley bore the bulk of the work, and he accomplished his heavy and arduous task in a manner in keeping with his high reputation. The good impression made by Mr. Arthur Sedgley, in the first portion of the programme was more than sustained in his song 'Qui s'degno,' from the 'Magic Flute' (Mozart). He was enthusiastically encored, and further delighted his audience with a vigorous rendering of the rollicking song 'Father O'Flynn.'"—Advertiser.

ELECTRIC BLOWING. The Swanton £50 Challenge is still unaccepted. See current No. of Musical Opinion. GAS ENGINE BLOWING.

COMPOUND CENTRIFUGAL ORGAN BLOWER.

This ingenious apparatus, which generates wind by a novel application of Centrifugal Force, supersedes all other devices for Rotary Blowing—including that abomination, the noisy and objectionable Fan.

The object aimed at is to provide a Wind Generator, running at a CONSTANT speed—and a slow one—no matter what the demands on the wind. That this problem has at last been satisfactorily solved is the unanimous verdict of the numerous persons who have inspected it (as you are invited to do) in operation at my factory at Stepney, six minutes from City.

It is self-controlled. Its speed is slow and constant. Its wind supply is entirely and absolutely automatic. It is almost noiseless. It takes small space. It is simple. It is low in first cost. It is low in running cost.

If you cannot call to see it at work, a dainty Brochure is yours for the asking.

FULL ORCHESTRA, 6s. 6d. net; Score, 3s. 6d. net.
ORGAN SOLO, 2s. net (in the Press).

Sunday Times says: "The principal theme is a fine bold melody, which asserts itself in an inspiriting and determined manner. The melody of the trio is hymn-like in character and exceedingly broad and impressive. The March had a most enthusiastic reception on Monday last, and will doubtless become one of the best known compositions of the Scottish composer."

The Outlook, May 10, says: "This is far and away the best of all the Marches so far published in honour of King Edward's crowning."

Daily Telegraph, May 13, says: "We must declare Sir Alexander Mackenzie's March to be, in our opinion, a distinct success. . . . Worthy of the supreme distinction which awaits it in Westminster Abbey."

A VISIT TO LICHFIELD.

The 'Ladies of the Vale,' in their tripartite beauty, constitute the glory of Lichfield. They may be seen from afar, but before making their closer acquaintance the visitor to the ancient city perchance wends his way to the market-place. Here he will gaze upon and visit the house in which Dr. Samuel Johnson was born nearly two hundred years ago. His father, Michael Johnson, was a bookseller, and, in the year of his son's birth, sheriff of the county. He set up a bookstall at neighbouring towns on market-days. Among the places thus favoured was Birmingham, which at that time was unable to maintain a separate bookseller. One of Master Sam's schoolfellows at the Grammar School was David Garrick, whose parents resided in the city. The old house in which the great lexicographer drew his first breath has happily become public property. In walking through the rooms one becomes deeply interested in various relics, portraits, &c., which intensify the Johnsonian associations of the place. A visit to genial Alderman Lomax, an enthusiastic antiquary and admirer of Boswell's hero, enables us to handle the wedding-ring of Mrs. Johnson, twenty years the senior of her learned spouse, which Johnson himself wore after her death. And among other treasures inspected in the same house are two of the old doctor's tea-spoons. 'A hardened and shameless tea-drinker,' Johnson called himself, who 'with tea amuses the evenings, with tea solaces the midnights, and with tea welcomes the mornings.' One of his teapots held two quarts, and he professed to have consumed five and twenty cups of the fragrant beverage at one sitting! No wonder that Mrs. Thrale boiled over with indignation at having to sit up till four o'clock in the morning making tea for the great dictionary-maker. Other Lichfield associations are connected with Ashmole, founder of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, a native; and Erasmus Darwin, grandfather of the great naturalist, who for many years practised as a doctor in the ancient city.

But the 'Ladies of the Vale'—in other words, the trio of spires adorning the Cathedral—claim our attention. Unlike the exterior grey-stone sombreness of similar fanes, that of Lichfield is characterised by a warmth of colour supplied by the red stone of its structure. This beautiful sanctuary was built at various times in the thirteenth century and in the early part of the fourteenth. Its architecture includes the rigid simplicity of the Early English (transepts and choir), Early Decorated with its geometrical tracery (nave), and the gorgeousness of the completely evolved Decorated style, as seen in the Lady Chapel and Presbytery. As Lichfield is a Cathedral of the old foundation, there are no monastical buildings or cloisters. The wonderful West Front, quite Continental in appearance, took a long time to build. Our illustrations show the richness and extent of its decorations, with niches filled with figures representing Bible characters, saints, kings, bishops, and others. A full list of these is given in the excellent 'Hand-guide to the Cathedral' compiled by the senior and well-informed verger, Mr. C. Harradine. The exquisite beauty of the West door is not the least remarkable feature of this magnificent exterior.

THE WEST DOOR, LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.
(Photograph by the Photochrom Co., Ltd.)

The Cathedral is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Chad; the latter founded in 664 the diocese of Lichfield. The muniments of the chapter contain a list of 'goods,' dated 1345 or 1346, which include 'the head of Blessed Chad, in a certain painted wooden case; also an arm of Blessed Chad; also bones of the said saint, in a certain portable shrine.' The most valuable treasure in the library is the Textus S. Ceddæ, generally known as 'St. Chad's Gospels,' an Irish manuscript of about the end of the seventh century. It is now exhibited in a glass case in the Lady Chapel. The Cathedral suffered terribly from the siege of Lichfield in 1643. The fabric was much injured, all the stained glass destroyed, and the great steeple blown down. The Parliamentarian soldiers 'daily hunted a cat with hounds through the church, delighting themselves with the echo from the goodly vaulted roof.' The damage, estimated at £14,000, included 'a pair of organs broke in pieces, £200.' The name of Bishop Hacket (1661-1671) must be held in reverent remembrance for his restorative zeal, which included the gift of an organ valued at £600. Bishop Hacket was a wit. When a gentleman said to him that 'hell was paved with bishops' skulls,' the facetious divine entreated his informant to tread lightly over his!

The chief features of interest in the Cathedral include the charming old glass in the Lady Chapel, which, by-the-way, is not a separate house of prayer, but is contained in the main building. Much of that glass came from the dissolved Abbey of Herkenrode, near Liège, and the remainder had been deposited in Messrs. Christie's cellars for many years previous to its becoming the property of the dean and chapter. Chantry's famous monument 'The sleeping children' naturally attracts attention as 'an intimate consciousness of the expression of natural things.' The magnificent restoration of the Cathedral—begun by Mr. (afterwards Sir) G. Gilbert Scott in 1856—has just been completed by the filling-in of the niches on either side of the 1863 reredos with statues.* The Communion Plate, mostly of the Restoration period, includes a beautifully-wrought flagon and cover. St. Chad's Chapel, long used as a muniment room, was reverently restored at the cost of the present Dean in 1897. The Early English tracery of the windows in this quiet sanctuary is very beautiful.

The Cathedral library is not only admirably kept,—as, indeed, is the entire edifice—but there is a well-compiled catalogue. It contains seven of the ten vocal parts of 'Barnard's Church Music' (1641). The handwriting of Dr. Johnson can be seen in some annotations made during the progress of the great dictionary, in a volume of sermons by Dr. South. The word 'settle' is therein printed with only one 't'; Johnson adds a second 't' in the margin, which evidently settled 'settle'—no contradictionary, as Tom Hood would say.

Attention may now be directed to some matters musical. First, in regard to the organ. In the year 1634 three tourists who visited Lichfield recorded that 'the organs were deep and sweet, their anthems we were much delighted with, and of the voyces, 2 Trebles, 2 Counter-tenors, and 2 Bases, that equally on each side of the Quire most melodiously acted and performed their parts.' This 'deep and sweet' instrument does not however seem to have met all requirements, for in 1639 'Robert Dallam, of the Covent Garden and cittie of Westminster,' agreed with 'the Deane & Chapter' to build an organ for the sum of '£300 & £15 of lawfull English money.' The specification stated 'that evrie one of the said stopps shall have and containe 51 pipes a piece.' Bishop Hacket's organ (circa 1661) was obtained by the contributions of ladies. The Bishop wrote: 'An organ is bespoke at £600 price, to be call'd the Ladies' Organ, because none but the honourable and the most pious of that sex shall contribute to that sum.' The names of the subscribers were inscribed on the instrument, e.g., 'Illustrissima heroina Francisca ducissima Somersetensis,' and others.

Michaelmas, 1677.	For mending the little organ and 1d. for dyet	6s. 0d
Michaelmas, 1680.	For mending the church cushions and organ	2s. 0d.

It would be interesting to know how the latter payment was proportioned.

In 1713 Christian Smith, of the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn,—an organ-builder concerning whom very little is known—made certain proposals for repairing the organ and for making it 'regularly pitch'd by sinking the tone a note lower.' One of his estimates concludes with the following naïve condition: 'This is the lowest price I can take, except I wrong both myself and my family.' The next organ-builder who appeared on the scene was Schwarbrook, in 1740. Half-a-century later the renowned Samuel Green, of Isleworth, rebuilt the organ, adding much new material. This instrument is now in Armitage Church, near Lichfield. The correspondence between old Green and the Dean and Chapter relating to the erection of the organ is preserved among the Cathedral muniments. In this he refers to 'which road the waggon had best travel'; and he enigmatically adds: 'I beg your next may not be too severe, as I feel very much on the occasion.' He also says that he has been 'afflicted with the rheumatism for a long time, but am now, thank God, in good health.' Prior to the year 1856 the organ stood on the screen at the entrance to the Choir. In 1884, Messrs. Hill and Son entirely rebuilt the instrument originally built by Holdich, in 1861, for the re-opening of the restored Cathedral in that year; it is now an organ of four manuals and sixty-six stops. Its position in the aisle of the north transept is very unsatisfactory for accompanying the ordinary services, though the tone tells with excellent effect in the nave of the Cathedral. The console is placed under the first northern arch of the Choir.

* The story of the restoration, which covers altogether a period of nearly half-a-century, has been interestingly told by Canon Lonsdale, the venerable and senior member of the Chapter, in his 'Recollections of Work done in and upon Lichfield Cathedral from 1856 to 1894.'

(Photograph by the Photochrom Co., Ltd.)

The statutes governing the corporation of Vicars—clerical and lay—are of the time of Bishop Hacket, revised by subsequent Bishops. The emoluments of the vicars, both priest and lay, are the same, about £160 per annum, and these offices are freehold. John Saville, a vicar-choral of forty-eight years' standing (and singing) is buried in the Cathedral, and his monument has a poetic inscription written by Ann Seward, 'the Swan of Lichfield.' It concludes thus:—

> Sleep then, pale mortal frame, in yon low shrine,
> Till angels wake thee with a note like thine.

In former days the lay-vicars read the first lesson at morning and evening prayer, and to this day the Litany is sung, a duetto, and, of course, in unison, by a priest and lay vicar. Five settings of the Litany are in regular use—Tallis, The Common, Loosemore, King, and Wanless: the three last named, edited by Mr. John B. Lott, have recently been published. There are ten lay-vicars, one of them being organist. We give (on p. 370) a facsimile of the common seal of their corporation, which dates back to the year 1240. The choristers are twenty in number, ten of the boys being probationers. They are all, including the five 'imported' young gentlemen (non-resident in Lichfield) under the care of the choristers' schoolmaster, Mr. Charles Hobley. Among old boys of recent years there may be mentioned the names of Dr. J. C. Culwick, of Dublin; Dr. A. B. Plant, of Burton-on-Trent; Mr. George Leake, of Southampton; and Mr. C. J. Wood, of Wellingborough, all of whom were pupils of the late Mr. Thomas Bedsmore. Mr. H. Rose, organist of Tamworth Parish Church, is the assistant organist.

In regard to that important functionary in a cathedral—the organist. His statutable salary is £4 per annum! but this is augmented by his emoluments as a lay-vicar and from other sources. According to Mr. John E. West's 'Cathedral Organists,' the first recorded chief-musician at Lichfield was Michael Este, probably a son of the famous printer and publisher Thomas Este. His motets so pleased the Bishop of Lincoln that that prelate settled upon him an annuity for life! To Michael Este succeeded Henry Hinde, who had as a pupil Elias Ashmole, the founder of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford; he records that Hinde 'taught me the virginets and organ.' It appears that no less than three Lambs next held the office in succession.

The most distinguished of the old-time organists of Lichfield was Dr. John Alcock, who held the post from 1750-60, though he continued a vicar-choral until his death in 1806, at the age of ninety-one. He was educated in the choir of St. Paul's, his master being, as he records, 'the ingenious Mr. Charles King.' Alcock was the author of a very scarce book, entitled:—

> Divine Harmony; or a collection of fifty-five Double and Single Chants, for Four voices, as they are sung at the Cathedral of Lichfield. Compos'd by JOHN ALCOCK, Organist, Vicar, and Master of the Children of that Cathedral.

The Preface concludes thus:—

> May all those who are ſo happy as to be the immediate Servants of God's Houſe, not only ſing Praiſes luſtily unto the Lord with a good Courage, but also ſing Praiſes unto him with Underſtanding, is the earneſt Prayer of,

> Lichfield Cloſe, JOHN ALCOCK.
> Aug. 31, 1752.
> N.B.—Where there are double Notes, the Performer may ſing which he thinks beſt.

Divine Harmony contains fifty-five chants of a florid nature, and they are printed in crotchets; but as some of the bass notes are embellished with the sign for a shake, such crotchet notes perforce become quavery in the singing thereof. Following upon the final chant comes this quaint direction:—

> N.B.—Thoſe two laſt, may be accompanied with all ſorts of Inſtruments.

It appears that Alcock anticipated Greene and Boyce in a proposal to print a collection of Cathedral music. In a circular, dated August 2, 1752, after referring to the inaccuracies that were to be found in the then existing manuscript copies, the old Doctor says :—

My intention is, to publiſh ſeveral of the choiceſt ancient and modern Services completely in Score, (and figur'd for the Organ) one every Quarter of a Year, as I have now by me an exceeding valuable Collection of them. The Price of each Service will ſeldom exceed Three Shillings, and ſometimes will not be ſo much.

He then adds that the selection will include 'Mr. Tallis's, Mr. Bird's (in all the Six Parts;) Dr. Gibbons's: Theſe will be Tranſpoſed one Note higher. After stating his 'deſign to publish a Collection of the beſt Anthems now extant, that were never printed,' Alcock naïvely adds :—

But as I imagine many Perſons will be glad to ſee in what Manner theſe Services are to be done, I intend, by Way of Specimen, to print one of mine, as it is performed at New-College, and Magdalen College, in Oxford.

This service, published in 1753, was composed by Alcock in 1732, as he tells us, 'before I was fifteen years of age.' It was once a favourite at St. Paul's Cathedral. He relinquished his project of publishing a collection of cathedral music upon hearing of a similar intention on the part of Dr. Greene (afterwards Boyce's), and he generously handed over his collected material to that worthy musician. He also composed other church music, songs, and instrumental pieces. Alcock, who was buried in the Cathedral, is said to have written a novel, entitled 'The Life of Miss Fanny Brown,' but all attempts of the present writer to trace this work of fiction have failed.

A footnote in the preface to his own anthems, issued in 1771, is too amusing not to be quoted in full :—

'Tis incredible what a number of baſe Artifices have been practiced by ſome People belonging to this Cathedral, in Order to prejudice me, in my Profeſſion, and diſtreſs my Family, for no cauſe whatever: Nay, even my Son,* as ſoon as ever he began to play for me, was turned out from being a choriſter, tho' he had been in the choir but two Years, and his Voice, (which was a very uſeful one,) not the leaſt fallen; when many of the Lads are continued in their Places, for ten, twelve, or fourteen Years, and long after their Voices are broke: Alſo, tho' he always officiated for me, yet I forfeited the ſame Money, when I went out of Town, as if the Duty had been totally neglected; Albeit the Salary then was only four Pounds per annum, besides the Vicar's Place; and there was much more Duty when I was Organiſt, than now, being obliged always to play a Voluntary after Morning, and Evening Prayers, even in the ſevereſt cold Weather, when, very often, there was only one Vicar, who read the Service, and an Old Woman at Church, beſides the Choriſters; which not only brought, but fix'd the Rheumatiſm ſo ſtrongly upon me, that I am seldom free from Pain, and ſometimes confin'd to my Bed, for eight or ten Days together, tho' I never had the leaſt Complaint of that Kind, till then;

Mr. John S. Bumpus has in his collection the following letter, written by Dr. Alcock to Dr. Arnold, 'organist of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, &c., near Charles Street, Westminster':—

November 3, 1795.

Dear, and worthy Sir!

I arrived at my old lodgings, Mrs. Cunningham's Tea Warehouse, No. 25, Upper Seymour Street, the corner of Adam's Street, Portman's Square, last Friday sen'night, late at night, and should have done myself the pleasure of writing to you before now, but have been very indifferent ever since.

I have brought the plate of Mr. Byrd's Canon which I promised you, and the other Gentlemen of the Society of Musical Graduates,* to make a present of, and shall be glad if you will be so kind as to let your man fetch it, as I have no person I chuse to trust it with. I shall be extremely happy to meet you, and the rest of the Gentlemen when it is my friend's Dr. Dupuis's treat, as it is the nearest to me, I having been dangerously ill ever since Christmas.

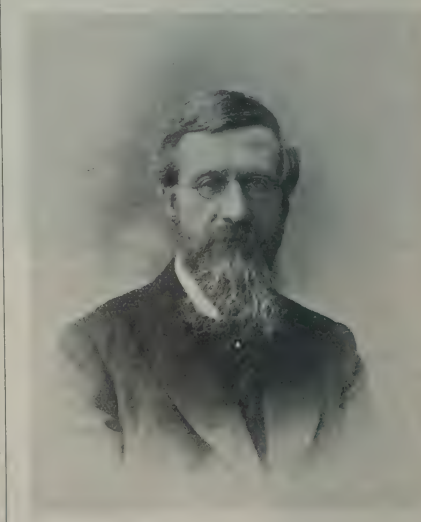
Mr. Saville gives his most respectful compliments to you, and desired me to tell you that if you will send him the whole account (I think he said of our Dean's three sets and his own), he will send you a draft for the money, the first convenient oppertunity.

I find Mr. Cooper has not, as yet, paid his subscription money. He now lives in Gray's-Inn-Place, the end of Warwick Court, opposite Turn-Stile, Holborn. He dines at home every day at four o'clock and drinks tea before he goes to the office again, which is just by.

I am, Dear Sir,
Your most unfeigned, and very humble servant,
JOHN ALCOCK.

P.S. Pray be so kind as to present my most respectful compliments to all my worthy friends that you meet with. I heartily wish you and your family health and long life. I am now four-score (and six months) years of age, being born April the 11th, 1715, and come to spend this winter in my native place.

After Alcock came one William Brown, buried in the Cathedral behind the organ, and to him succeeded Samuel Spofforth, a brother of Reginald of that ilk, the celebrated glee composer. His double chant in G was once a favourite, and he is buried at the east end of the Lady Chapel, his resting-place, discovered by Mr. John S. Bumpus, being marked with only his initials and dates on a square blue flagstone. Spofforth held the post for fifty-seven years. Thomas Bedsmore came next—1864 to 1881. He is buried in the Cathedral Close, and there is a handsome memorial brass to him on the wall of the North Choir Aisle.



MR. JOHN B. LOTT, MUS. BAC.,
ORGANIST OF LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.
(Photograph by Varney, Lichfield.)

Mr. John Browning Lott, Mus. Bac., Oxon., the present organist (of whom we give a portrait), was born at Faversham, November 7, 1849. He was a chorister, and subsequently assistant organist of Canterbury Cathedral. He studied under T. E. Jones and Dr. Longhurst, both of Canterbury, and held the organistship of St. Dunstan's and St. Paul's Churches in that city. In 1875 he became organist of Margate Parish Church, and in 1881, on the death of Bedsmore, he began his beneficent reign at Lichfield Cathedral. Mr. Lott has worthily maintained a high standard in the discharge of his duties during these twenty-one years, and has devoted himself heart and soul to the stately fane he serves so well. As conductor of the great Diocesan Festivals he has shown great ability—administrative and musical—and the absence of friction with the varied elements which go to make up cathedral life speaks well for his tactful resourcefulness and good musicianship.

In conclusion it must not be forgotten that the diocese of Lichfield took the lead in forming a Diocesan Choral Association. The late Sir Frederick Ouseley was the first Precentor, and wrote some things specially for the Association. The first Festival of the kind held in a cathedral took place at Lichfield on October 14, 1856, when twenty-six choirs from Staffordshire parishes took part. Last year no less than 1,013 voices, accompanied by six brass instruments and drums, took part under the direction of Mr. Lott, with remarkable success. The good work inaugurated nearly half-a-century ago has borne fruit all over the country. To Lichfield, the seed-sower, is the honour due.

In the preparation of this by no means exhaustive article on Lichfield, its Cathedral, and the music thereof, full acknowledgment must be made of the kind help rendered by the subchanter, the Rev. Montague Hardey, Mr. John B. Lott, and Mr. John S. Bumpus.

MUSIC AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

It is always dangerous to generalise, and particularly so concerning the Royal Academy Exhibition, one's general impression of which depends largely upon external circumstances—as mundane and extra-artistic as the state of the digestion or the condition of the liver. My present object, however, has nothing to do with artistic merit, it is rather to take the more commonplace standpoint, and deal with pictures and statuary solely with regard to their subjects. From this aspect, then, the only generalisation I shall indulge in is that a certain compliment to the art of music may be deduced from the apparent satisfaction ladies feel in having their portraits painted in association with the family pianoforte. No doubt it supplies a motive to the picture, this introduction of the typical domestic instrument, and the familiar feelings of anticipating 'a little music,' and of relief when it is over, recur in contemplating these portraits. As it happens, two of them are among the good things of the Exhibition, Mr. Walter Osborne's graceful and refined portrait of Mrs. C. Litton Falkiner (214), and Mr. J. M. Swan's of Mrs. Alexander C. Ionides (102), in which, by-the-way, the painter has taken the unusual course of reproducing with such precision the music on the desk that it could be identified by the curious. As prizes for accomplishing useless feats are so much the rage, perhaps one may be offered for the elucidation of this problem. Miss Gwendolen Hughes (117), as portrayed by Mr. N. Denholm Davis, is a third instance that occurs of one of these pianoforte portraits. By way of a masculine complement to them, one gentleman, Mr. A. Payne Garnett (385), has elected to be painted by Mr. Leicester Burrows handling his favourite instrument, the violoncello, otherwise sitters of his sex do not seem to have identified themselves with music in any way.

One or two well-known musicians have been immortalized in paint or bronze. The second picture in the catalogue is a portrait by Mr. Solomon J. Solomon of Madame Blanche Marchesi, excellent not only as a picture, and as an admirable representation of the texture and sheen of flesh—if I may for a moment diverge into art criticism—but as a likeness that conveys very happily the gracious charm of the original. No less excellent a piece of portraiture, indeed, one of the best of its kind in the Academy, is Mr. Reginald Waud's portrait of a Yorkshire baritone, Mr. George Uttley (449), very quiet and reticent in style, yet full of life and vivacity. Certainly a larger measure of justice has been done to the sitter than to a brother baritone, Mr. David Bispham, by the somewhat invertebrate portrait in the New Gallery.

Among the sculpture in the Lecture Room and Central Hall a composer and two virtuosi are depicted. All musicians will be interested in Mr. W. Goscombe John's relief, designed for the memorial of Sir Arthur Sullivan to be placed in St. Paul's Cathedral. This is only the plaster model, the memorial itself will be of 'imperishable bronze.' The composer's head appears in a medallion, supported by two charmingly modelled cherubs, and above it is a figure of a primitive musician, accompanying his song on an antique lyre. Presumably this is Jubal, but did one not know it was intended for a Christian church, it might as well be Apollo, though possibly the Sun god's attire would be less homely than this garment of skins. The least vitalized part of the work is the composer's head, but it would be unfair to expect a great degree of intimacy or vitality in work which necessarily could not be done direct from life, but only through the medium of other portraits. Paderewski's wayward locks are naturally something of a stumbling block to the sculptor, and it cannot be said that the difficulty has been triumphantly surmounted in the otherwise finely-sculptured marble bust by the late Mr. Onslow Ford (1683). Another possible criticism is that the nervous intensity of the face is not quite adequately rendered. The other virtuoso is Kubelik, of whom the Countess Feodora Gleichen has executed a powerful bust (1613), or rather a half-length in bronze, including the arms and hands, which are occupied in holding the violin which he is playing. These are not the only sculpturesque versions of musical subjects. 'The Sands o' Dee' is illustrated by a statuette of the ill-fated Mary, 'The Lass of Dee' (1666), by Mr. C. L. Hartwell. Three other works represent songsters—Miss Edith Downing's 'Music sent up to God' (1674) is a bronze bust possessing considerable decorative effect, to which a long oblong music book contributes. Then there is Mr. R. Garbe's 'A Song to passing Summer' (1679), an ivory panel, but the best of all is a very vigorous bust, by Mr. Francis Jahn—a name of Mozartian significance—entitled 'The Chorister' (1707). There is genuine vitality in this fine work.

If another tentative generalisation may be allowed, it may be said that with the imaginative painters the shepherd's pipe seems the favourite instrument in the present Academy. In various forms it appears in four pictures. In Mr. George H. Boughton's picture 'A Tanagraean Pastoral' (160) it takes the classical form of the double-pipe, the melodic instruments of a small orchestra consisting of pipe, five-stringed lyre, and tambourine, which provides the music for four dancers. In Mr. C. E. Perugini's smoothly-finished picture 'The Green Lizard' (355) the flageolet is used to charm the brilliantly verdant little reptile, while the power of the instrument over the brute creation is shown in Mr. A. H. Buckland's 'Wood-Boy' (359), who discourses most persuasive music on a double-pipe, holding an audience of magpies and rabbits completely entranced by his strains. And once more does the double-pipe make its appearance in the Black and White Room, in Miss Laura M. Fisher's 'Idleness' (1309).

So far as I could see, the minstrel's harp appears but once, in a picture by Mr. Blair Leighton, 'The End of the Song' (401). It would seem to be a new version of the 'Minstrel's Curse,' only in this case it is the King who, coming round the corner, and finding the minstrel in amorous converse with his daughter, seems likely to be responsible for the objurgations. In 'Holy motherhood' (249), one of Mr. T. C. Gotch's elaborately studied and painted allegories, the infant is the centre of attraction, though perhaps a sour old bachelor might affect to doubt whether the ladies who perform on the violin and violoncello do so in its honour, or for the more prosaic purpose of drowning the howls which a slight acquaintance with babyhood convinces one are impending. In other pictures founded on musical subjects we come to more recent periods in history. Mr. Seymour Lucas, who has often shown an interest in the picturesque possibilities of old-world music, gives us another happy example of refined comedy in a small canvas entitled 'A lively measure' (54). A violin, flageolet, and violoncello (would not a bass viol have been more in keeping?) are being played con spirito by some roystering blades, while a black-jack on the seat by their side suggests one source of their high spirits. In a cabinet picture by the same artist, 'With a fal-la-la' (527), another jovial fellow is accompanying the burthen of his ballad on a lute of large dimensions, and in the Black and White Room there is a finely-executed wood engraving after his picture of last year's Academy, 'The Nimble Galliard' (1314), and a reproduction of a fourth, 'Old Airs' (1289), in which spinet and violoncello are the instruments employed, while a guitar is in readiness on the floor. A couple of 'Strolling Players' (307) in a picture by Mr. G. Sheridan Knowles carry a lute, and there is a lute as well as a pipe in Mr. V. J. Robertson's picture hard by, which illustrates the famous ballad of 'The Beggar's Daughter of Bednall Green' (330). Another, and a still more famous lyric, furnishes the subject for a painting by Mr. H. A. Olivier, 'Sumer is icumen in, Lhude sing cuccu' (168), but its musical associations do not extend beyond the title. Of twofold interest is Mr. W. A. Breakspeare's 'Stradella' (71), illustrating at once a traditional incident in the life of a great composer and an opera founded thereon. The legend in the catalogue runs thus:

> Stradella, having eloped with one of his pupils, two bravos were hired to assassinate him. Tracking him to Rome, his music so charmed them that they were moved to compassion and repented.

According to the earliest version of the story, it was by a performance of one of his oratorios in the church of St. John Lateran that the assassins' hearts were melted, and the painter has accepted this version, for the composer is seen in the organ loft, while standing by his side is the lady, and in the foreground are the bravos with all the bounce taken out of them. The story, though open to grave doubts, lingers by reason of its picturesqueness, and has afforded the painter a capital subject, which he has handled quite effectively. In Mr. I. Snowman's 'Children's Voices' (377) we are brought to more modern times. A lady, seated at what seems to be an old-fashioned pianoforte, is both accompaning and conducting a choir of four children. Her task is not an enviable one, for the juvenile singers are anything but intent upon their work; indeed, judging from the lamentable lack of concentration which they show, the performance will be far from perfection. But perhaps this is only a rehearsal, and they are acting on the principle so often adopted by their elders that 'it will be all right on the night.' Finally, we may end our survey with a present-day subject in 'Had I no eyes but ears, my ears would love' (247), by Mr. Percy W. Gibbs, in which a girl is singing by candle-light to the accompaniment of a grand pianoforte—an exceedingly clever picture, painted with considerable force.

H. T.

THE FOUNDLING HOSPITAL AND ITS MUSIC.

(Concluded from p. 311.)

Two matters arising out of the first instalment of this article must needs be treated of before the narrative can be resumed. It will be remembered that the builder of the organ presented by Handel to the Hospital was a 'Dr. Morse, of Barnet.' In that connection we asked the question: 'Who was Dr. Morse, of Barnet?' Mr. F. T. Cansick, in his interesting book of Epitaphs gathered from churches and churchyards in the neighbourhood of Barnet, supplies us with the following information, which he derived from a tombstone in Hadley churchyard, Hertfordshire:—

Here lieth the Body of Sarah, wife of Iusn. Morse of Chipin Barnet Surgeon who departed this life
the 18th of March 1751
aged 72.
Also the Body of
Mr. Iusn. Morse, who died
October ye 20th 1752 in the 62 Year of his Age.

With this as a clue, the London newspapers of the day furnish us with all that at present is discoverable concerning this gentleman. Here it is, from the London Daily Advertiser of October 25, 1752:—

One Day last Week as Mr. Morse, an eminent Surgeon and Apothecary at Barnet, was riding in his Chair, he was seized with an Apoplectic Fit near the Windmill, and being carried home expired in a short Time, to the very great Concern of many Families in that Neighbourhood, with whom he was in much Esteem.

The name of Morse is a new one in Handel literature, and it would be interesting to trace the reason why he was selected, apparently by Handel, to build the organ presented to the Hospital by the composer of the 'Messiah.'

Further research by Mr. Davan Wetton in the Hospital Minute Books shows that in 1766, sixteen years after its erection, the Morse organ needed thorough repair. In March, 1768, an agreement was entered into between the Hospital authorities and 'Thomas Parker, of Grays Inn Lane, organ builder,' to erect a new instrument at a cost of £430. Two months later (May 27, 1768) the Minutes record the following business:—

Resolved—That instead of an organ agreed to be built for the use of the Chapel of this Hospital for £430, exclusive of the organ now in the said Chapel, there shall be one made by Mr. Thomas Parker upon the new principle invented by the late Doctor Smith, containing 4 additional notes in each octave, at the price of £670, exclusive of the case.*

* The Doctor Smith referred to in this Minute was Dr. Robert Smith (1689-1768), Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, and the founder of Smith's prizes annually competed for in the University. Dr. Smith was the author of 'Harmonies, or the Philosophy of Musical Sounds,' Cambridge, 1749: second edition (augmented), London, 1759-62.

A Minute of November 15, 1769, reads thus:—

Resolved—That on the New Organ in the Chapel of this Hospital, the following inscription be made:—

Erected by subscription in 1769.
Thomas Parker, builder.

The above first-hand information not only clears up some doubtful points, but proves that the Parker organ—with its extra notes, non-preponderance of mixture work, and so on—was not Handel's gift! It also destroys the story that Parker was chosen through Handel's having heard an organ by that builder in Poynton Church, Cheshire, as the Parker instrument in the Foundling Hospital Chapel was not erected until after the bones of the great composer had been resting for ten years in Westminster Abbey! Many statements made by numerous writers on Handel, organ, and pitch matters will have to be corrected in the light of this information from the Foundling records, now made public for the first time.

MR. ROBERT GREY,

John Christopher Smith, born Schmidt (1712-1795), Handel's amanuensis and factotum,—of whom we give a portrait—was the first organist of the Foundling Hospital. He was appointed to that office, probably on the recommendation of Handel, one of the Governors, at a salary of £40 per annum, on October 2, 1754, at which time the chapel began to be regularly used for Divine service. (This disposes of the date 1750, given in all the biographies of Smith as the year in which he became organist of the Foundling.) Reference has already been made to the benevolent work of Handel, which Smith reverently carried on at the Hospital after his master's death. Handel bequeathed all his manuscript scores to his faithful henchman, Smith, and the latter, in acknowledgment of the pension continued to him by the King, presented George III. with those precious autograph tomes, which are now preserved in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace.

The immediate successors of John Christopher Smith in the organistship were respectively Stephen Philpot, Thomas Grenville, and John Immyns. The last-named, an amateur, was in 1798 appointed upon the recommendation of Joah Bates. One of the unsuccessful candidates on that occasion was Samuel Wesley, who gave vent to his disappointed feelings by composing an amusing song (published anonymously), entitled 'The Organ laid open, or the True Stop discovered.' We give a specimen of this humorous ditty, the words of which are stated by Vincent Novello to have been written by Madan:—

Come all my brave Boys that want Organists' Places
I'll tell you the fun of the thing,
Curse all your Bravuras, your fine 'Poggiaturas
All the Demis and Semis you'll bring.

You may strike up no matter 'Malbrook,' 'Stoney Batter,'
Or whatever comes into your Pates,
For let Handel or Worgan go thresh at the Organ,
If you've got the right key with Jo B——.

The Foundling's grand Organ was lately the gift
And all were determin'd to try,
Each made his best shift with a Finger so swift
And 'cock sure of Election am I.'

But to give 'em their trimmings, up popp'd Maister Immyns
And quickly decided their Fates,
I can't, it is true, move my Fingers like you,
But I've found out the stop of Jo B——.

When Nebuchadnezzar his image set up,
His frolic appeared rather odd,
That at Music so paltry as Sackbut and Psalt'ry
Each Knee should bow down to his god.

This prophetic affair one would almost declare
To our Day of election relates,
For the sounds that combine have but serv'd for a sign
To fall down and worship Jo B——.

Then know by these presents all Men it concerns,
What succession of farces is playing by turns,
In vain ev'ry sound that your fancy creates,
For the true Diapason is Mister Jo B——.

Mr. Immyns had a short innings—only three years. He was succeeded by that gifted musician, William Russell, who held the post till his death, at the age of thirty-six, in 1813. Russell composed an oratorio on the subject of 'Job,' and another for the Cæcilian Society, of which he was the conductor, entitled 'The Redemption of Israel'; the autograph of the latter is in the library of Mr. Robert A. Marr, of Edinburgh. Russell, who was a pupil of William Shrubsole, of 'Miles's Lane' fame, wrote much for Sadler's Wells Theatre, where he was engaged as pianist and composer. He edited, in 1809, 'Psalms, Hymns, and Anthems for the Foundling Chapel.' His exercise for the degree of Bachelor of Music (Oxford, in 1808) was a Latin Kyrie, Gloria in excelsis, &c. There are six volumes of Russell's music (in manuscript) preserved in the library of the Royal College of Music. Five of these, which includes a Mass for four voices, with figured bass, in C, were picked up at an old bookstall by Mr. W. Barclay Squire and presented by him to the College library.

William Russell composed two sets of 'Twelve Voluntaries for the organ or pianoforte,' of which the first set, though undated, appeared in 1804. The second set, published in 1812, is interesting in that two pieces (Nos. 2 and 11) contain a third line for the pedal part, this being the earliest known instance of its use in the works of an English composer. As Sir Walter Parratt has said in a reference to old voluntary composers: 'Many of their compositions have a tranquil grace which is not unpleasing, but they are too small in plan and too artless in execution to make themselves heard against nineteenth century bustle. Those by Russell ought not so to die. They are almost in suite-form, and generally contain a melodious fugue with clever modulation and climax.' These voluntaries furnish an interesting example of the organ tone of a hundred years ago, as compared with that of to-day: one of the Voluntaries is registered to be played 'Oboe solo (swell), accompanied by the great organ open diapason.' The name of Russell is known in all the churches by his melodious double chant in E. Unfortunately, no portrait of him seems to be in existence, or we would gladly have furnished our readers with a reproduction. Vincent Novello, who knew him well, has left the following appreciation of the gifted musician:—

Like the generality of really clever persons, William Russell derived more advantage from his own observation and study, than from the rules and dogmas laid down by his teachers. I was so fortunate as to enjoy an intimate friendship with him for many years, and invariably found him a frank, sincere and honourable man in his private capacity, and a most accomplished artist in his professional one. Though not equal to the great Samuel Wesley as an extempore fugist, yet as an accompanist, Russell was superior to him, and as a general organist, he was, in my estimation, one of the very finest players that ever lived. He also possessed extraordinary facility in scoring for an orchestra, and had he lived, he probably would have become a composer of first-rate ability, but he unfortunately died, after severe suffering from illness, in the year 1813, at the early age of thirty-six. A very small portion of his numerous productions have ever been published.

At Russell's death, J. C. Nightingale, known by his organ arrangements of Handel's choruses, became organist of the Foundling. It was probably during the Nightingale régime that 'Old Sam' Wesley gave an organ performance in the chapel, with the co-operation of Vincent Novello. The following characteristic letter to Novello refers to the event:—

London, Oct. 5, 1814.

Dear N.—You will probably be surprised at my besetting you at a moment when you are in the thick of old Handel's best Psalm-Tunes, quavered by the best Psalm-Singers in England (excepting those in Italy, my Honey). On Thursday (or more intelligibly to-morrow) I mean to throw my carcase into the Norwich mail, and I wished also to have taken with me your very clear copy of mine Organ Duet in C, and also that of S. Bach, which we played at the Foundling . . . . . Yours,

S. WESLEY.

Nightingale uttered his swan song in 1833, and to him succeeded Edward Sturges (born 1808, died 1848), an old St. Paul's boy and assistant organist to George Cooper, the elder, at St. Sepulchre's Church, Holborn. His only published composition is an anthem for Christmas, 'I know their sorrows'; but his son, Mr. Edward J. Sturges, organist of Lindfield Parish Church, Sussex, possesses the manuscripts of several anthems and services composed by his father. In 1839 Mr. Sturges organized a performance on festival scale of Handel's 'Messiah,' in the chapel, to commemorate the centenary of the founding of the Institution. Sir George Smart conducted and Mr. Sturges was at the organ; and among 'several of the young ladies, pupils at the Royal Academy of Music,' who formed the semi-chorus, we find the name of Miss Hopkins, the mother of Mr. Edward Lloyd; and 'Master Chipp, of the Chapel Royal,' helped to swell the full chorus.

The remaining trio of Foundling organists are all happily in the flesh. In 1848, Mr. Christopher Edwin Willing followed Mr. Sturges, and he worthily held the post for the long period of thirty-two years. His popular tune to the late Mrs. Alexander's hymn 'We are but little children weak,' doubtless owed its origin to the Foundling children and their sweet young voices. Upon the resignation, in 1879, of Mr. Willing, Mr. Myles Birket Foster was appointed to the chief musicianship, of which he ably discharged the duties for twelve years. Suffice it to say that the name of genial Myles Foster as a composer and examiner is known the wide world over.

The present organist, Mr. Henry Davan Wetton, entered upon his duties in November, 1892. A native of Brighton, where he was born on July 18, 1862, he became a chorister of St. Mary's Church, Stoke Newington, and held the organistships of All Saints' Church, Stoke Newington, Christ Church, Woburn Square, and St. Gabriel's Church, Pimlico. For a year he was acting organist of Wells Cathedral. After having been an articled pupil of Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. Wetton acted as an assistant to the organist of Westminster Abbey for fifteen years. He has always taken a deep interest in the history of the Foundling Hospital, especially its music, and in 1896 he discovered the band parts of the 'Messiah' bequeathed by Handel to the Institution; these parts, which are of great importance, had theretofore remained unknown.

It was a happy thought of the present organist to revive the special musical services for which the Foundling Hospital was formerly famous, and the last of which seems to have been the 'Messiah' performance in 1839, under Sturges, already referred to. The selection of Gounod's 'Redemption'—excellently sung, on April 15—was probably due to the experimental nature of the revival, and in future we may look for some Handelian presentations for which the chapel has such unique traditions. Notwithstanding the limited orchestral conditions, the performance bore testimony to the enthusiasm of Mr. Wetton, who conducted, and to those who so earnestly co-operated with him on that occasion. The solo singers were Miss Elsie Mackenzie, Miss Nora Meredith, Miss Gertrude Calvert, Mr. Reginald Brophy, Mr. Arthur Barlow, and Mr. Ben Grove, of whom the first and two last-named are members of the Chapel Choir.

Acknowledgment must again be made of the kindness of Mr. Robert Grey, Treasurer; of Mr. W. S. Wintle, Secretary; and last, but not least, of Mr. Davan Wetton, organist of the Foundling Hospital, in affording us special facilities for the preparation of this article.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH:

PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

By Professor Prout.

Having thus given the reasons which seem to justify the appearance of a new edition, it is now necessary to explain the general principles which have guided me in preparing it, and the plan upon which I have worked. The first and most important rule that I have laid down for myself is, that the most absolute respect must be shown to Handel's text, and to his intentions, whether written or implied, so far as these can be gathered from the indications in his score. In a few cases, where discrepancies were to be found between the original manuscript and Smith's copies, I have been forced to rely upon my own judgment as to the reading to be adopted; these will be spoken of later in this Preface. Mostly, however, no doubt was possible; and wherever the autograph is supported by the contemporary transcripts, I have without the least hesitation taken that reading of the text as final.

An example will best explain what is meant in speaking of Handel's 'implied' intentions. It is well known to students of the composer that he very rarely uses the second inversion of the chord of the dominant seventh ($\frac{4}{3}$); it is doubtful whether it can be found more than three or four times in the whole of his works. He almost invariably omits the root, and writes instead a chord of the sixth on the supertonic. In several passages in the 'Messiah,' Mozart has added the root to Handel's chord, where the composer had carefully omitted it—e.g., in the passage, 'The kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ,' in the 'Hallelujah.' In this, and all similar cases, I have felt that my duty toward Handel required me to restore the chord to the form in which he left it. Wherever Handel and Mozart come into collision, the latter must give way. Jahn tells us that 'he (Mozart) knew little of Handel in later years, until Van Swieten made him acquainted with his works'; * and this may probably explain the un-Handelian nature of some of his additions, not only to the 'Messiah,' but to the other scores that he arranged.

The same consideration has influenced me in deciding as to the acceptance or rejection of the numerous contrapuntal additions that Mozart has made to Handel's score. There is traditional evidence that in many cases the composer himself filled up the harmony on the harpsichord with passages of imitation; where Mozart has worked on the same lines, as in his beautiful additions to 'O thou that tellest,' the fewest possible changes have been made, because the new counterpoints are strictly pertinent to Handel's subject-matter. In other cases, in which they appeared irrelevant, they have been cancelled. Thus, in the air 'Thou shalt break them,' Mozart's long holding notes for the wind are so opposed in spirit to Handel's bold staccato, with its dramatic representation of the words 'break' and 'dash,' that I have felt no scruple in removing them. I have, however, retained many of the passages of imitation which Mozart has introduced in the latter part of the air, these being quite in keeping with Handel's idea.

The most conspicuous instance of Mozart's addition of new matter is to be seen in the air 'The people that walked in darkness.' Here the chromatic harmonies which Mozart has introduced above Handel's unison passages, opposed as they certainly are to the composer's spirit, are so beautiful in themselves that I have not felt justified in omitting them. But inasmuch as the air is also very effective in the form in which Handel wrote it, Mozart's harmonies are printed, both in the score and the parts, in small notes; it is thus left to the option of the conductor to perform the movement in whichever shape he prefers.

Before leaving the question of the text, it should be said that all the printed editions contain a countless number of shakes for which there seems to be no sufficient authority. Whenever these are not to be found either in the autograph or in Smith's copies, they have been omitted in the present edition.

While Handel's text has been scrupulously respected, no attempt has been made to preserve his orchestral colouring. It has been already said that under ordinary conditions this is quite impossible, and as this edition is meant to be practical, it would have been useless to make an arrangement which our musical societies would not think of attempting to perform. But in two of the choruses ('He trusted in God,' and 'Let us break their bonds') Handel's own wind-parts have been retained, and the voice-parts doubled by the organ, as we know was the composer's custom in fugal movements. In these numbers, therefore, some approximation to Handel's tone-colouring has been secured. In most of the movements, Mozart's instrumentation has been retained, the modern orchestra being written for. The few variations from Mozart's scoring will be noted later.

In the scoring of the airs, Handel obtains contrast of colour by alternating the strings and the harpsichord in the accompaniments. In this edition the harmonies intended for the harpsichord have in most cases been given to the softer wind instruments—generally clarinets and bassoons, sometimes also flutes or horns. As a rule, where Handel has not employed strings they will not be found in this score. The few exceptions are to be seen either in such passages as 'Behold and see' (bar 3), where so little is left to be filled up that it would be needless to introduce the wind merely for a few notes, or in places where Mozart has written figures for the strings—as in 'Rejoice greatly,' bars 20 to 22—which it seemed advisable to retain.

* Jahn: 'Mozart,' vol. i., p. 41 (English translation).

The employment of only a few desks of the strings, in contrast to the whole force, was a frequent device of Handel's; he indicates it by the words senza Ripieni and con Ripieni. The so-called 'Dublin score,' to be spoken of when I come to deal with the text of the work, contains full indications, in the composer's writing, of the passages which were to be played by the whole or part of the strings respectively. In a few of the songs Handel has forgotten to insert the usual marks—in these, I have added them in brackets. The senza Rip. are mostly found in the songs, but sometimes in the choruses also, e.g., in 'For unto us,' the greater part of which is accompanied by the strings senza Ripieni, as will be seen from the score. Owing to the much larger size of the choirs of the present day, I would recommend that all the strings play throughout the choruses, but that Handel's directions be attended to in the solo numbers. As the first leaves of the Dublin score are lost, we are left in doubt concerning the treatment of the strings in the overture—a movement in which, as we know from other scores in the German Handel Society's edition, the composer's practice was not uniform; it will therefore be best that this be played con Ripieni throughout.

The dynamic indications in Mozart's score have needed careful revision, especially in the airs. In nearly all of these, whenever a short interlude for the orchestra occurs, it is marked forte; and this perpetual alternation of p and f soon becomes as wearisome as it is meaningless. In several places, too, a forte is marked where Handel has expressly indicated piano. Mozart's manuscript being lost, it is impossible to say with certainty whether he or Hiller is responsible for this; in any case, Handel's own marks of expression have been restored wherever he has given them.

The introduction of the trombones into the score is a point on which a few words must be said. Though complete trombone parts by Handel are only to be found in two of his oratorios—'Saul' and 'Israel in Egypt'—there are weighty reasons for believing that he employed them in other works also; a full discussion of this subject would be beyond the scope of this preface. Curiously enough, in Mozart's score trombones are only to be seen in the introduction of the overture, and in the two short movements 'Since by man came death' and 'For as in Adam all die.' But an examination of the scores of Mozart's own church music, especially of some of his later masses and of the great Litany in E flat, proves that it was not the custom of the composer to write independent parts for the trombones when they merely doubled the voice parts, and were not obbligati; in other cases he directs them to play with the alto, tenor and bass of the chorus. I have as little doubt in my own mind, therefore, that Mozart intended them to be so used in the 'Messiah' as I have that Handel himself employed trombones in 'Samson,' though in his score they are seen only in the 'Dead March.' As these instruments are found in all large orchestras, I have had no hesitation in introducing them in those numbers where Handel has written parts for the trumpets; the trombones, however, are nowhere obbligati, and can be omitted if preferred. It has become traditional in this country to add these instruments in the chorus 'Lift up your heads'; in deference to this tradition, I have written trombone parts for this movement, though personally I am not in favour of their introduction here. As the music is quite complete without them, their parts are printed in small notes, and it is left to conductors to decide whether they shall be played or not.

The treatment of the organ is another matter of importance. We know, from the score of 'Saul,' what was Handel's own practice. In the songs he seldom used it at all, except sometimes (Tasto solo) to strengthen the bass of his orchestra; in the choruses it mostly played with the voices, sometimes filling up the harmony with full chords, at others (in fugal passages) doubling the voices in strict four-part harmony. The organs in the concert-halls of the present day are generally so large that, unless used with great discretion, they are likely to overpower both chorus and orchestra. While, therefore, I have in many places followed Handel's method, I have in others preferred to treat the instrument in the way so admirably shown by Mendelssohn in his masterly organ parts to 'St. Paul' and the 'Hymn of Praise'—that is, to reserve it for the climaxes, where it can often be introduced with great effect. In some of the choruses, where Handel has accompanied his voices with the organ and basses only—e.g., at the commencement of 'And he shall purify' and 'His yoke is easy,' I have retained the original scoring; but, in order that the present edition may be available when the oratorio is given in concert halls where there is no organ, I have, wherever the organ is obbligato, added small notes in the wind parts. These are to be used only in the absence of the organ. In 'For unto us,' a great part of which Handel scored in this way, I have preferred to fill up the accompaniments on the wind, and to reserve the organ for the great bursts at 'Wonderful! Counsellor!' and for the latter part of the chorus. An examination of the score will show that I have introduced the organ exactly where Handel marks 'con Ripieni' for the strings.

As the organ part has been very carefully thought out, I would beg conductors who may use this edition to insist upon its being played exactly as written. More especially would I ask them on no account to allow the organist to indulge in the far too common but most inartistic practice of playing the pedal part an octave lower than indicated. By thus transposing, the melodic contour of the basses is often utterly spoilt. The lowest notes of the pedal organ should be reserved for special effects; and few things are more exasperating to a true musician than the continual booming of the organ in the sixteen-foot octave.

In the accompaniment of the recitativo secco, Handel used the harpsichord, supported by one violoncello and one double-bass. In the present edition a pianoforte is substituted for the harpsichord. When Handel had no harpsichord, he accompanied his recitatives, not on the organ, as is generally supposed, but with strings; this is clearly proved by an examination of the scores of the Chandos anthems. For the sake of performances in which there is no room on the platform for a pianoforte, an accompaniment in small notes is given in the string parts. This should be played, as indicated, by one desk only for each part; but the single violoncello and double-bass should play, whether there be a pianoforte or not.

It has been suggested from more than one quarter that in this edition it should be indicated when the chords in the recitatives should be played together with, and when after the notes of the voice part against which they are written. I have not adopted this suggestion for two reasons: First, because I was unwilling to alter Handel's text excepting in cases where it was absolutely necessary to do so in order to show his real intention (as in the introduction of the overture, and in the opening of 'Surely He hath borne our griefs'); and secondly, because there is no uniformity of practice in this matter even among the best conductors and accompanists. But, for the guidance of inexperienced conductors, I would suggest that the chord be played with the voice when the latter has a note of the harmony, but after it when it has not. An example will make this clear. In 'Comfort ye my people,' we find at the end a free recitative beginning—while the chord of D is sounded with the voice, the chord of E in the last bar comes after it, because A is no part of that chord. In all cases, however, the two final chords in a recitative should come after the last note of the voice, even if that note be a part of the following chord, excepting only where there is an unbroken figure of accompaniment in the orchestra, as in the recitative 'And suddenly' (No. 16).

Here the D in the voice belongs to the harmony; the chord should therefore be sounded with it. But in the final cadence—

In his setting of English words, Handel frequently adopts the Italian method. In Italian, if a word end with a vowel and the next word begin with one, both will be sung to the same note, as in the following passage from the well-known air 'Lascia ch'io pianga' in 'Rinaldo'—

Here the two syllables—'lo in'—are sung on the note E. Similar treatment of English words is common with Handel: there are three examples in the 'Messiah.' The first occurs in the chorus 'And the glory of the Lord,' which the composer sets thus:—

Most modern editions spoil the passage, either by putting two quavers on the first beat of the bar,— or by so dividing the words that 'of the' is to be sung on the third crotchet; both readings are equally bad. Handel has only treated two adjacent vowels in different words as we continually treat them in the same word, as, for example, in the air in 'Samson'—

It is just as easy to sing 'glo-ryof' or 'glo-ryand' in two syllables as 'glo-rious'; I have therefore had no hesitation in restoring Handel's reading, to the great benefit of the musical effect. The other analogous passages will be found in the 'Hallelujah' (Alto, bar 24; Soprano, bar 30; Bass, bars 31, 32), and in 'Worthy is the Lamb,' where, in the fugue—

'glo-ryand' are sung to two quavers, and not (as generally printed) to a quaver and two semiquavers, throughout the movement. In all these passages conductors should take care that Handel's text is respected.

Owing to the length of the oratorio it is the invariable custom to omit some of the numbers in the second and third parts. For the sake of completeness these are given in the present edition in an Appendix; but, as they are not likely to be performed, I have not thought it necessary either to write an organ part for the choruses, or to complete the instrumentation of the songs. The duet, 'O Death, where is thy sting?' and the chorus, 'But thanks be to God,' are given as they appear in Mozart's score; the chorus, 'Let all the angels of God,' and the songs 'Thou art gone up on high' and 'If God be for us,' have no additional accompaniments; in these, and in these only, the figured basses are retained, as being of historical interest. To print them in their proper places as fully-scored movements would have been unnecessary, and would have only distracted the attention and enlarged the size of the volume.

Occasional Notes.

Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Musick, will form the subject of the Biographical Sketch in our next issue. An account of the Coronation in Westminster Abbey, written by an eye-witness of that great event, will also appear. The issue will further include an article on the Royal Music Library in Buckingham Palace, illustrated, by special permission of His Majesty the King, with photographs of the organ on which Mendelssohn played to Queen Victoria, and Handel's harpsichord. As the Coronation takes place on the 26th inst., the publication of The Musical Times for next month will be delayed till July 4.

The music at the Coronation Service to be held at St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday, the 29th inst., will include Tallis's five-part setting of the Litany, which is to be sung in procession, thus reviving a custom of the mediæval English Church. Handel's 'Zadok the Priest,' Sir George Martin's Te Deum and Communion Service in A, to be accompanied, like the rest of the service, with a full orchestra, are some features of what will be an imposing pæan of praise. The short service to be held on July 3, when their Majesties the King and Queen are to visit the City, will consist mainly of the Te Deum with a few Collects and the National Anthem. It is expected that the band of the Royal Artillery will be present and play a selection of music for an hour before the service, in addition to accompanying the service itself. Sir George Martin will, of course, be the chief musician on both these eventful occasions.

The Te Deum in F by Henry Smart, originally selected, and approved by the King, to be sung at the Coronation Service in Westminster Abbey on the 26th inst., has by command of His Majesty been superseded by the setting in B flat composed by Professor Villiers Stanford.

The Lancaster Choral Society, established in 1836, appears to be in a flourishing condition under the able conductorship of Mr. J. W. Aldous, who has held the post since 1894. The membership numbers 170, of whom 35 are orchestral and 135 vocal performers, but on special occasions the band is increased to 50 players. Among the works performed in recent years are Elgar's 'King Olaf' and 'The Banner of St. George,' Parry's 'Judith,' Mackenzie's 'The Bride,' Stanford's 'Revenge' and 'Last Post,' Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha music, in addition to many works of the standard order, and orchestral works of the calibre of Beethoven's Fifth and Schubert's Unfinished Symphonies. A special feature of the rehearsals is that the orchestra and choir practise separately and together. Mr. Aldous keeps his choir a week in advance of his band, so that no time is lost in setting the chorus right while the band are present. Moreover, he explains the works under preparation—pointing out this, that and the other feature of interest, such as imitative passages and so on, to both instrumentalists and players. By this highly educational means he gets a distinctly artistic result at the performances, and the interest of every member is musically aroused thereby. May increasing success attend these well-directed efforts.

Mr. Herbert Spencer, notwithstanding the fact that he is an octogenarian, has, during the last two years, been writing a number of short essays which he has incorporated into a volume—one which he says is to be his last. Any utterance of so great a thinker is entitled to respect, and therefore we turn with interest to the musical chapters in his 'Facts and Comments,' as the book (just published by Messrs. Williams and Norgate) is entitled. In 'The Corruption of Music,' Mr. Spencer spares not the lash in his 'comment' on performers. He says:—

> Music-performers and teachers of music are corrupters of music. This is a paradox most people will think extremely absurd. I am about to justify it.

After referring to the 'vocal agility' of the prima donna of the past, Mr. Spencer treats of present-day audiences and performers in these words:—

> Three-fourths of musical audiences . . . . . appreciate but little the musical ideas and feelings of the composer, or the effective rendering of them; but an extraordinary feat of vocalization, or a display of marvellous gymnastics on the violin, brings a round of applause.

Following the statement that 'unhappily the members of the orchestra applaud because they know how great are the difficulties overcome, 'the music-loving philosopher continues:—

> In this way performers, desiring less to render faithfully the meanings of the pieces they play than to exhibit their powers of execution, vitiate the music and the tastes of their hearers. Direct evidence has come to me from two lady-pianists, both of whom played at concerts pieces which they chose not because they were beautiful but because they were of kinds making it possible to show brilliancy of performance: a toccata was the programme-name of one. The elder of these ladies, who was a teacher of music, admitted that she hoped to show parents what a good teacher she must be to be able to play in that style!

As is implied by these confessions, the mischief originates in the performer's pre-occupation with self, for this largely excludes occupation with the composer's thoughts. The dominant feeling is not love of the music rendered, but desire for the applause which brilliant rendering will bring. In cases of celebrated performers to whom crowds of hearers flock, this is almost a necessity. Many years ago, when coming away from a concert given by a celebrated Russian pianist, I remarked—'Too little music and too much Rubinstein.'

'Not so fast, not so fast!' are the terms in which Mr. Spencer habitually checks the ladies who play to him—'the rate chosen being usually such as to destroy the sentiment'—and, by way of a parting shot, he says—with no small amount of truth:—

In brief, this vitiation is one of the indirect results of the aim on the part of professionals not to render most perfectly the ideas of the composer, but so to play as to increase their own earnings.

The remaining 'Facts and Comments' on music are 'The origin of music' (replies to some critics on his essay which appeared forty years ago); 'Developed Music'; 'Meyerbeer'; and 'Some musical heresies' help to make up a book which will assuredly interest many readers.

The visit of the Joachim Quartet has been one of the chief events of the London musical season. At the seven concerts given at St. James's Hall during April and May this celebrated combination maintained its high level of artistic aims by an ensemble above reproach. The spirit of music breathed through all their performances, and the spell-bound attitude of the audience bore testimony to the reverent interpretations of noble works by artists imbued with the one thing needful. The four players—Dr. Joachim, Professors Karl Halir, Emmanuel Wirth, and Robert Hausmann—had the valued co-operation of Mr. Alfred Gibson as an extra viola player in the quintet by Brahms in F (Op. 88), on the 8th ult. On that occasion all the five instruments were by Stradivarius. Moreover, they were not only fine specimens of that great master, but they belonged to his ripest period. The dates of that valuable quintet of instruments are as follows: Joachim's and Halir's, 1715; Wirth's (viola), 1721; Hausmann's (violoncello), 1724; and Gibson's (viola), 1728. We understand that Dr. Joachim possesses three Strads of the first rank belonging to 1715! Quartet players may be glad to have before them a list of the music played by the Joachim party during their recent visit to the Metropolis:—

QUARTETS.

Beethoven, in F (Op. 18); in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2); in E flat (Op. 74 and 127); in B flat (Op. 130); in C sharp minor (Op. 131); in A minor (Op 132); and in F (Op. 135).
Mozart, in A (Köchel, No. 464); in C (465); and in D (499).
Haydn, in E flat, and in F (Op. 77, No. 2).
Schumann, in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1).

QUINTETS.

Brahms, in F (Op. 88).
Schubert, in C (Op. 163).

All who face the camera of the photographer run the risk, or otherwise, of being 'touched up,' negatively speaking, yet affirmatively expressed. 'It flatters her awfully,' or 'That makes him look ten years younger than he is,' are not infrequent comments when photographs are being handed round—in the absence of the subjects thereof, let us add. The touching-up process as applied to portraits is not attended with any serious consequences, rather the contrary, perhaps. But what shall be said of its application to—for instance—an autograph manuscript of Handel's. 'Hands off,' is the indignant cry of anyone who loves the truth and nothing but the truth, in regard to such perverseness.

The above forewords are preparatory to our calling attention to a somewhat serious case illustrating this point. In the course of Professor Prout's 'Messiah' investigations a curious thing has been discovered. The facsimile reproduction, issued by the German Handel Society, of the 'Messiah' autograph at Buckingham Palace contains in addition those pages in the Tenbury transcript (known as the Dublin score) that are in Handel's own handwriting. According to his custom, Handel has inserted the names of the singers above the music. In the solo 'Thou art gone up on high,' we find, in the facsimile, and presumably in Handel's writing, the mysterious word 'Mission.' A glance at the original shows at once that Handel's pencilled and indistinct 'Miss Young' has been so touched up by the photographer that it appears as 'Mission,' a word probably unknown to Handel. Through the kindness of the Warden of Tenbury College (the Rev. John Hampton, M.A.) we are enabled to reproduce as one of our Special Supplements a photograph, specially taken, of that particular page in Handel's own 'rough pot-hooks and hangers,' together with the heading as touched up in the German Handel Society's facsimile reprint of the composer's autograph. By these means our readers will be enabled to make their own comparisons. But we may call special attention to the touching-up process in the German Handel Society's photograph, whereby the indications 'Allegro' and 'Larghetto' are both made to appear, instead of the former being erased (in pencil) by Handel as shown in our photograph.

The choral and orchestral balance of the recent Lower Rhenish Musical Festival can be shown by the following figures from the well-compiled programme-book of the Festival, the 79th of the series:—

ORCHESTRA.

Violins	42	Horns	8
Violas	16	Trumpets	6
Violoncellos	12	Trombones	4
Double Basses	10	Tuba	1
Flutes	6	Drum	1
Oboes	6	Percussion	3
Clarinets	4	Harps	3
Bassoons	4

Total = 126.

CHORUS.

Sopranos	169	Tenors	56
Altos	169	Basses	96

Band and Chorus together = 616 performers.

The disproportion, from the English point of view, between the female and male sections of the German chorus is extraordinary; moreover, the tenors numbered only a third of either soprano or alto singers, and, we understand, of those fifty-six tenors, not more than forty put in an appearance! A report of the Festival by our special correspondent appears in another column (p. 402).

The Madrigal Society, now in its 162nd season, held its anniversary festival under brilliant and hospitable auspices, at the Holborn Restaurant, on the 15th ult. The President, Lord Alverstone (The Lord Chief Justice), occupied the chair, and those present included Dr. Joachim, Professor Hausmann (of the Joachim Quartet), Canon Pemberton, of Hovingham, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir George Martin, Sir Frederick Bridge, Professor Stanford, Mr. Harvey, President of the Bristol Madrigal Society, Mr. D. W. Rootham, conductor of that Society, Mr. Hichens, President of the Western Madrigal Society, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Mr. Barclay Squire, and ladies not a few. Dr. Joachim had a most enthusiastic reception when he rose to respond to the toast of 'The Visitors.' Speaking in English he acknowledged the 'heart-rejoicing hospitality' of the Society, and paid a high tribute to English music as exemplified in the beautiful madrigals he had listened to during the evening. The following madrigals were performed by the members under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, the soprano parts being sung—and admirably sung—by the Children of the Chapel Royal and the choristers of St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square:—

All creatures now (5 voices) .. .. John Benet, 1599.
Sister awake (5 voices) .. .. Thos. Bateson, 1600.
Love and beauty (5 voices) .. A. Sullivan, 1863.
Come lovers, follow me (4 voices, no basses) .. .. Thos. Morley, 1594.
Roses, ah, how fair ye be (6 voices) Haydn Keeton, 1900. (Prize Madrigal, 1900.)
Motet, Tristis est anima (5 voices) Orlando di Lasso, 1561.
The shepherds' pipes (5 voices) .. Marenzio, 1570.
Light of my soul (6 voices) R. L. de Pearsall, 1840.
See, the shepherds' Queen (5 voices) Thos. Tomkins, 1622.
Cupid detected (4 voices) .. .. Henry Lawes, 1653. (Arr. by J. F. Bridge.)
The Waitts, Fa, La, La (4 voices) J. Saville, 1660.

The above selection—a happy blending of ancient and modern vocal music—was listened to with keen enjoyment, one of the most applauded madrigals being Sullivan's charming setting of 'Love and beauty,' written when he was twenty-three years of age. The old Society is more vigorous than ever. With Street as its unwearying secretary, thoroughfare at its capital dinners, and Bridge as its genial conductor, it is surely on the success road. May it continue to pursue the even tenor of its ways, with a modicum of soprano, alto and bass thrown in, and last at least 162 years more, until the year 2064.

We all know the enterprise of the Scot. Mr. Punch has said: 'Wonderful mon is Macgillivray. He keeps the sabbath and everything else he can lay his hands upon.' If the Scot is that way inclined, no wonder that The Scotsman is tarred with the same brush. The May Day issue of that important journal contained (in the letter from its London correspondent) the information that 'Mr. Arthur M'Kisch, the conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic, occupied the desk for the third concert of the London Festival'; that 'Mr. M'Kisch conducted everything from memory'; and that 'at the close of the concert, Mr. M'Kisch was greeted with an almost unprecedented amount of enthusiastic applause.' Prodigious! Porridgeious! we are tempted to exclaim at this Scotchening of the name of Arthur Nikisch. The same notice refers to 'a young pianist of wonderful technical ability' named 'Mr. Markham Bourg'! The London correspondent of the great Edinburgh journal, the telegraphic clerk, and the sub-editor must try, try again; the result might be a gain to accuracy in the exercise of a spell.

As a sequel to our biographical sketch of Henry Smart which appeared in our May issue, we have pleasure in presenting our readers with a special portrait of that distinguished musician drawn from life by Mr. T. J. Grylls, by whose kind permission we are enabled to reproduce it in these columns. Mr. Grylls informs us that he made the sketch, unknown to Smart, during a rehearsal of the oratorio of 'Jacob,' in the chorus of which the artist, for the time being, made use of his pencil instead of his voice. The portrait represents Smart at a late period of his life. We may take this opportunity of stating that the special portrait which accompanied the biography above referred to was taken from Mr. Myles Foster's 'Anthems and Anthem composers,' by the kind permission of the author.

Professor Stanford is to be congratulated on the undoubted success which attended the performances of his melodious opera 'Much Ado about Nothing,' at Leipzig, during the month of April. It seems to be quite evident that the Leipzigers rose above the Anglophobia of the newspapers of their city by paying a well-deserved tribute of appreciation to an English work of undoubted merit. The usual compliment to a successful composer in the Leipzig theatre is for him to be called three or four times; but in the case of Professor Stanford they compelled him to appear no less than sixteen times! Moreover, the management asked the composer to send them his next available opera. We give an extract from the Berlin Börsen Courier as a sample of German criticism on the English work.

The great and genuine success of the work will induce German theatres to add it to their repertoires; the more so as it gives us music which is indeed individual in invention and style. Dr. Stanford has set a libretto which follows Shakespeare comedy closely, and he has created a work replete with charm, extremely melodious, and finely orchestrated. During the prevalent dearth of good operas it deserves, and, after its Leipzig success, will receive, special consideration. Oberregisseur (stage-manager) Albert Goldberg had staged the work splendidly, and the gratitude which composer and public showed him was richly deserved. The orchestra played superbly under Kapellmeister Porst, and amongst the performers Frl. Weidt, as Hero, Frl. Gardini, as Beatrice, Herr Schütz, as Don Pedro, and Herr Urlus, as Claudio, distinguished themselves specially. The public received the work with great applause, and honoured the composer, the stage-manager, and the performers of the chief parts by numerous calls.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted his Coronation March, at the Alhambra Theatre, on six successive evenings, beginning on the 13th ult., the work being received with much applause by large audiences.

The music competitions we record elsewhere in our present issue are manifestations of a zeal for musical practice that are most gratifying to all who believe in the ameliorating mission of the art. Two events not elsewhere noticed we reserve for comment here, because they present special features, in that they aim to stimulate musical practice in quite rural districts. Somersetshire has not gained a reputation for musical skill, but Mrs. Mansel, of Wincanton, determined that at least what skill there was amongst the people generally should be gauged. Aided by willing coadjutors, she organised a competition at Shepton Mallet, and contrived to awaken the whole country side to an extraordinary degree. Choirs were formed in such numbers, that it was a matter of embarrassment to know where to accommodate them. In these circumstances the managers of the local Anglo-Bavarian Brewery Company were induced to convert a portion of their barrel-shed into a commodious and splendidly-lighted concert-hall! Here, on April 24, four hundred singers were able to delight an audience of 1,500 people. The event was a sensation for Shepton Mallet. The singing at the competition was in every way promising, and at the concert was really remarkably good. The way in which the choirs received the criticisms of the adjudicator (Dr. McNaught) was very creditable to their common-sense.

The other competition was held at Spilsby, in Lincolnshire, on the 5th and 6th ult. Again great interest was shown, and the singing was full of promise. At the concert the choirs combined to sing Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' under the baton of Mrs. Massingberd, the lady whose influence and unbounded faith had made the undertaking possible. It was pleasing to observe how obviously the singers enjoyed a work which, but for this competition, they would probably never have even heard of.

All well-directed efforts put forth for the amelioration of the condition of the blind in their affliction call for sympathy and publicity. 'The Fellowship of the Blind and Seeing' is a Society (with the Princess Christian as President) established for the purpose of 'encouraging social intercourse among the educated blind and their seeing friends.' One branch of the work is a 'Music-copying Bureau,' whereby music can be promptly and correctly copied in Braille at very low rates. The 'Blind Professionals' Agency' is another feature of this commendable 'Fellowship,' in that it keeps a register of addresses and credentials of fully-competent pianoforte tuners, in addition to vocal and instrumental performers. Inquiries concerning the membership and rules of this practical Society should be addressed to the honorary secretary, Miss Fanny E. Samuel, care of Miss Kate Oliver, 5, Queen's Gardens, Lancaster Gate, W.

The recent issues of the publications of the Internationalen Musikgesellschaft are of unusual interest to English musicians, no less than four of the articles appearing in our language. These are (in the Zeitschrift for May): 'Three forgotten waltzes by Schubert,' from the pen of Mr. W. Barclay Squire, and 'The vocal method of Julius Hey,' by Mr. Franz X. Arens, of New York; the Sammelbände (April-June) contains: 'The music in the glass of the Beauchamp Chapel at Warwick,' by Mr. C. Frederick Hardy, and 'The Life-work of Arthur Sullivan,' by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the last-named being a specially interesting contribution. Under the vigilant care of Dr. Charles Maclean, English interests are well looked after in these valuable publications.

Dr. F. H. Cowen has composed a Coronation Ode, the words by Sir Lewis Morris, for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra. The Ode, which will take about fifteen minutes in performance, is to be performed, with the King's express sanction, at one of the State Concerts. We are glad to hear that Dr. Cowen has been re-appointed conductor of the Scottish Orchestra.

Here are some provincial plums of musical criticism:—

The Hymn of Praise is an ecclesiastical counterpoint of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The third movement (Hymn of Praise Symphony) was omitted, but the Finale, supplemented by the long vocal part, was given in its entirety.

The 'Last Post,' with its banjo accompaniment and its fine choral effects, brought an enjoyable evening to a happy conclusion.

Bournemouth is to be congratulated on its musical fare as shown in a splendid list of compositions performed at the Winter Gardens, under the able and enterprising direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, Junr. Sixty concerts were given between October 7 and May 3. At these music-makings 249 works were performed: of these 109 were new to Bournemouth, twelve were actual first performances, and five first performances in England. It is gratifying to find that no fewer than seventy-seven productions of British composers were included in the scheme, and of these twelve received their first hearing at these excellent concerts. Several distinguished native musicians have conducted their own works, but the guiding spirit of the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra and its noteworthy achievements is Mr. Dan Godfrey, Junr., to whom all honour is due.

NOTES ON THE CORONATION MUSIC.

The official list of the music to be sung at the Coronation of King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, in Westminster Abbey, on Thursday, the 26th inst., is as follows:—

Anthem	'I was glad' .. Hubert Parry.
Litany (five parts)	Tallis.
Introit ..	'O hearken thou' .. Arthur Sullivan.
Credo in E	S. S. Wesley.
Veni Creator Spiritus	Ancient Plain Song.
Anthem ..	'Zadok the Priest' .. Handel.
Anthem, 'Be strong and play the man'	Walter Parratt.
Te Deum in B flat	C. Villiers Stanford.
Homage Anthem, 'Kings shall see and arise'	J. F. Bridge.
Anthem, 'Let my prayer come up'	Henry Purcell.
Sanctus and Gloria (from the Service in A)	J. Stainer.
Sevenfold Amen
Threefold Amen	Orlando Gibbons.

It may not be without interest if we give a few historical particulars concerning the above selection of music, which, it will be observed, embraces a period of five centuries of English Church Music—from Thomas Tallis, who died in 1585, to the present day.

The anthem 'I was glad,' specially composed by Sir Hubert Parry, will be of novel design, as it is laid out upon lines conditioned by the ceremony. The Westminster Abbey Choir is supposed to sing the opening anthem in Procession. It would, however, be a mistake for the band and large chorus of 400 voices to be silent at this important part of the ceremony. The Westminster choir will therefore, at the west end of the Abbey, sing certain parts of the anthem by themselves, and they will be answered by the large choir and orchestra. In the middle of the anthem a break has to be made in order that the boys of Westminster School may exercise their ancient privilege of greeting the King and Queen with Vivat Alexandra Regina! and Vivat Edwardus Rex! These exclamations will be incorporated by Sir Hubert Parry in his anthem in a somewhat novel manner, and the composition promises to be a notable feature in the service.

The celebrated Litany of Thomas Tallis (or Tallys, as he himself wrote his name) was in all probability composed soon after the issue of the second Prayer Book of Edward VI. in 1552. It is not known whether Tallis wrote the music in four parts or in five; but most authorities agree that the form in which the responses have come down to us is very impure, if not incorrect. For all that, this time-honoured specimen of old church music possesses a beauty which age cannot fade.

The little 'Introit' by the late Sir Arthur Sullivan is a charming specimen of his genius. It is adapted to the words 'O hearken Thou' (which were of course selected by the Archbishop of Canterbury and have frequently been used at Coronations), and is taken from the oratorio of 'The Light of the World.' For this, Sullivan himself wrote an organ part as well as the characteristic orchestral accompaniment. That Sullivan will not be more adequately represented is doubtless due to the time limitations of the Coronation Service.

The Service in E, by Samuel Sebastian Wesley, from which the Creed is taken, raised a storm of indignation when it first appeared in the year 1845. This was not only due to the new idiom of the music, but in a large measure to the remarkable Preface—really a manifesto—which Wesley issued with the Service. In this he refers to the 'fatiguing monotony,' the 'jog-trot emphasis,' the 'unvarying syllabic accentuation,' and the 'monotonous undescriptive expression' of the contrapuntal services of the dry-as-dust school, as compared with the more natural style of poetic treatment, of which latter, it is hardly necessary to say, Wesley was so consummate a master. He tells us that the Creed (to be sung at the Coronation) was originally written for treble voices only, 'to meet an emergency which occasionally arose at one of the cathedrals [Hereford or Exeter] with which he was connected, and was never intended for public inspection.' But the late Martin Cawood, upon hearing it performed at Leeds, induced Wesley to write the entire Service, for which he (Cawood) remunerated the composer with the sum of fifty guineas. The Creed, therefore, is the parent of 'Wesley in E,' and was composed by Wesley before he went to Leeds Parish Church.

The 'Veni Creator' will be sung to the Ancient Plain Song in unison, with organ accompaniment.

'Zadok the Priest' forms one of that noble chain of anthems composed for the coronation of King George II. and his Queen, and sung at each succeeding ceremony. In the January issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES we gave some fresh particulars in regard to the rendering of the music on that occasion under Handel's personal direction. The anthem is sung at that part of the ceremonial where the King is anointed. It has been supposed that the introductory symphony (twenty-one bars long) was designed by Handel to represent the procession of the twelve tribes to the coronation of Solomon, but this borders on the fanciful. The arpeggio figure of the first violins in this introduction can be traced to a Gloria (probably a final chorus to the Psalm 'Nisi Dominus'), dated Rome, July 7, 1707, the manuscript of which, as we have lately discovered, was in the possession of John Christopher Smith, at his death, at Bath, in 1795. Mr. Silas's admirable and reverent edition of Handel's anthem will be used.

Sir Walter Parratt contributes a short anthem—a setting of the words, 'Be strong and play the man: Keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways,' selected, we believe, from an ancient Coronation Service. This will be sung at that culminating point in the service when the King is crowned, a most appropriate place for the composition of the Master of the King's Musick.

The Te Deum will be the well-known setting in the key of B flat by Professor Villiers Stanford, who has recently scored it for full orchestra.

The words of Sir Frederick Bridge's Homage Anthem are particularly appropriate. It was at this part of the service that the 'General Pardon' was made in former times, hence the words 'that thou mayest say to the prisoners, go forth!' come with particular point. The last chorus is novel in style. A march played by the orchestra accompanied by the chorus is a leading feature. The homage of the whole world is, as it were, signified in the words: 'Behold! these shall come from far; and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.'

It was a happy thought to introduce the honoured name of Henry Purcell. He was not only organist of Westminster Abbey from 1680 to 1695, but he composed two anthems for the coronation of James II., in 1685. He also took part in a similar ceremony when William and Mary came to the throne, concerning which Hawkins tells a curious story.* At the approaching ceremony, Purcell will be represented by his Latin setting, in five parts, of Psalm 3, Jehova, quam multi sunt hostes. Its middle movement has been adapted to the words in the Coronation Service, 'Let my prayer come up into Thy presence as incense: and let the lifting up of my hands be as the evening sacrifice.' According to Dr. Cummings, this Psalm, first printed by Vincent Novello, in 1844, is to be found in a volume of Purcell's compositions entirely in his own handwriting. The contents show that he commenced writing in the book in 1680 (the year of his appointment to Westminster Abbey), and continued so to do until 1683. This Psalm is included in the book, and was therefore composed not later than 1683—probably earlier. At all events, Purcell could not have been more than twenty-five years of age when he composed the music. This Offertorium is a wonderful specimen of Purcell's harmony, and the movement, though short, will not fail to be impressive.

The Sanctus and Gloria from the Service in A and the Sevenfold Amen, by the late Sir John Stainer, are so familiar as not to call for special comment, except that these settings will not be unworthy of the great occasion. Like the Purcell anthem they will, of course, form part of the Communion Service on June 26. The movements have been orchestrated by Sir George C. Martin.

The Threefold Amen of Orlando Gibbons, organist of Westminster Abbey, 1623-25, is taken from the Anthem 'Great King of Gods.' The manuscript of this is in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford, and it contains a note which reads: 'This Anthem was made for the King's being in Scotland,' The first verse runs thus:—

> Great King of Gods, whose gracious hand hath led
> Our sacred Sovereign's head
> Unto the place where all our bliss was bred.

The selection of music is a representative one that will prove its effectiveness on the great occasion. We understand that the orchestra (including the King's Private Band) will consist of about eighty players, in addition to twelve trumpeters for the fanfares. The chorus will number about 400 voices. All the performers will be surpliced, the band being placed on the organ screen, and the choir located in two galleries adjacent to the two main organ cases. Mr. Walter Alcock, organist of His Majesty's Chapel Royal and assistant organist of Westminster Abbey, will preside at the organ. Sir Frederick Bridge, organist of Westminster Abbey, will have the general direction of the music, while Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Musick, will conduct his own anthem and some of the instrumental music played by the orchestra prior to the arrival of their Majesties at the great west door of the Abbey.

THE MORECAMBE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.)

Travellers by the London and North Western Railway to the region beloved by Wordsworth, Southey and Ruskin, obtain their first glimpse of the mountains in lovely Lakeland as the train skirts Morecambe Bay. Of Morecambe itself they probably know little or nothing. It is a modern seaside place, favoured by holiday-seekers in Lancashire and Yorkshire. From its well-kept sea-front, two or three miles long, the aforesaid mountains are a feast to the eye. In these opening days of May one could not fail to enjoy the invigorating sea breezes wafted across the bay, in which Morecambe stands.

The permanent musical interest of the place centres in the Morecambe Madrigal Society, an admirably trained body of Lancashire singers—and Lancashire, like Yorkshire, is a land of song—animated with high ideals of artistic interpretation and a genuine love for choral music. The conductor of this excellent Society is Mr. R. G. W. Howson, manager of the Lancaster Bank at Morecambe and a man of poetic temperament, who throws his heart and soul into the work. At my request he has kindly furnished the following account of the Society:—

The Morecambe Madrigal Society (established 1893) differs from the usual choral society or singing-class, in the fact that as a choir the members do not give public concerts, except on very rare occasions. For instance, we gave a concert in aid of the local War Fund and handed over £150 to that object. And, except at our own Festival, we do not lay ourselves out for competitions. Last year, however, we went to the Blackpool Festival to meet our old friends and rivals, the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, and we were so fortunate as to beat them!

I believe our constitution is somewhat unique. There is to some extent a social as well as a musical side to our membership. Our rule as to attendance at the weekly rehearsal is as follows, and is loyally observed. I ought to premise that I am an amateur, so that I make a compact with my choir somewhat to the following effect:—'I shall be pleased to conduct the Society, and will from 7 o'clock to 9 on Wednesday evening, from October to May, hold myself at the members' disposal for that purpose, unless prevented by illness, pressure of business, or unavoidable absence from home, provided every member will undertake to attend every rehearsal (not a percentage of rehearsals) unless prevented by one of the same reasons.' This embodies our rule as to attendance, and it has been almost invariably observed. I wish you could see our attendance register, many of the members show a remarkable record of unbroken attendance.

We hold annually what we call our 'Open Night.' Each member is entitled to invite eight guests, who collectively form an audience of about 400 listeners. One of the smaller public halls here is transformed into a drawing-room, and tea is served during a half-hour interval in the programme. The programme consists entirely of madrigals, part-songs, and choruses, unaccompanied,—as you will see by the book of words I am sending you—no solo or individual performances being admitted.

Many musical people predicted failure for such a scheme. 'A concert programme,' said they, 'unrelieved by any instrumental music or solos, would be too monotonous for anything.' But, as I say to my choir, when we cannot present our part-songs, &c., in a sufficiently artistic manner to really interest our audience, we will drop it. The result, however, is that the invitations (which, by-the-way, are not free) are eagerly sought after, the applications being very largely in excess of the number at our disposal. The work to me is delightful. Not only do we obtain very encouraging artistic results, but the members are most self-sacrificing.

May increasing success attend the artistic operations of Mr. Howson and his enthusiastic madrigalians!

Mere man does not regard with favour a Bazaar, with its anti-macassary and anti-masculine environment. Yet it was from one of these inevitable functions that the Morecambe Musical Festival sprang into existence. In July, 1891, the rector of Morecambe, and the father of the Festival, the Rev. C. V. Gorton, engineered a bazaar in aid of the building fund for the erection of the district church of St. Barnabas. One of the side-shows on that occasion was a musical competition of a very modest nature. The rector, however, and those associated with him, little thought that the seed thus sown would result in such rich fruition. This initial effort proved so successful that a second competition was held in the following year. The financial growth of the scheme since 1893 can best be judged by the following table of total receipts:—

1894	149	1899	521
1895	158	1900	754
1896	184	1901	850
1897	263	1902 .. (about)	900

The adjudicators, in addition to Dr. Lloyd and Dr. Hiles, already mentioned, have been the Rev. C. Hylton Stewart (twice), Dr. Joseph Bridge, Dr. A. H. Mann, Dr. Eaton Faning, Sir Frederick Bridge (twice), the late Sir John Stainer, Dr. Brodsky, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Dr. McNaught (six times).

The first Festival Secretary was Mr. R. G. W. Howson. For the next seven years (1893-99) Mr. J. W. Aldous, a well-known musician residing in the neighbouring town of Lancaster, discharged the duties. He resigned when the work became so exacting as to necessitate the engagement of a paid secretary, an office which is now held by Mr. H. Powell.

An important and gratifying feature of these competitions is their educational influence, of which it is impossible to speak too highly, or to over-estimate the value. No pains are spared by the executive to keep this object prominently in view. For example, the detailed marks of the adjudicators, as well as their comments on each competition, are printed in pamphlet form and sold to competitors and others at the nominal price of sixpence. Thus every individual who takes part in the contest can become acquainted with the causes of success or failure. Here are some specimens from last year's document, under 'Local choirs or choral societies.' First the marks:—

Accuracy of notes and time	.. ..	Max. 10.
Intonation, quality, and balance of tone	..	,, 10.
Attack, pronunciation, enunciation	..	,, 10.
Expression, pace	.. ..	,, 10.
General effect	.. ..	,, 20.
Total number of marks	.. .. ..	,, 60.

And then some comments by the adjudicators:—

An excellent tone, just somewhat deficient in sweetness in fortes. Blend at times excellent. A sympathetic expression, just missing distinction. The pathetic note wanting. Intonation satisfactory. Attack from an ideal standpoint, lacking exactitude. Lost ¼ tone. (Test piece, Mendelssohn's 'Vale of Rest.')

A good tone and blend. Execution rather tame, here and there suffused with melancholy. Attack good. Rhythm not much varied, often heavy. They broke out bravely at the end (prospect of land?). The tameness of expression the most noticeable fault, the clearness of execution the best point. Lost a semitone. ('The Windlass Song,' for male voices, by Walter Macfarren.)

As the schedule of marks and the criticisms of the adjudicators extend to forty-four closely-printed quarto pages, it becomes evident that the office of judge at this competitive fray is by no means a sinecure.

The Festival under notice—the twelfth of the series—took place in the magnificent Entertainment Hall, or theatre of the Winter Gardens, Morecambe, on April 30, May 1, 2, and 3. The President, the Rev. C. V. Gorton, rector of Morecambe, is not only thoroughly Kingsleyan in his method, but the moving spirit of the entire undertaking. The first day was devoted to the children. It included competitions in ear tests; theory; two-part sight-reading; pianoforte solo; church choir boys (solos); public elementary school choirs; violin solo; children's choirs; Girls' Friendly Society choirs (a new and excellent feature); Maypole dance and song competition; action song; &c. The mere mention of these subjects will show the wide range of musical interest covered by these various classes. It is no wonder to learn from the lips of Mr. Gorton that within the last few years a revolution has taken place in the singing of the school children in the district, an improvement which can be traced to the good influence of this Festival. In the evening some of the prize-winners took part in a concert, at which the united choirs—some 400 children—sang the humorous cantata, composed specially for the occasion by Sir Frederick Bridge, entitled 'The Spider and the Fly.' We give a specimen of Mr. Shapcott Wensley's capital libretto—the verse of a song addressed to his 'gentle friends,' the flies, by Old Daddy Longlegs:—

> But more than all beware, beware,
> The crafty spider's gauzy snare!
> And should she ask you in to dine,
> You must respectfully decline;
> For when you're once within her nest,
> You'll be the dish and not the guest.
> Fal lal laladdity, fal lal lal lay!

The children entered most heartily into the spirit of the thing, and followed their conductor, Dr. McNaught, in a manner that would have put many an adult choir to the blush, if not to shame.

CONDUCTOR OF THE MORECAMBE MADRIGAL SOCIETY.
(Photograph by J. Edwards, Morecambe.)

Thursday, at present the off-day of the Festival, was devoted to an organ recital, given in St. Laurence church by Dr. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Cathedral, at which Miss Agnes Nicholls sang. In the evening Dr. Pyne gave a lecture on 'The Organ.'

The busy proceedings of Friday embraced the following contests, the names of the winners being:—

Female-Voice Choir: Yealand (1); Bolton-le-Sands (2).
Male-Voice Choir (local): Yealand (1); Grindleton (2).
Choral Sight-reading: Yealand Choral Union (1); Morecambe West-End Wesleyan (2).
Local Choir or Choral Society (B): Bolton-le-Sands (1); Bulk (2).
Female Voice Choir: Morecambe West-End Wesleyan (1); Hornby Musical Society (2).
Instrumental Trio (Beethoven, No. 3 in C minor): Manchester Orpheus (1); Miss Cassidy's Trio (2).
Mixed Voice Quartet, with pianoforte: Manchester Orpheus (1); Mr. Tattersall's Quartet (2).
String Quartet: Miss Cassidy's Quartet (1); Mr. Clay's, from Halifax (2).
Male Quartet: Preston St. Cecilia (1); Lancaster Centenary (2).
Local Choir or Choral Society (A): Yealand (1); Morecambe Greenstreet Wesleyan (2).

Special mention must be made of the highly artistic interpretation of the quartets of Brahms (Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of Op. 92) given by the Manchester Orpheus Quartet, of which the soprano singer was sightless. The unity and expressiveness of the rendering of those beautiful compositions calls for high commendation—as Sir Alexander Mackenzie remarked, it was one of the finest things of the Festival.

The evening concert included a performance, under Dr. McNaught's direction, of Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' soloist, Miss Agnes Nicholls,—who also gave two most delightful song recitals in the course of the evening—and solos, &c., performed by the victors of the day.

Saturday, though the last, was the chief day of the Festival, by reason of the great choral competitions. Six thousand persons were present, and listened to the competitions and concert with intense appreciation. Place aux dames was the opening order of the day (and the fray), in a female-voice choir competition (open), the test pieces being 'The Mermaid' (Schumann) and 'A March Night' (Brahms). Mr. Tattersall's choir, from Southport, won the first prize, and the second fell to the Manchester Girls' Institute, a choir of factory girls from one of the most unsalubrious parts of Cottonopolis. The manner in which those hard-working girls sang that difficult five-part song of Schumann's (unaccompanied) and the by no means easy Brahms part-song was highly creditable both to themselves and their leader. The philanthropic potentialities of music, as exemplified in the achievements of these Manchester girls, appealed to me so strongly that I asked Miss Ashworth, their conductress, for some particulars of the splendid work in which she is engaged. Her notes will be found on p. 391. At noon, fifteen mixed-voice choirs (open) entered the arena (metaphorically speaking) with Stanford's 'Praised be Diana' (some of the singers persisted in pronouncing the lady's name *Dee*ana!) as the test piece. The first prize was worthily won by the Kendal Madrigal Society (Mr. W. Granger), while the Barrow-in-Furness Madrigal Society (Miss Lones), with only two marks less, made a capital second.

Next we listened to a competition for string orchestras, with Goetz's charming 'Serenade in D minor' as the piece to be played. There were only two entries for this contest, and Nelson Congregational String Orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. C. Townsley, obtained the prize. I was so much surprised at the remarkable intonation, refinement, and artistic perception which marked the performance of this orchestra, that, as in the case of the Manchester girls' choir, I asked the conductor to furnish me with some particulars concerning the orchestra and its history, for the benefit of the readers of The Musical Times. This information will be found on p. 392. Mr. Wildman's string orchestra gained the second prize. Goss's charming glee 'Hark! heard ye not' was sung by eight choirs in succession in the male-voice choir competition (open). The fine singing of the three best choirs resulted in a close contest—only one mark separating the first (56), second (55), and third (54). The three victorious choirs were Southport Vocal Union (Mr. J. C. Clarke), Manchester Orpheus Prize Glee Society (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt), and Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. J. A. Rodgers). Three orchestras entered for the orchestra competition for which Weber's Oberon overture had been chosen as the test piece. In this the Colne Orchestral Society (Mr. J. L. Wildman) beat the Nelson band by three marks, while the Lancaster Choral Society's orchestra (Mr. J. W. Aldous) was only one mark behind the Nelsonites. The playing of all three orchestras was exceedingly creditable; the wisdom of the choice of that particular overture, however, as a test piece for amateur orchestras is doubtful. Professional help has to be engaged, and that opens up a thorny question.

Great excitement attended the contest for the blue ribbon of the Festival, which took the form of a Silver Challenge Shield value 100 guineas (to be held for one year), plus fifteen guineas in hard cash, with a ten and five-guinea prize for the second and third best choirs respectively. Of the five choirs that entered, one—led by the veteran Mr. W. Riley—came all the way from Nottingham. They left at four o'clock in the morning—one hour earlier than Mr. J. A. Rodgers's merry men started from Sheffield—and they expected to return at the same matutinal hour on the next day (Sunday). The competing choirs were limited to not less than thirty and not more than fifty voices, and the four test pieces were John Ward's five-part madrigal 'Hope of my heart,' 'The Maiden' and 'O lovely May,' by Brahms (Op. 93*a*), and Elgar's dainty part-song 'O happy eyes,' which originally appeared in The Musical Times. It is no exaggeration to say that the singing of these choirs reached the high-water mark of choral excellence. The chief characteristics of the three winning choirs were extreme beauty of tone (Blackpool), artistic intuitiveness and fine basses (Morecambe), and, that excellent commodity, brains (Nottingham). The total marks came out as follows:—

Name of Choir.	Conductor.	Marks.
Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society	Mr. H. Whittaker ..	233
Morecambe Madrigal Society	Mr. R. G. W. Howson	226
Nottingham Tabernacle Temperance Prize Choir ..	Mr. W. Riley ..	223
Saltaire Prize Choir ..	Mr. A. F. Briggs ..	221
Colne Harmonic Union ..	Mr. T. P. Hey ..	205

Thus, for the third time, Blackpool became the shield-holders and Morecambe again found themselves in the second place.

The chief feature of the evening and closing concert was an excellent performance by the united choirs of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'The Procession of the Ark,' conducted by the composer, who met with a most enthusiastic reception, as also did his fellow adjudicator, Dr. W. G. McNaught, an old favourite at Morecambe, when he came forward to announce the awards in respect of the Challenge Shield. It should be added that the Morecambe Madrigal Society obtained full marks (60) in the competition of which Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'Rose of Sharon' extract above referred to formed the test piece, that the Saltaire Prize Choir (Mr. A. F. Briggs) came second, and the Nottingham Choir (Mr. W. Riley) third. The prize,—music to the value of £5—given by Messrs. Novello, went to the Morecambe Madrigal Society, with an aggregate of 286 marks, Blackpool coming second with 285; thus literally the Morecambites made their mark—but only one—over their friendly rivals.

One or two suggestions may be made, in a perfectly friendly spirit, in regard to future meetings. First, the low pitch should at once be made a sine quâ non in the vocal classes. Sir Alexander Mackenzie publicly expressed his opinion on this matter, and his remarks will not be lost on the executive. The same condition should exist in the instrumental classes, if not at once, say in two years after due notice. This would be in line with the educational policy which so eminently characterizes the committee's operations. Second, so far as I could discover from the syllabus of conditions, there seems to be no safeguard against non-members of choirs giving a helping hand (or voice) for competition purposes. Such over-friendliness should be under a ban. Third, in order to encourage amateur orchestras, either a less difficult test piece than Weber's Oberon overture (with its solo wood-wind passages) should be chosen, or another class should be instituted. The question of limitations in engaging outside help (e.g., horns, &c.) for the orchestral contests is also one that needs to be carefully considered.

The competitors numbered 3,900, as against 3,100 in 1891. The amount of money awarded as prizes—ranging from the third award of five shillings in the children's ear-test section, to the fifteen guineas in the full orchestra class—reached the sum of £250, of which no less than £180 was subscribed for by private individuals, who thereby showed their practical interest in this excellent movement. Mr. C. H. Fogg, of Manchester, proved himself an excellent accompanist, and the arduous duties of adjudicating were in the safe hands of Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Dr. W. G. McNaught. The apparent good feeling which prevailed between the victors and those who were unsuccessful was a marked feature of the contests. There appeared to be a total absence of 'bad blood.' The good of the cause (of music) seemed to animate all who competed and took part; the sporting element was, happily, conspicuous by its absence. In this respect, and also from the educational point of view, the Welsh people at their Eisteddfodau may learn a valuable lesson from the fine spirit of the competitors at Morecambe.

The ever-expanding scope of this Festival needs further funds in the form of subscriptions. With more pecuniary assistance the executive would be able to assist choirs in their self-sacrificing efforts. The movement is not only a musical one, but through the practice of the art, it touches the social life of all who take part, giving them occupation in leisure hours of the most elevating kind. The powers-that-be would be delighted to hear from any Carnegiean disposed benefactor who may wish to aid so good a cause in the welfare of the people.

No more fitting words could conclude this notice of a most interesting event than the text from which the Rector of Morecambe preached on the Sunday following the Festival:—

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

MILLIAN MUSIC.

'What is Millian Music?' It is music made by the sons and daughters of toil in the mills of Lancashire as exemplified in two particular organizations. Secondly, by the change of one vowel, our 'millian' becomes 'million,' hence the subject is of wide application. Popular music—of a good kind, of course—does not receive the attention it deserves by writers on music. Take, for example, the musical critics of the London press, with their circumscribed beat and pathetic experiences. Excepting the provincial festivals in the gooseberry season, when editors are glad of copy, these important gentlemen of the press, like the old Christy Minstrels, 'never perform out of London.' If some of them could have found their way to the recent Festival at Morecambe they would have had their eyes opened to an important and far-reaching educational movement. In the words of the musical critic of the Manchester Guardian (who was present): 'It may be doubted whether the observer can lay his finger on any single event or institution more typical of our recent musical progress than the spring meeting at Morecambe.' Again: 'One feels that there must be a future for the music of this country when such a festival is possible.'

The attentive observer at Morecambe could not fail to have been struck with this feature of the competitions—the cultivation of music for the pure love of the art, and not as a means of bringing grist to the mill, or as a prize-getting pastime. A number of earnest-minded people were gathered together demonstrating in excellent performances the results of their diligent practisings during the dreary hours of winter in surroundings more or less dreary all the year round. Two particular instances of this beneficent work typify the aims and attainments of the competing army of singers and players who met in friendly rivalry at Morecambe.

First, the Girls' Institute Choir, a branch of the philanthropic work carried on by the Manchester Girls' Institute at Ancoats, one of the dreariest districts of Cottonopolis. The conductress of this choir, which took a second prize at Morecambe (see p. 390), has kindly furnished some notes on the good work in which she is engaged. Miss Ashworth writes:—

Our singing class began in a very humble fashion. I had had no experience whatever of conducting and no idea then that we should ever have a conducted choir. It was started as a popular holiday class, and the rough girls who joined it came with the idea of having only 'fun'! At first we learnt services of song, simple hymn-tunes they were (not, I am afraid, of a very high order), which the girls learnt by ear in two parts. No easy task in those days when their idea of 'alter' consisted of singing a third below the treble. From the very first we made the plan of always having a goal in immediate view, and the girls were told that they should sing their first service of song in public as soon as they had learnt it. This roused their ambition, and they worked very hard, knowing that in due time they would have the joy of singing (?) to an audience in the Institute. How they shouted out those services of song—they were not Lancashire mill girls for nothing! It was useless talking to them of expression, as they simply could not understand it. What did it matter so long as there was plenty of noise and it was 'hearty'? Becoming utterly weary of this kind of music, I ventured to teach the girls Mendelssohn's 'Lift thine eyes,' and I began to conduct. What laughing there was when they attempted to sing in three parts, but it was good to see their determination to master the difficulties of the trio. Then we came to a standstill, and I saw that if we were to go forward I must teach them the theory of music, and that they must learn to read for themselves. The result was I took ten sight-reading lessons myself in the 'moveable doh' system. After three or four lessons I began to teach the girls, thus I was very little ahead of them, but this induced me to study the subject more carefully and intelligently. At the present time they have little difficulty in reading fairly easy three-part music at sight.

When the choir had been in existence four years it was suggested that we should enter some musical competition. We began at the top! That is, we entered for the Female Choral Competition, at the Grand National Eisteddfod, held that year at Blaenau Festiniog. We did badly, almost as a matter of course. The girls had to be up soon after four o'clock in the morning, and we did not reach our destination until noon. Many of them, unused to travelling, were feeling ill, and all (myself included) horribly frightened when we saw the huge pavilion in which we had to perform. We came out bottom on the list and felt even that was too good a place for us. But the experience was the most valuable one the choir has ever had. At last their eyes were opened, and they listened to good choral music and understood its possibilities. From that time they have steadily though slowly improved. We have since entered five competitions, at which we have won three prizes, and each has had its own helpful lesson; but I think we shall never forget the terrible experience of our first competition.

At our last annual concert (on April 10) we sang Mendelssohn's motet 'Laudate pueri Dominum.' It was amusing to watch the enthusiasm with which the girls tackled the music, and more especially the Latin words of the motet, quite new ground for these Lancashire lasses. With the exception of the violinist, the girls sustained the entire programme, which included 'A March Night' (Brahms), four parts, and 'The Mermaid' (Schumann), five parts. We made upwards of £20 by the concert, part of which will be devoted to a summer trip for 400 poor children. Some years ago we bought our own grand pianoforte. We have our own platform, and a special cupboard (our own design) was made from the grant received from the Government, for we have placed ourselves under Government inspection, and that is a great help to our funds.

I would like to say a word as to what I consider has been the secret of the choir's success. It can be summed up in these words: 'A goal, a laugh, a prayer.' The first, I believe, is absolutely necessary, for without ambition, rightly directed, no undertaking can attain to any degree of excellence. The second—a laugh—because many of these girls come to the practice weary, depressed, and tired after their day's work in the mill—it is such a monotonous life!—and if instruction is to be imparted, it must be in a 'sugar-coated' form. No opportunity of raising a hearty good-natured laugh must be lost, whether it be at the expense of the teacher or the taught. The third point, though unusual, I must touch upon, for it is my firm conviction that 'Them that honour Me I will honour.' And we have proved again and again that when the 'goal' and the 'laugh' would not have kept a girl in the choir—in her dissatisfaction with her life's hard lot—some words in the closing prayer have been the means of comforting, helping, and strengthening her, causing her to stay with us, and encouraging her to again go forth and 'fight the good fight.'

No comment is needed on this pathetic narrative.

We may now turn to an instrumental example of Millian music. Nelson is a Lancashire town situated three miles north of Burnley. It has a population of 33,000 people—an increase of more than 10,000 in the last decade—who are engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods. An amateur orchestra from Nelson played so admirably and to the great satisfaction of Sir Alexander Mackenzie at Morecambe, that an account of its constitution and aims, kindly supplied by Mr. James Thornton, the secretary, may prove to be of interest.

The Nelson Congregational Orchestral Band was founded about twelve years ago. The members are connected with the Sunday School and others resident in the district. The entrance fee is one shilling and the subscription is one penny per week. The object of the band is to encourage those musically inclined to meet together for their mutual improvement and pleasure during leisure hours. Our members are young people who are chiefly employed in the manufacture of cotton goods. Most of them are weavers, and others are overlookers in weaving sheds, or mill managers. After spending ten hours each day in the mills they find their greatest pleasure in practising orchestral music.

Early in the year 1900 we decided to enter the Full Orchestra Competition at the Morecambe Festival. The test piece was Reissiger's 'Felsenmühle' Overture. Four bands competed, and we obtained the first prize. We entered again in 1901, this time for two classes—string and full orchestra. Although we were not quite so successful as in the previous year, we obtained the second prize in the full orchestra and the third prize in the string classes.

When returning home from that event we decided to enter the Blackpool competition, to be held eleven days later. In less than a fortnight therefore we prepared ourselves for this contest by getting up Sullivan's 'Di Ballo' overture, in addition to rehearsing for the string orchestra and quartet classes, and though no other band entered the judges awarded us first prize in each class.

This year at Morecambe we obtained the first prize, with Goetz's Serenade in D minor, in the string orchestra class, and the second prize in the full orchestra, the test-piece being Weber's 'Oberon' overture.

When we consider that these good people have to work hard in the mills from 6 o'clock in the morning till 5.30 in the evening, the results of their delightful recreative pleasure do credit to themselves and their able conductor, Mr. C. Townsley.

These two instances testify in no small degree to the elevating power of music, its means of furnishing healthy recreation, and its effect on many lives that come under its warm, brightening influence. Such social and philanthropic applications of the divine art should find many imitators throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The 164th Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians was held at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Métropole, on the 21st ult., under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury. In proposing the toast of the evening of 'prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians,' with an appeal for a generous subscription-list, the chairman said: 'I only wish I could be sure of the success ascribed to a certain charity sermon by Dr. Pye Smith, concerning which it is said one of his hearers was so carried away, that he emptied his neighbour's pocket into the plate.' The chairman's appeal resulted in the sum of £900 being added to the exchequer. As usual on these occasions, the music at the Festival was of good quality. Those who took part were M. Emile Sauret, Miss Kate Rooney, Mr. Ivor Foster, Mr. George A. Clinton, Mr. H. Lane Wilson, and Miss Stanley Lucas, the last-named giving special pleasure by her tasteful singing and excellent enunciation—a rare, but important qualification.

Church and Organ Music.

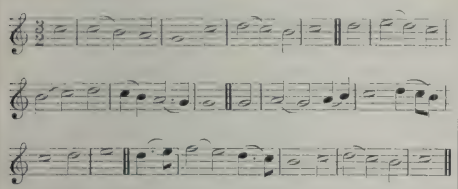
THE TUNE 'WAREHAM.'

The composer of this time-honoured tune is William Knapp, said to be the son of a German. He was born at Wareham, Dorsetshire, in 1688 or 1699. The particulars of his life are very few. He is referred to as 'a country psalm-singer,' and is reputed to have held organistships at Wareham and Poole. At the latter place he, according to Rimbault, held the office of parish clerk of St. James's Church for the long period of thirty-nine years. He departed this life in the year 1768, and was buried 'somewhere near the old town wall' of Poole.

'Wareham,' so named by the composer after his birthplace, first appeared in a psalmody entitled:—

A set of new PSALMS and ANTHEMS in four parts: on various occasions . . . . and an introduction to Psalmody after a plain and familiar manner. By WILLIAM KNAPP. London: 1738.

'Wareham tune' is therein set to Psalm xxxvi. and headed 'for ye holy Sacrament.' Here is the original form of its melody:—



The fourth edition of Knapp's book (1750) contains, according to the title-page, 'an anthem composed by King Henry the Seventh; which has been performed with the greatest Applause (!) in the King's Chapel, St. Paul's Cathedral, and Westminster-Abbey. Now first published from a Manuscript.'

It may be remembered that the tune 'Bedford' was changed, but not by its composer, from triple to quadruple rhythm. Knapp, however, transformed 'Wareham' himself. In its non-triple form the tune is to be found in:—

NEW CHURCH MELODY; being a set of anthems, psalms, hymns, &c. . . . By WILLIAM KNAPP . . . London, 1754.

'Wareham' is there named 'Blandford,' and the melody is slightly altered:—

The tune is preceded with this quaint direction:—

The above & ye following Tune are Set in the two Natural Keys, Viz.: A re the Natural ♭ Key, and C fa ut, the Natural ♯ Key, and when Sung, to be repeated every Line.

This second book of psalmody issued by Knapp contains his portrait, which we reproduce. It represents him at the age of fifty-four. Following the psalmodic custom of the time, 'New Church Melody' contains an adulatory poem of four stanzas, of which, by way of conclusion, we quote the first and last.

To MR. KNAPP on his NEW CHURCH MELODY.

Is it the juſteſt Praiſe of ev'ry Art
To ſecond Nature, and improve the Heart?
Then ſure amidſt the Circle none can vie
With true Devotion's Handmaid, Pſalmody.
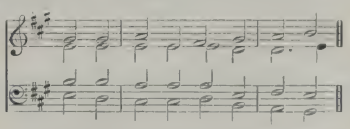
. . . . . .
How great your Merit, who employ your Pains
To form the Choir, to regulate it's Strains!
And ſhewing Muſick why herſelf was given,
Recall the Wand'rer to her native Heaven!

WILLIAM KNAPP,
COMPOSER OF THE TUNE 'WAREHAM.'

Mr. T. L. Forbes writes:—

I have been reading your most interesting memoir of Henry Smart. I was for eight years organist of Christ Church, Woburn Square, and took opportunities of going into St. Pancras Church on my way home to hear the concluding hymn and voluntary. It may interest you to see the following version of the fifth line of the tune 'Benediction,' which I heard Smart play one evening:—



His out-voluntary was generally extempore, but in proper form. But I once heard him play 'The King shall rejoice,' the March from 'Athalie,' and Beethoven's 'Hallelujah.' During the collection, a long interlude before the last verse of the hymn often commenced on the choir organ and 'worked up' to the 'full organ' for the last verse with masterly effect.

In Memoriam EDWIN GEORGE MONK.

After the retirement of the late Dr. E. G. Monk from the organistship of York Minster he went to reside at Radley, near Abingdon, in Berkshire, where he died two years ago. The desire of the vicar of Radley to erect a memorial to that much esteemed musician in the church where he was wont to worship is a natural one. Moreover, it is exceedingly fitting that the memorial should take the form of an organ. The time is opportune, as the Church is now being restored at a cost of £1,100, towards which sum the vicar has still to raise £300. We are therefore asked—and we gladly accede to the request—to bring the matter of the proposed organ before our readers in the hope that not a few will be led to subscribe towards 'a worthy, though very humble,' memorial, as the vicar puts it, to one who did so much for church music and who bore an honoured name. So far some £30 have been promised; the organ is to cost only £200, and the proposal has the support of Dr. Mark Monk, of Truro Cathedral, Mr. Walter Macfarren, and the Rev. John Hampton, Warden of St. Michael's College, Tenbury. The Rev. C. B. Layland, The Vicarage, Radley, Abingdon, Berks, will gratefully receive any subscriptions that may be sent to him for the object he has in view.

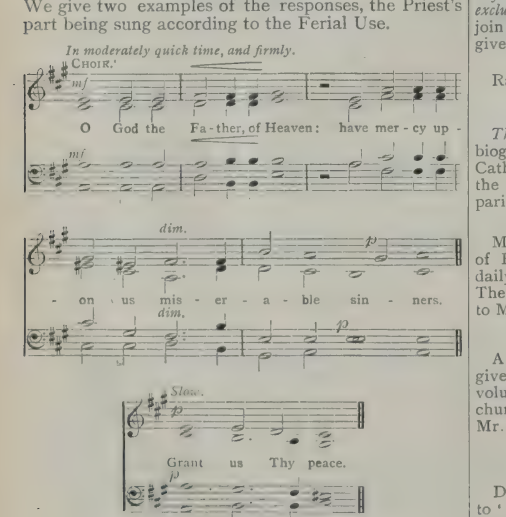
A TRIO OF LITANIES.

It was a happy thought of Mr. John B. Lott to prepare for publication, with interesting prefaces, three litanies by seventeenth-century composers—William King, Henry Loosemore, and Thomas Wanless. These, with the Ferial and Tallis, form the cycle of five litanies sung at Lichfield Cathedral throughout the year. King was organist of New College, Oxford (1664-80); Loosemore, of King's College, Cambridge (1627-70); and Wanless, of York Minster, in 1691. The beautiful setting by King (in A), which we recently had an opportunity of hearing at Lichfield, is one quite within the capacity of parish choirs, and deserves to be widely known. We give two examples of the responses, the Priest's part being sung according to the Ferial Use.



The excellent Bach organ recitals—to which we have more than once referred—given by Mr. E. H. Thorne, have pursued their interesting course on Saturday afternoons during the past month; and the orchestral and oratorio services at Brixton Church, on the 4th and 18th ult., under Mr. Douglas Redman, have maintained their interest and popularity.

SYDNEY SMITH AND THE Statu quo.

The witty Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral was a very outspoken cleric, especially on matters musical. 'No more minor music while I am in residence, Mr. Goss,' was one of his 'orders' to Sir John Stainer's predecessor. His instructions to William Hawes, Almoner of the Choristers, were no less imperative, as the following extract from a letter—or rather, an 'order'—from the redoubtable canon to that gentleman will show:—

Mr. Hawes.

I think the choir at St. Paul's as good as any in England. We have gone on with it for 200 years—why not be content? You talk of competing with other cathedrals—but cathedrals are not to consider themselves as rival opera houses. We shall come, bye and bye, to act anthems. It is enough if our music is decent, and does not put us to shame. It is a matter of perfect indifference to me whether Westminster bawls louder than St. Paul's. We are there to pray, and the singing is a very subordinate consideration.

SYDNEY SMITH.

Combe Florey, Taunton,
August 21, 1844.

We gladly insert the following letter from the Hon. Richard Strutt:—

SIR,—With the permission of the Vicar, it is proposed to hold a festival service of ladies' choirs, early in November next, at Kensington Parish Church, the Service to consist of a celebration of the Holy Communion, sung to Rheinberger's setting, 'Sincere in memoriam.'

I shall be glad if you will give me the opportunity of saying that the names of any choirs (composed exclusively of ladies' voices), which may be desirous to join in the festival, should be sent to me at the address given below; full particulars will then be forwarded.

Yours faithfully
RICHARD STRUTT.

The Harrogate Times of the 17th ult. contains a biography of Dr. E. J. Crow, late organist of Ripon Cathedral, from which it appears that he has accepted the appointment of organist and choirmaster of Thirsk parish church.

Mr. C. H. Moody entered upon his duties as organist of Ripon Cathedral on April 30, since which date the daily services have been sung without accompaniment. The fine organ erected by Lewis, in 1878, is being rebuilt to Mr. Moody's specification by Messrs. Hill and Son.

A neat little booklet, entitled 'A year's musical work,' gives an account of excellent service rendered by the voluntary choir, numbering forty-eight voices, of the church of St. Michael-at-Bowes, Bowes Park, of which Mr. Herbert Rolfe is the organist and choirmaster.

Hall, Carnegie Music Hall, Pittsburgh (Canzone, King Hall).—Mr. J. Charles Long, St. James's Westmorland Street, W. (Fantasia and Toccata, Op. 57, Stanford).—Mr. H. V. Miniken, St. Olave's, Southwark (Allegretto grazioso, Tours).—Mr. T. H. Collinson, Cathedral Church, Edinburgh (Choral-Vorspiele, Brahms).—Mr. Louis H. Torr, Church of the Ascension, Bitterne Park.—Mr. W. A. Roberts, Welsh Congregational Church, Liverpool (Concert overture in E flat, Faulkner).—Mr. Louis F. Goodwin, Pembury Grove United Methodist Free Church, Lower Clapton (Intermezzo, Hollins).—Mr. Thomas Curry, Holy Trinity, Richmond.—Mr. W. G. Peake, All Saints' Parish Church, Driffield (Marche Célèbre, Franz Lachner).

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. H. Maitland Barnes, The Old Independent Church, Haverhill.
Mr. E. Beattie, Islington Presbyterian Church.
Mr. C. R. Brown, Clapton Presbyterian Church.
Mr. J. Clark, Christ Church, Wellington, Salop.
Mr. G. Holland Fox, Holy Trinity Church, Darlington.
Mr. J. W. Jones, Holy Trinity Church, Elgin.
Mr. E. H. Melling, St. Peter's Church, Birmingham.
Mr. T. W. Musgrove, Parish Church, Cromer.
Mr. Charles H. Nutton, Inverbrothock Parish Church, Arbroath.
Mr. E. H. Turner, All Saints' Church, Colchester.
Mr. R. Wilkinson, Christ's Hospital (The Blue Coat School), West Horsham.

The Annual Meeting of the Conference of Organists and Directors of Music in Public Schools was held in the large hall of the Royal College of Organists on April 30. Dr. C. H. Lloyd, of Eton, in the chair. Mr. Basil Johnson suggested 'that the Committee of the Union should take steps to give an impetus to the study of the violin and other orchestral instruments by approaching the masters of preparatory schools.' He had found at Rugby, and his experience seemed to be that of many others, that the falling-off in the number of students of these instruments was such as to threaten the existence of the school orchestra. The proposition of Mr. E. L. Price, 'that a new School Song-book is greatly needed,' was carried. Mr. Price said that he had found school concerts of great use in making the music-master known to all the boys; it was the only part of the music that was not resented by other members of the staff. He thought a book to include national songs, general boys' songs, and poetic songs, in such a form that each school could have their own local songs bound up with it, would meet a great want. A committee of the Union was requested to report upon the possibility of preparing a song-book.

CORONATION MUSIC.

The Form and Order of Service. Recommended for use in Churches of the Church of England throughout His Majesty's Empire, on Thursday, June 26, 1902, being the Coronation Day of their Majesties King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

A Selection of Music. For use at Coronation Services.

Coronation Marches. For the Pianoforte, selected and arranged by H. Elliot Button. Books 1 and 2.

Coronation Song Book. For Children's Festivals.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The 'Form and Order of Service,' issued by command of the King for Coronation Services, here appears in an edition with music in two forms. No. 1 includes Tallis's Responses, Sullivan's Introit, Wesley's Creed in E, Stainer's Sanctus and Gloria from the Service in A, and his sevenfold Amen, in addition to the threefold Amen of Gibbons, and five hymns suitable to the occasion. The contents of No. 2 edition are identical with that already referred to so far as the prayers are concerned; but, while it contains some of the music of No. 1, simpler strains have been selected for the Creed, Sanctus and Gloria from the Service in B flat by the late Sir John Stainer. The advantages accruing from having the complete form of service, prayers as well as music, within one cover are obvious.

The 'Selection of Music' compiled for use at Coronation Services in churches and chapels in which the official 'Form and order' is not adopted leads off with Smart's Te Deum in F, which is followed by Goss's anthem, 'The King shall rejoice,' Elvey's anthem, 'I was glad,' seven appropriate hymns and tunes (old and new), Elgar's arrangement of 'God save the King,' and two settings of the Amen—the sevenfold of Stainer and the threefold of Orlando Gibbons. An edition in the tonic sol-fa notation is also issued of this useful collection, which, it may be observed, is suitable for all occasions.

The two books of Coronation Marches contain in all seventeen martial compositions by various composers, ancient and modern, all of which have been suitably arranged by Mr. H. Elliot Button in a manner such as not to unduly tax the technical attainments of performers. A good march is for all time, and therefore the contents of this collection will serve a useful purpose long after the great event so near at hand shall have become a memory.

The Coronation Song Book opens with a march, probably by way of prelude to the remaining thirteen vocal pieces, nearly all of which appear in unison form. All tastes and national sentiments are provided for in a book that bears upon it the stamp of popularity.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Spring is coming. Scherzo for the Pianoforte, by Landon Ronald. [Metzler and Co.]

Mr. Ronald's music indicates the liveliest faith in the advent of a blithesome Spring, the only suggestiveness of an east wind being two episodical passages in 5-4 time. Brightly played the music would scarcely fail to make a pleasing impression.

Moments at the Pianoforte: Cloud and Sunshine; Pleading. By Edward Sharp. [Weekes and Co.]

The 'characteristic sketches' designation of these short pieces may be said to be justified. In the first of the set, the 'Cloud' would seem to be a summer one, and by the tempo of the music, one that passes quickly. It is in fact a minor cloud, and serves to enhance the brightness of the major sunshine. Pianists with emotional temperaments will find Pleading to their tastes. The request, whatever it may be, is preferred with considerable ardour, so much so, indeed, that the music seems to represent at the close the exhaustion consequent upon intensity.

SONGS.

Five Songs. Words by H. E. Henderson, music composed by James Lyon. Op. 19.
Four Songs of the Sea. Words and music by Roger C. Quilter. Op. 1. [Forsyth Bros.]

Mr. Lyon writes gratefully for the voice; moreover, his accompaniments are interesting and artistic. The words of the first song, 'When thou art kind,' have an old-time ring about them which is pleasingly echoed by the music. The setting of 'Woo me only' is somewhat too smooth for the sentiment of the lines, for the lady demands that her swain's words should 'throb with truth . . . . and undying love,' and so on. The third song, 'Love's threshold,' may be described as an analysis of love at first sight. An expressive singer could make much of this ditty. No. 4, called 'A Greeting,' is also very pleasing, and the last song of the series, entitled 'Thanksgiving,' could be made very effective by a vocalist possessing dramatic perception.

Words of encouragement should be extended to Mr. Quilter for his 'Four Songs of the Sea,' which show poetical fancy combined with a gift to invent appropriate and pleasing melody. The songs, which are little more than leaflets, may be described as meditations by the 'sad sea waves,' but are by no means melancholy. They are moderate in compass, and easy to sing and play.

The Wolf. Glee for Men's Voices. Composed by Charles E. Tinney. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Tinney has set the familiar lines by John O'Keefe with an eye to dramatic effect; some of the rapid changes from ff to pp savour of the sensational, and it might be urged that a burglar would not bid his victims to be silent forte, but apart from these defects, which can be easily palliated by the conductor, Mr. Tinney's music echoes the sentiments of the text faithfully and effectively, and a well-trained body of altos, first and second tenors and basses would certainly be able to hold the attention of an audience, and probably engender in the nervous a shudder at possibilities on their reaching home.

Obituary.

JAMES HIGGS.

We regret to record the death of Dr. JAMES HIGGS, which occurred at his residence, 145, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, on April 26, aged seventy-three years. Dr. Higgs, who was born in Lambeth, in 1829, studied under his father, an amateur of ability. He succeeded the late Dr. Wylde as organist of Eaton Chapel in 1844, and in the following year, on the secession of his brother Marcellus Higgs, he became organist of St. Benet and St. Peter, Paul's Wharf. His successive organ appointments were St. Mark's, Kennington, 1852-64, St. Michael's, Stockwell, 1864-7, and for twenty-eight years of St. Andrew's, Holborn, 1867 to 1895, when he retired from playing in public. Dr. Higgs was connected with the Royal College of Organists almost from its foundation in 1864, and frequently acted as examiner. An original member of the Musical Association, he succeeded the late Charles Salaman as hon. secretary in 1877, and held the post for six years. He read two instructive papers before the Association—on 'Bach's Art of Fugue,' in 1877, and 'Samuel Wesley: his life, times, and influence on music,' in 1894. He was the author of two useful primers—Fugue, and Modulation. In collaboration with Sir Frederick Bridge he edited 'Bach's Organ Music,' and he was the editor of a collection of two-part Solfeggi in Novello's Primer Series. The deceased musician graduated Mus. Bac., Oxon., in 1874, and his well-deserved doctor's degree was conferred upon him by the Archbishop of Canterbury. In 1883 he was appointed a professor at the Royal College of Music. He was for many years connected with Trinity College (London), and in 1900 he received the appointment of Dean of the Faculty of Music, University of London. Dr. Higgs will be long remembered for his thoroughness as a teacher and for his kindly nature—qualities possessed by him in no small degree, and to which the present writer, one of his old pupils, bears full and grateful testimony.

LOWER RHENISH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS AT DÜSSELDORF AND RICHARD STRAUSS ON ENGLISH MUSIC.

'I raise my glass to the welfare and success of the first English Progressivist, Meister Edward Elgar, and of the young progressive School of English composers.' With these words the greatest living German composer, Richard Strauss, closed a memorable speech delivered at the 'Festessen,' in the Düsseldorf Tonhalle, at the conclusion of the Seventy-ninth Lower Rhenish Musical Festival. The speech, spoken in clear, ringing tones that carried conviction to all who heard it, was sprung upon the assembly as a complete surprise; for the list of official, i.e., expected, toasts had already been exhausted, and everybody, including Professor Julius Buths (the excellent conductor of the Festival), Dr. Elgar, Herr Hofkapellmeister Strauss himself, the soloists, orchestra, chorus, visitors, ladies, and others, had already been toasted by more or less eloquent and humorous speakers.

The generous words of the most distinguished living German musician were received with real enthusiasm by the assembled musicians and dilettanti; but the few English visitors present were filled with delight at the unexpected great honour paid to their gifted countryman. 'The Dream of Gerontius' had on the previous evening been given a superb and brilliantly successful performance, under that truly progressive and broad-minded German musician, Julius Buths, the first to practically demonstrate what a rich treasure of inspired and original music Englishmen possess in this noble work.

The Festival was in almost every respect one of great artistic excellence. To commence with, the programme contained nothing which did not deserve the epithet of 'masterpiece,' including Bach at his sublimest, as in the B minor Mass, and in his frolicsome mood, as displayed in the beautiful and very humorous Dramma per musica, 'The contest between Phœbus and Pan.' The former colossal masterpiece—'the Cologne Cathedral translated into music,' as a German critic has called it—formed the first evening's programme on Whit-Sunday. A chorus of nearly 500 voices sang the wonderful music with true Bach enthusiasm, expressively and devoutly. The orchestra, in which the small high D trumpets rang with the greatest possible effect, consisted of over 120 players, and the soloists were Frau Dr. A. Noordevier-Reddingius, of Amsterdam, Miss Muriel Foster, of London, Herr Franz Litzinger, of Düsseldorf, and Professor J. M. Messchaert, of Wiesbaden. Of these, Miss Foster had by far the greatest success; in fact, it is my pleasing duty to record that she was one of the surprises, not to say sensations, of the Festival. Quite unheralded by the vicious puff preliminary, this young and gifted Englishwoman sang herself into the hearts (as the Germans would say) of the Festival audience. Apart from Miss Foster's singing, the deepest effect was, as usual, made by the chain of choruses beginning with the 'Sanctus,' and counting amongst its links some of the most stupendous and overwhelming revelations in the divinest of all arts. The whole performance was alive and moving. The old cantor stood before us a real man, great of heart and truly inspired of soul.

The programme of the second concert was 'progressive' in a particular sense, in that it consisted of Dr. Elgar's 'Gerontius' and Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony. Of Professor Buths's reading of our countryman's 'meisterwerk' (to quote Richard Strauss), I spoke after its performance at Düsseldorf in December last. That the increased orchestra and chorus, as well as their greater familiarity with the music, added enormously to the effect of the magnificent choral numbers, goes without saying. The work was immediately recognised by the many musicians present from far and near as one of remarkable originality, surpassing beauty, and genuine worth. Professor Buths conducted with a whole-hearted enthusiasm and a conspicuous appreciation of its beauties. The fortunate composer was called to the platform again and again after both parts and cheered to the echo. No greater success, I was told, has been achieved by a new choral work of similar dimensions at these Festivals within living memory, and a great triumph for English music can thus be chronicled. The soloists were Miss Muriel Foster, who gave a distinguished and impressive reading of the part of the Angel, Dr. Ludwig Wüllner, of whom I wrote enthusiastically last December, and can now speak with similar enthusiasm, and Professor Messchaert, a rare artist, by whom, for the first time, I heard the parts of the Priest and the Angel of the Agony sung with the requisite dignity, pathos, and purity of intonation.

Of Liszt's Symphony, perhaps the greatest, as it is certainly one of the most intrinsically beautiful and genius-like of all his orchestral works, I can only find space to say that Richard Strauss secured a superb interpretation of the music.

The final day of the Festival must be dismissed with a few words. After a virile performance of Beethoven's "No. 5" under Professor Buths's inspiriting guidance, Mdlle. Marcella Pregi sang Mozart's Recitative and Rondo 'Ch'io mi scordi di te?' with accompaniment for pianoforte obbligato (played by Professor Buths) and orchestra; Professor Leopold Auer, of St. Petersburg, played Brahms's Violin concerto with great breadth and dignity; and Richard Strauss followed with the great love duet, 'Feuersnoth! Minnegebot!' from his new opera 'Feuersnoth,' recently produced at Dresden. Here was progressive music with a vengeance! The difficulties of the vocal and instrumental parts are only matched by the daring and newness of the whole conception. The thing carries one along on a powerful and irresistible current of individual melody (for it is, or in a few years' time will be recognised as, melody!) and the most glowing, original orchestral accompaniment imaginable. The soloists were Herr Carl Scheidemantel and Frau Elsa Hensel-Schweitzer, both excellent singers; the lady especially has a delightfully pure and clear voice, which she manages like a true artist.

Bach's aforementioned humorous cantata closed the Festival. In this, Professor Messchaert 'brought down the house' with the very comic song 'Zum Tanze, zum Sprunge,' while Mdlle. Pregi had to repeat the merry air 'Patron, das macht der Wind,' which she sang quite delightfully. Other parts were taken by Herren Dr. Wüllner (who was in excellent voice), Litzinger, and Scheidemantel.

After the concert the Festival Supper mentioned at the head of this article took place, and a delighful function it was. Nothing could have exceeded the kindness of our reception everywhere, or the warmth with which Richard Strauss's toast of Elgar and the young progressive English School, already referred to, was received. The reply to this toast was spoken for Dr. Elgar by Mr. Arthur Johnstone, of the Manchester Guardian, who also replied for the English visitors.

Finally, it behoves me to place on record the grateful thanks of the English visitors for many great kindnesses received at the hands of Professor Buths, and the gentlemen of the committee, especially Herren Rittmeister von Weise, Rektor H. Steinert, and Arthur Modes. To two men is the honour of this, the Seventy-ninth Lower Rhenish Musical Festival, due—Edward Elgar and Julius Buths.

A. J. J.

THE LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Though the programme of the London Musical Festival, which took place at the Queen's Hall during the week beginning April 28, contained very little that was new, it presented some familiar things in a new light. This was owing to the presence of some eminent conductors, whose strong individualities were impressed on all the music they directed. First there was Mr. Henry J. Wood, who conducted two concerts. Concerning his reading of Tschaïkowsky's Fourth and Sixth Symphonies there is of course nothing new to say, but it must be put down to his credit that he obtained a very fine and warmly-coloured interpretation of Richard Strauss's symphonic poem, 'Don Juan,' a repeated hearing of which convinces one that this is not merely exceedingly clever music, but that it is infused with the vitality which only genius can supply. Then M. Ysaye had a programme to himself, and gave a reading of Beethoven's C minor Symphony that was not marked by any very subtle touches, but was eminently strong, broad, and sane. He made more than usual of the difference in character between the two subjects of the Andante, made a similar distinction between the Scherzo and Trio, and increased the weight of tone in the Finale by bringing in four extra horns, all devices quite legitimate in principle and, on the whole, effective in practice. Two concerts were conducted by Mr. Weingartner, whose reading of the 'Eroica' failed to convince the hearer as much as his performance of the C minor did a year ago. Generally speaking he is a singularly reticent conductor, whose 'readings' are anything but sensational, but in this case he inclined to exaggeration. One could appreciate his motive in making a distinction between the solemn funeral march and the hope-inspired trio, but he carried the contrast to such a pitch that the continuous swing of the music was in danger of being lost, and it was at times hurried so much that its essential character was changed. The last movement, which so often suffers from being treated not quite seriously, was given with exceptional power and dignity. In Brahms's Second Symphony Mr. Weingartner was at his best, and he gave a most sympathetic reading of the music, bringing out its beautiful details with great clearness and refinement. He also appeared as a composer, introducing a symphonic poem based on the tragedy of 'King Lear.' It is a work of brilliant cleverness; programme music to the extent of following with perfect fidelity the broad lines of the plot, yet so fine and well balanced in construction that it passes muster when regarded as absolute music. Its intellectual interest is great; what it lacks is emotional power to touch the heart. Save the theme which typifies Cordelia, in which this touch of human sympathy can be detected, the themes seem to lack spontaneity. There was more of this essential vitality in another comparative novelty, a concert-arrangement of Mr. Percy Pitt's 'Paolo and Francesa' music, which was conducted by Mr. Wood at the first concert of the Festival. It is strenuous, intensely dramatic in feeling, and thoroughly adapted for association with a tragic drama, but it suffered in being presented as a concert piece, for which it lacks variety and balanced construction. For this purpose it should be rather more carefully put together.

The sensation of the Festival was the appearance of Mr. Nikisch, the Gewandhaus conductor, who has not been in London for several years. Since his last appearance he has developed his resources. He was always a master of refined detail, but a trifle cold, and perhaps 'finnicking'; now he has added fire and force to his qualities. His powers were strikingly displayed in Tschaïkowsky's E minor Symphony, the dramatic contrasts and warm, passionate melody of which were made manifest by a superb performance. Perhaps even more striking was the effect he produced, by entirely legitimate means, with such well-worn works as the 'Meistersinger' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures. The polyphony of the one was brought out with extraordinary clearness, the energy of the other was fully realised, and one hardly knew whether to admire most the power of the conductor or the adaptability of the orchestra that could accomplish such finished results after a single rehearsal. At the final concert, M. Saint-Saëns conducted some of his compositions, including the overture to his latest opera, 'Les Barbares,' not very distinguished music, and in construction somewhat 'panoramic.'

The instrumental soloists were M. Ysaye, who played Beethoven's Violin Concerto superbly; M. Busoni, who was equally successful in Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Concerto; Mr. Becker, and Mr. Mark Hambourg, whose dashing bravura had a suitable field for display in Tschaïkowsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto. The vocalists were Miss Blauvelt, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Alice Nielsen, Madame Clara Butt, Miss Kirkby Lunn, and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies.

THE OPERA.

The season at Covent Garden opened on the 8th ult. with 'Lohengrin,' and bids fair to be memorable for social brilliancy rather than musical progressiveness.

The Syndicate had not been idle during the recess in its work of beautifying and improving the theatre. New scenery was ordered for a considerable number of operas, and all the new stage pictures seen so far have been excellently artistic and greatly advantageous to the total effect. In 'Lohengrin,' Mr. Harker's 'Plain by the Scheldt' and his 'Courtyard of the Citadel' are original and striking from the brightness of their colour scheme. The tradition that Wagner required sombre, even muddy, backgrounds was becoming quite oppressive, and it is good to find a man with courage to break away from it. It is true that the scene in Act II. somewhat reminds one, as a contemporary happily remarked, of a parish mortuary—but that is rather the fault of the mortuaries, and is one of the penalties of archæological accuracy. Mr. Bruce Smith is responsible for the excellent new scenery in 'Die Walküre.' The second scene is specially good, and for once the fight between Siegmund and Hunding was intelligible and visible.

The first few weeks of the season are always made the occasion for débuts of new singers. Of those heard so far, the most successful has undoubtedly been Signor Caruso, who is that rarest of things, a real lyrical tenor. To a fine voice he adds an excellent method; for though his voice is big he can make it move with the greatest agility. He had up to the time of writing been heard only as the Duke in 'Rigoletto,' but in that part he was extremely successful. Herr Pennarini, of Hamburg, is a typical German Heldentenor, and has been heard as Lohengrin, Siegmund, and Siegfried. He has a fairly sympathetic voice, but uses it in too German a way to be quite successful as a singer. He is a capable actor, but his lack of dignity and distinction makes his Lohengrin the least satisfactory of his impersonations. Herr Kraemer-Helm, of Mayence, is a more sympathetic singer and a more refined actor, but unfortunately his physique is too small for Covent Garden. Frau Lohse, of Strasburg, the wife of the conductor, is an extremely sympathetic artist of no little originality. She makes up in charm for what she lacks in power, and her graceful and youthful appearance is no small help to her. Both as Elisabeth in 'Tannhäuser,' and as Sieglinde in 'Die Walküre,' she made an excellent impression. Lastly, Fräulein Fremstadt is an artist of considerable power.

The chief performances up to the time of writing remain to be briefly chronicled. On May 8, in 'Lohengrin' Madame Nordica was the Elsa, and sang with her usual beauty of method and expression. Herr van Rooy was superb as Telramund, while Madame Kirkby Lunn was satisfactory as Ortrud. Herr Blass was a good King, and of Herr Pennarini mention has already been made. On the following night, in 'Roméo et Juliette,' Madame Suzanne Adams and M. Saleza returned to us in good voice, and both were very successful. The splendid voice and method of M. Plançon as Frère Laurent, were as invaluable as ever, and MM. Gilibert, Colsaux, and Seveilhac were also in the cast. Mdlle. Helian, a new-comer, was a graceful Page. The French chorus is better than the German one. On the 9th, in 'Tannhäuser,' M. Plançon as the Landgrave was the mainstay of the whole performance. Besides Frau Lohse and Herr Kraemer-Helm, the cast included Miss Susan Strong, an able Venus (able is hardly the epithet one would apply to an ideal Venus), and M. Renaud, who sang the music of Wolfram admirably. On the 11th, Madame Suzanne Adams, M. Saleza, and M. Plançon undertook in their familiar manner the chief parts in 'Faust,' with Signor Scotti as an excellent Valentine. The performance of 'Rigoletto' on the following night was notable for the rentrée of Madame Melba, who sang the music of Gilda with all her wonted brillancy, but an occasional slight hardness of the higher notes; for the already-discussed début of Signor Caruso, and, above all, for M. Renaud's Rigoletto, a performance of striking beauty and power both vocally and histrionically. Madame Kirkby Lunn as Maddalena and M. Journet as Sparafucile gave very useful help. On the 15th, in 'Die Walküre,' Herr van Rooy was again unapproachable as Wotan, and Madame Nordica's Brünnhilde has its familiar merits and shortcomings. Histrionically her performance showed more warmth and conviction than usual. Herr Blass was excellent as Hunding, and Herr Pennarini and Frau Lohse were Siegmund and Sieglinde with results already stated. On the following night there was a good all-round performance of 'Carmen,' with Madame Zélie de Lussan as Carmen and M. Saleza as Don José. These are familiar impersonations, as are the Toreador of Signor Scotti and the Micaela of Madame Suzanne Adams.

COMPETITIONS.

YORK.

The 'Yorkshire Choral and Instrumental Competitions' were held in York, on April 22 and 23, and proved highly interesting from an educational point of view. Indeed, these competitions proved their usefulness in very striking fashion, for the choral performances, and especially those of the children, reached a higher standard than in any former year. The vocal material in the North and East Ridings, to which the York competitions chiefly appeal, is notoriously inferior in stamina to that of the West Riding. How thoroughly practical these competitions are was shown by the prominence given to sight-reading, which is, as may readily be understood, by no means a popular part of the event to those for whose benefit it is intended. The village choirs demonstrated its necessity by the imperfection of their efforts, which showed that some of the time they might have spent on rudiments had been given up too exclusively to the preparation of set-pieces. Sight-reading was also made an obligatory addendum to the madrigal competition, the chief event of the series, and here it was satisfactory to notice what excellent and even results were obtained. How high a level was attained may be realised from the fact that, out of a possible sixty, Dr. McNaught awarded one choir fifty-four marks; two obtained fifty a-piece, and two others forty. And it was no less satisfactory that in singing the test-piece, the madrigal, 'Why weep, alas, my lady love?' the same order was observed, thus showing that artistic feeling and musicianship went hand in hand. The choirs that most distinguished themselves were the Priory Street Society, under Mr. J. Forster, the Centenary Chapel choir, under Mr. M. Rymer, and Monk Fryston choir, under Mr. D. Morris. Another very practical feature was the class for singing hymns and chanting psalms, which induced the village choirs that took part to pay more attention than they otherwise might to a much neglected but important branch of church music.

The chief feature of the York Competitions was the singing of the School Choirs. When a hardened and experienced judge like Dr. McNaught could declare that he had never heard better school-singing, its high order of merit may be imagined. Speaking generally, the great virtue of the singing consisted in the beauty of tone produced. Instead of the forced tone one so often hears from carelessly or injudiciously taught children, and especially boys, the tone was always pleasant, easy, and musical.

The instrumental classes, which were judged by Mr. Arthur Bent, were of rather uneven merit. Here the juvenile performers were not so conspicuous for their excellence, the violinists being poor, though the violoncellists were good. The most interesting class was that in which a Pianoforte Trio by Reissiger (Op. 186) was played by two parties in a style more than creditable to amateurs, and so even that the task of judging between them must have been an exceedingly difficult one.

Some of the combined performances of the choirs, under the spirited conducting of Miss Mary Egerton, the lady to whose energy and faith the festival may be said to owe its existence, were excellent. The children sang Canon Torrance's prize 'Children's Coronation Song,' and the adults a fine unaccompanied anthem, 'Fierce was the wild billow,' by Mr. Tertius Noble, who by his presence showed his sympathy with the aims of the festival.

A very successful competition—now annual—was again held on April 26 and 28 at Malvern. This interesting event was initiated by Lady Mary Lygon, who, with Dr. Elgar and Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, conducted the final evening concert, at which the sacred cantata, 'Emmaus,' by the organist of Gloucester Cathedral, was performed. Dr. W. G. McNaught adjudicated.

The Wensleydale Tournament of Song—successfully held on the 14th and 15th ult.—together with that of Swaledale (to be held on the 4th and 5th inst.), will be noticed next month.

The competitions at Morecambe, Shepton Mallet, and Spilsby are noticed on pages 388 and 386.

THE FEIS CEOIL.

(BY OUR DUBLIN CORRESPONDENT.)

The sixth Feis Ceoil was held in Dublin on the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th ult., when the public interest in this instructive and interesting Irish Musical Festival proved to be greater than ever.

During the week four concerts were given. The music at the first, on the 5th ult., consisted almost entirely of old Irish airs, arranged both for solos and chorus; of the former the vocal suite 'Roseen dhu,' arranged by Signor Esposito, was the most important; of the latter, two melodies, 'The harvest rose' and 'O'Sullivan Mor,' arranged by Dr. Jozé, deserve especial mention. Mr. Brendan Rogers and Dr. Jozé conducted the choir, and Signor Esposito, Dr. Jozé, and Mr. C. W. Wilson were the accompanists.

At the orchestral and choral concert on Wednesday evening the principal prize compositions were performed. Of these, first place must be given to Signor Esposito's 'Irish' Symphony, a masterly work of very great power and beauty. Of the four movements the Scherzo, a most inspiriting jig, is, at first hearing, the most attractive. The Symphony was received with great enthusiasm by a large audience.

Next in order of merit comes Mr. F. Muspratt's 'Hymn of St. Patrick,' for baritone solo, quartet, chorus, organ and strings. The music is admirably written, and quite worthy to stand beside the noble words of our national saint. The five-part fugue with which the work ends proved particularly effective, despite a want of certainty on the part of the choir. The composer, who conducted with marked ability, was several times recalled at the close. Dr. Collisson's cantata 'Samhain' unfortunately received a very slipshod performance. Two airs, arranged by Dr. Jozé as part-songs, 'A lament' and 'When thro' life unblest we rove,' and an overture, 'The songs of the Naiads,' by Mr. Brendan Rogers, completed the scheme. Mr. Brendan Rogers, Dr. Jozé, Mr. F. Muspratt, and Signor Esposito were the conductors.

On Thursday afternoon a concert of chamber music was given, at which the prize string quartet by Mr. H. Hamilton Harty was played. The programme also included a suite on Irish airs for string quartet, by Mr. H. Bast. The performers were Messrs. Arthur Darley (first violin), B. J. Griffith (second violin), O. Grisard (viola), and H. Bast (violoncello).

On Thursday evening, instead of a concert the competition for Commercial Choirs was held. This contest excited the keenest interest, as it was the first of its kind promoted by the Feis executive. The movement has been organised amongst the large firms of our city, and the members of each choir must be boná-fide employés of the firm in whose name the choir is entered. There were three divisions: choirs of mixed voices, male voices, and female voices respectively. There were six entries for the first, three for the second, and four for the third class. Considering that the choirs have only been in existence for about six months at longest, the result has been very satisfactory, and is certainly most encouraging to the promoters of this new and important branch of choral singing. The judges were Mr. Ivor Atkins and Mr. Simon Speelman.

On Friday and Saturday evenings there were concerts, at which the prize-winners at the various competitions performed. At the latter concert the principal items were performances by the massed commercial choirs, under the conductorship of Mr. Brendan Rogers.

Throughout the week competitions were held for solo singing, trio, quartet, and chorus singing, pianoforte, organ, violin, and violoncello playing (senior and junior), viola, pianoforte, violin, and violoncello trio, string quartet, &c. In all the competitions the general standard was very good, notably in the instrumental sections. The judges were—for Singing: Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan; Pianoforte: Mr. Oscar Beringer; Violin and Violoncello: Mr. Simon Speelman; Organ and Choral Music: Mr. Ivor Atkins; Wind Instruments: Mr. Ord Hume.

NORTH DEVON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The first North Devon Musical Festival, held at Ilfracombe on the 21st ult., was a brilliant success. In the afternoon 'The Ascension,' an oratorio, written by Dr. H. J. Edwards, of Barnstable, as his degree exercise in 1885, was produced under the conductorship of the composer, who, two years ago, considerably altered the work, adding a new dramatic chorus. The Festival choir, numbering 270 voices, and drawn from Barnstable, Ilfracombe, Bideford, South Molton, Northam, and Lynton, was admirably balanced and sang with wonderful spirit and precision. The soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. H. Beaumont, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. The orchestra, led by Mr. Pardew, of Plymouth, was very efficient. In the evening a fine rendering of 'Elijah' was given under the conductorship of Mr. J. T. Gardner, of Ilfracombe, in which the chorus singing was remarkably good. The Festival was so successful that it may possibly become a regular feature of musical life in North Devon.

London Concerts and Lectures.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

In spite of its traditional orthodoxy the Philharmonic audience is ever ready to render homage to a 'star,' and consequently it was not surprising to find Queen's Hall crowded on the 15th ult, when so brilliant a luminary in the musical firmament as M Kubelik made his first appearance at these concerts. He was scarcely wise, however, in choosing to be heard in Beethoven's Concerto, for at present, at least, his talents consist more in marvellous executive skill than in the power of expressing deep sentiment. As a reading his interpretation was superficial, and little more can be said than that it showed refined feeling. The orchestral works selected included four movements from Mozart's music to the ballet pantomime 'Les petits Riens,' produced in Paris in 1778. These excerpts, simple as they are, possess the graceful melodiousness and light-hearted gaiety which distinguish so much of Mozart's music. They were beautifully played under Dr. Cowen's direction, as also were the conductor's fascinating 'Butterfly's Ball' Overture and Tschaïkowsky's Symphony in E minor. The vocalist was Miss Macintyre.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

Distinction was given to the opening concert at St. James's Hall, on the 12th ult., by the first appearance in England of M. Fritz Kreisler, yet another Hungarian violinist, who also chose Beethoven's Concerto for his début in this country. The new-comer produced a pure and sweet tone from his instrument, and although failing to give the impression of being a great executant, he played with an intelligence, tenderness of expression, and skill which excited interest and held attention. The most important orchestral works were the Meistersinger Overture and Brahms's C minor Symphony, both of which were interpreted in Dr. Richter's most convincing manner.

THE ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE AND ACADEMY OF MUSIC FOR THE BLIND.

The concert given at Queen's Hall, on April 25, was honoured by the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the latter of whom graciously received purses in aid of the funds of this excellent institution. The musical interest and high standard of interpretation associated with the concerts of these sightless musicians was fully maintained. The programme included two unfamiliar things—e.g., Mendelssohn's 'Saviour of Sinners' and Gade's 'Spring Fantasia' (Op. 23), for solo voices, pianoforte, and orchestra, in addition to the first movement of Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, played by Master Leonard Pegg; the last movement of Guilmant's Symphony for organ and orchestra in D minor, No. 1 (Op. 42), played by Mr. Thomas Gregory; Chopin's Rondo in C (Op. 73), for two pianofortes (Miss Mabel Davies and Miss Emily Lucas); two delightful old madrigals 'The silver swan' (Gibbons) and 'All creatures now are merry minded' (Benet); and last, but not least, Sir Hubert Parry's ever-welcome 'Blest pair of sirens,' conducted by the composer. Owing to the regrettable absence of Mr. August Manns—a true friend of the College—from illness, the duties of conductor were shared between Sir Hubert Parry and Dr. W. H. Cummings. When it is remembered that the whole of the above selection had to be memorised by the performers from Norwood, the results are highly creditable to the pupils themselves and to the excellent training they receive under Dr. Campbell's clever supervision.

A SONATA CONCERT.

Admirers of classical chamber music were afforded a treat at St. James's Hall on the 13th ult., when Dr. Joachim and Miss Fanny Davies gave a 'Sonata Concert.' The works selected were the sonatas for violin and pianoforte by Beethoven (Op. 96) and Brahms (Op. 78), both in the key of G, and Schumann's in D minor. All of these, it need scarcely be said, were interpreted with scrupulous regard to the intentions of the composers. Miss Fanny Davies contributed, as pianoforte solos, a fugue in E minor, by Handel, and a Toccata and Ground, by Purcell, and Dr. Joachim gave a very fine reading of Bach's 'Chaconne.'

Since the first appearance of M. Kocian in England, in December last, the gifted young violinist has shown steady advance in his art, and proof of this was given at his recital, on the 10th ult., at St. James's Hall, when, ably assisted by Miss Marguerite Elzy at the pianoforte, he played with great sympathy and refinement Grieg's Sonata in C minor, and subsequently rendered with fluency and charm solo pieces by Cesar Cui and Bach. He gave a second recital with equal success on the 22nd ult.

Record is certainly due of the début of Miss Mabel Monteith, a young pianist, aged 21, who for the past twelve years has studied at the Guildhall School of Music. Miss Monteith began on the 1st ult. a series of six pianoforte recitals, the third of which took place on the 20th ult. In these she has shown such remarkable executive command, and so much real feeling in her playing, that very bright hopes may be entertained of her future. At the first and third concert she was assisted by an orchestra, skilfully conducted by Herr Arthur Friedheim.

Miss Jessie Grimson's excellent string quartet party gave an enjoyable concert, on the 16th ult., at Bechstein Hall. The programme included Schubert's posthumous quartet in D minor, which was admirably interpreted, and a manuscript quartet in B flat, not previously performed, by Mr. Frank Bridge, the second violinist of the party. The quartet is well designed and testifies to musicianly feeling and skill, but is a work greater in promise than achievement. Songs were pleasingly sung by Miss Delia Mason, who was sympathetically accompanied by Miss Amy Grimson.

A few lines are merited concerning the finished part-singing by the Magpie Madrigal Society at its concert, conducted by Mr. Lionel S. Benson, on the 14th ult., at St. James's Hall. The admirable selection of madrigals and glees included two most interesting settings, severally by Claude Lejeune and Orlando di Lasso, of an old Italian folk-song, entitled, 'O occhi manza mia,' the former first published in 1586 in a Parisian collection, entitled 'Meslanges de la Musique,' and the latter taken from a 'Libro di Villanelle maesche el altré Canzoni,' also published in Paris, but five years earlier. The soloists were Mr. Leonard Borwick, Miss Hope Morgan, and Mr. J. Campbell McInnes.

Madame Chaminade's annual concert took place on the 5th ult., at St. James's Hall, and was distinguished by the production of a considerable number of new songs and pianoforte pieces from her pen, and her own appearance as composer, pianist, and accompanist. The most pleasing of the new songs was 'Fleur du Matin,' and the pianoforte piece most favourably received was a 'Quartrième Valse,' the music of these being admirable examples of the gifted lady's melodic fluency and dainty style.

Recognition is due of the enterprise of the Handel Society, which on the 6th ult., at the Queen's Hall, gave the first performance in England of Herr Engelbert Humperdinck's setting of Uhland's ballad, 'Das Glück von Edenhall,' one of the works by which Herr Humperdinck was chiefly known before he composed 'Hänsel und Gretel.' A choral piece, entitled 'Ave Cæsar,' by Mr. H. F. Birch-Reynardson, was sung for the first time and proved of considerable musical interest. Mr. J. S. Liddle conducted, and the organ was safe in the hands of Mr. E. G. Croager.

M. Kubelik gave the first of two concerts on the 21st ult. at St. James's Hall. For these performances he had brought with him an orchestra of fifty-five picked instrumentalists from Prague, under the direction of M. Oscar Nedbal, who accompanied the Hungarian virtuoso in Mozart's Concerto in D and in Wieniawski's 'Faust' Fantasia. In both these works M. Kubelik was heard at his best and played with refined expressiveness, and in the florid passages with the greatest brilliancy. Pianoforte solos were contributed by Herr Rudolf Friml.

The programme of Mr. Whitney Tew's vocal recital on the 21st ult. at Bechstein Hall, was distinguished, as on previous occasions, by comprehensiveness of selection and good taste. He was most successful in his renderings of 'When I was a page,' from Verdi's 'Falstaff,' Dr. Villiers Stanford's 'The Battle of Pelusium,' and Franz's 'Aus meinen grossen Schmerzen.' Miss Dora Robinson played the accompaniments.

LECTURES.

The lectures on musical subjects during the past month have been not only varied, but practical and interesting. On the 7th ult., at Trinity College (London), Dr. Charles W. Pearce delivered the second of the Queen Victoria Lectures, the subject, admirably and thoroughly treated, being 'English Church Music: past, present, and future.' At the monthly meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians (London Section), held at 20, Hanover Square, on the 10th ult., Mr. John E. Borland discoursed on 'Orchestral and choral balance,' with Professor Prout in the chair. 'Sidelights on Tallis' formed the subject of the paper read by Mr. R. R. Terry before the Musical Association on the 13th ult., of which not the least interesting features were the illustrations from unpublished compositions of the great sixteenth-century composer of church music.

Honourable mention must be made of the three lectures delivered by Dr. Frank J. Sawyer at the Royal College of Organists, on April 19, 26, and May 3, on 'Extempore playing.' Novelty characterised these dissertations in the musical illustrations, on both pianoforte and organ, contributed by Mr. E. Silas, Mr. G. F. Vincent, Mr. Walter G. Alcock, Mr. J. F. Barnett, Dr. Huntley, Mr. Wolstenholme, Mr. W. Macduff, Professor Prout (who extemporised a Sonata in four movements upon given themes!), Dr. C. W. Pearce, Dr. E. H. Turpin, Mr. G. Dyson, and the lecturer—a noble army of extemporisers whose achievements lent additional interest to a most successful series of discourses.

Choral and Orchestral Societies.

The Wimbledon Philharmonic Society provided an interesting programme at their concert on the 14th ult., the orchestra performing Three pieces (Allemande—Sarabande—Cebell) by Purcell, Bach's Concerto in F, for soli violin, trumpet, flute, and oboe with string orchestra, and 'A Portrait,' orchestral piece by G. Coleman Young. The choir and orchestra joined forces in Gade's 'Spring's Message,' and Elgar's cantata, 'The Banner of St. George.' Both choir and orchestra displayed a marked improvement over previous performances, and were ably conducted by Mr. Coleman Young. Miss Margaret Cooper and Mr. Ivor Foster were the vocalists, and the solo instrumentalists in the Bach Concerto were Miss Henrietta Godwin, Mr. Walter Morrow, Mr. Eli Hudson, and Mr. Herbert Goldie.

The Devonshire Square Church Choral Society gave their last concert this season on the 17th ult., when Gaul's 'Holy City' and selections from Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' were performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Simons, Miss Alice Stroud, Mr. W. H. Fothergill, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Miss Edith Wells presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Louis F. Goodwin at the organ. Mr. G. Ernest Arundel conducted. We regret to state that Mr. Goodwin's name was inadvertently given as Goodman on p. 330 of last month's issue.

One of the earliest of numerous Coronation concerts was given by the Ealing Philharmonic Society, at the Victoria Hall, on April 23. The programme included Tschaïkowsky's 'Casse Noisette' Suite, Stanford's choral ballad 'The Last Post,' and the 'Valse des Sylphes' from Berlioz's 'Faust'; while the specially appropriate pieces were Handel's 'Zadok the Priest' and 'Hallelujah Chorus,' German's Coronation March, and a new Coronation March by Mr. E. Victor Williams, the conductor of the Society. The playing of the orchestra throughout was highly commendable, and the little the choir had to do was well done.

The Psalmody and Choral Class at Union Chapel, Islington, brought their season to a close on the 1st ult. by giving a performance of 'Elijah.' The principal vocalists were Miss Florence Bethell, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Henry Plevy, and Mr. Arthur Barlow. The choral portions were excellently rendered under the conductorship of Mr. G. H. Betjemann, and the work was accompanied on the organ by Mr. Fountain Meen.

The choir of Downs Chapel, Clapton, gave a concert on the 9th ult., when the chief feature of the programme was Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Zion.' The choir also sang 'Be not afraid' and 'He watching over Israel' from 'Elijah,' 'O Father whose Almighty power' from 'Judas Maccabæus,' and the 'Hallelujah Chorus.' The solo vocalists were Madame Marion Perrott, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Alexander Tucker. Mr. Gerald Bullivant presided at the organ, and Mr. W. C. Webb conducted.

Mr. John Francis Barnett's effective cantata 'The Building of the Ship,' produced at the Leeds Musical Festival of 1880, was performed at the opening of the Cork Exhibition on May Day. The orchestra and chorus, conducted by Mr. Gmür, numbered 500 performers, and the solo vocalists were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Joseph O'Mara, Mr. Denis O'Sullivan, and Mr. Jeremia Sullivan. The cantata was repeated at the evening concert, and very favourably received on both occasions by large audiences.

Dr. Brodsky's quartet concerts during the past winter at Manchester have yielded a profit of £113, which he, as usual, has generously devoted to the augmentation of the fund for enabling deserving students to prolong their course in the Manchester Royal College of Music, of which he is the Principal.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The last choral concert of the season was that given by the City Choral Society, on April 24, in aid of the Hospital Saturday Fund. The Town Hall was crowded, and the concert was a great success. The programme included Samuel Wesley's eight-part Motet 'In exitu Israel,' Dvorák's Te Deum in G, Schubert's 'Great is Jehovah, the Lord,' as arranged by Liszt for tenor solo, men's chorus and orchestra, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' and some orchestral numbers. The singing of the choir was in general very good, and the soloists, Miss Delia Mason, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, and Mr. Wilfred Cunliffe, did well. Mr. F. W. Beard conducted with much ability.

The Johannessen Chamber Concerts concluded on April 26. On this occasion the Brodsky String Quartet paid their first visit to Birmingham. The programme was given up entirely to Slavonic music, and included the string quartets of Ottokar Novàček (Op. 10), and Tschaïkowsky (Op. 22). These were played in magnificent style, and solos were given by Dr. Brodsky and Mr. Carl Fuchs. Mr. F. W. Beard was the accompanist. The following Saturday, the 3rd ult., Mr. Johann C. Hock brought his violoncello recitals to a close. These have been given to the students of the Midland Institute School of Music and their friends, and have been of an educational description. At this last recital Mr. Hock, with Mr. G. H. Manton, played the violoncello sonata in F (Op. 6), by Richard Strauss, so that the historical sequence was carried to its extreme limit. Granville Bantock's 'Elegiac Poem' for violoncello and pianoforte was included in the programme, and was heard here for the second time this season. On April 30, Mr. Hector's Orchestral Society gave their second concert at Handsworth, Haydn's Military Symphony and Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' March figuring in the programme.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Wagner Concert on April 26, with which the Bristol Choral Society brought its season to a termination, was highly successful, Colston Hall, where the performance took place, being well filled, and the rendering of portions of 'Lohengrin' and 'Tannhäuser' which constituted the programme reflecting great credit upon vocalists and instrumentalists. The choir and band numbered about 600, Mr. H. Lewis holding the principal first violin. The soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Amy Perry, Mr. Philip Brozel, and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. George Riseley, who conducted, was much applauded.

The Broad Plain House Choir, a body of vocalists drawn from one of the poorest districts in the city, gave its sixth annual concert on the 6th ult., in the hall of the Institution, the conductor being Mr. Vaughan Jenkins. Oratorio choruses from Handel, Haydn and Mendelssohn, and various part-songs, furnished a programme that was fairly well rendered by the choir.

There was more than usual variety in the concert of the Clifton Choral Society, held at the Victoria Rooms on the 7th ult., under the direction of Mr. F. W. Rootham. The choir was heard in Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore,' two numbers of Elgar's 'From the Bavarian Highlands,' and the same composer's chorus 'It comes from the misty ages.' An orchestra of Bristol and Bath players, with Mr. F. S. Gardner, leader, performed Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto in E minor (Master Frank Merrick at the pianoforte), 'Le Rouet d'Omphale' by Saint-Saëns, and Elgar's 'Cockaigne' overture. Madame Sobrino, whose singing was much appreciated at the previous concert of the Society, sang several songs with good effect.

On the 12th ult. a meeting was held at St. Nathaniel's Schoolroom, for the purpose of forming a choral society for Bristol North. There was an influential attendance, Mr. G. E. Davies being voted into the chair. It was decided to start a large society, with Mr. J. Bending, organist of St. Paul's Church, as conductor. The intention in the coming season is to give two oratorios, with orchestral accompaniments, at the Victoria Rooms.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Norwich Philharmonic Society's second concert of the season took place in St. Andrew's Hall on the 1st ult. On this occasion they were joined with the Norwich Choral Society, which appeared before the public for the first time.

The two Societies were heard conjointly in Stanford's 'Last Post' and Somervell's 'Charge of the Light Brigade'; in each work both band and chorus, under the conductorship of Dr. Bates, acquitted themselves remarkably well. The instrumental portion of the programme consisted of the last three movements of Mendelssohn's 'Scotch Symphony,' Elgar's 'Imperial March,' and the ballet music from Gounod's 'Faust,' each item being excellently played by the band, led by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre. Miss Evangeline Florence was the vocalist.

Mr. Arthur Bent's Orchestral Class, assisted by professional wind instrumentalists, gave their second annual concert in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on the 15th ult. The programme included Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Bizet's Arlésienne Suite, Weber's Overture to 'Oberon,' and Halvorsen's 'Einzugsmarch des Bojaren,' which, under Mr. Bent's conductorship, were played with consummate skill and care. Goltermann's Violoncello Concerto, with Mr. Paul Ludwig at the solo instrument, proved a great treat. Miss Delia Mason provided the vocal numbers.

The Sprowston Choral Society, with some outside assistance, gave their last concert of the season on the 13th ult. The first part of the programme consisted of Hatton's Cantata 'Robin Hood,' the choruses being fairly well sung. The solo parts were taken by Miss M. E. Overbury, Messrs. J. Dobson, J Brown, and N. Parkerson. Mr. A. Adams conducted.

The second concert given under the auspices of the recently-formed Stowmarket Choral Society was held on April 28, when the choristers showed signs of careful training by Mr. G. W. Bouttell, who conducted. Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was the work chosen, and the soloists included the Hon. Alice Henniker, Miss Traill, Mr. A. Probert, and Mr. O. Moyle, with Miss C. J. Prentice at the pianoforte.

St. Mary Stoke (Ipswich) Choral Society gave a very successful concert on April 30. The first part of the programme included Van Bree's Cantata 'St. Cecilia's Day.' The chorus numbered about sixty, and under the baton of Mr. T. W. Brooks the work was well rendered. The soloist was Miss Kathleen Dumayne.

The members of the Mildenhall and District Musical Society, assisted by members of the Bury Athenæum Oratorio Choir, gave a performance on April 24, in the Town Hall of the former town, of the greater part of Handel's Oratorio 'Samson.' The soloists were Miss Jessie Butcher, Mr. John Browning, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Henry Butcher. The chorus, numbering about fifty voices, acquitted themselves well and reflected great credit on their conductor, Mr. J. D. Antill.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Conspicuous among the many recent concerts here have been the renderings of J. F. Barnett's very melodious cantata 'The Good Shepherd,' by the choir of St. George's United Free Church, under Mr. Alfred Hollins, and of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' by Mr. Millar Craig's choir. Mr. Hollins accompanied his choir admirably, while Mr. Millar Craig was assisted by the instrumental combination of pianoforte, harmonium, and string quintet. A most interesting reading was given of Parts I. and II. of 'The Creation,' by Hope Park United Free Church Musical Association. Mr. David Blair conducted, and had the aid of a good string band, led by Mr. James Winram.

Mr. Winram's present and past students, seventy performers, gave their annual orchestral concert—an event of increasing musical importance—in the Music Hall on April 3. The quality of Mr. Winram's work was admirably shown both in the ensemble and solo pieces. The Amateur Orchestral Society's third concert attracted the usual large audience, which was treated to a performance of Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 23) and a suite by Massenet. Mr. Collinson conducted. The same gentleman wielded the baton at the last Choral Union Concert, when Haydn's 'Creation' and Gade's 'Erl King's Daughter' were given before a large audience.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Last year, Mr. A. Herbert Brewer suggested through the local press the formation of a County and City Orchestral Society. The idea was immediately acted upon, and the Society was formed, some eighty members being enrolled. The first concert was given at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on April 24, and though it was held in the afternoon there was a very large attendance, and Mr. Brewer's experiment was more than justified. The rendering of the various orchestral works showed that he had gathered under his capable direction an earnest and competent band of amateur instrumentalists. The programme included Mozart's Symphony in D (No. 35), Elgar's Serenade for strings in E (Op. 20), Schubert's Italian Overture, Mackenzie's Benedictus, and German's Gipsy Suite. All the pieces were played with great delicacy and expression, and were warmly applauded. Mr. W. H. Reed is the leader of the orchestra, and he also contributed to the programme a masterly rendering of Sarasate's 'Habanera'; the vocalist was Miss Gleeson White. From every point of view the first concert of the newly-formed Society was a conspicuous and gratifying success.

Again it is a pleasure to bear willing testimony to the musical activity of Cirencester, the Choral Society, so ably conducted by Mr. A. H. Gibbons, having given a most creditable performance of 'Elijah,' at the Corn Hall, in that town, on Wednesday, April 23. The band was ably led by Mr. E. G. Woodward, with Mr. A. B. Barnes at the organ. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Jessie Goldsack, Mr. C. G. Brierley, and Mr. Harry Miller, the part of the Youth being taken by Master Percy Saunders, and help being given in the double quartet by Miss Fawcett, Miss Tovey, Miss Hayward, Mrs. Nicholls, and Mr. Fred Harmer.

The first of May was appropriately marked at Cheltenham by an excellent performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen,' by the Hawthorn Choral and Orchestral Society. The principals were Miss Jessie McLeod, Miss Bessie Woodward, Mr. James Leyland, and Mr. Henry Sunman, Mr. A. W. H. Hulbert conducted a bright performance which was much appreciated by a large audience, and Mr. C. J. A. Teague led a capital band.

On the 16th ult. the Gloucester Choral Society brought to a close a successful season by a good miscellaneous concert, of which not the least important feature was the singing of the choir in Samuel Wesley's magnificent motet, 'In exitu Israel,' under Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's alert conductorship.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The concert of the Societa Armonica, on April 22, was one of the most interesting that notable Society has ever given. The chief item was Tschaïkowsky's Fourth Symphony in F minor, of which the orchestra, under the skilful direction of Mr. Vasco V. Akeroyd, gave an admirable interpretation. Dvorák's 'The Peasant a Rogue' Overture was also in the scheme, whilst Miss Pauline St. Angelo played with grace and force several pianoforte items. Miss Backsheen Wood was the violinist, and Mr. W. E. Redmond sang Tschaïkowsky's 'Pilgrim Song' with excellent discretion.

Mr. Cuthbert Clarkson's concert took place in the Institute, Mount Street, on the 6th ult., when he was assisted by Miss Grace Collins and Mr. Fridolin Weingaertner. The singing of Miss Collins on this occasion was marked by many of the traits that denoted the possession of an artistic perception. Mr. Weingaertner played a movement from Spohr's Ninth Concerto with all his usual care.

An echo of the highly successful Liverpool Church Choir Association Festival was heard at Holy Trinity Church, Walton Breck, on April 30, when the music rendered at the recent Festival in St. George's Hall was repeated. The choir of the Church named, and that of St. Saviour's, Falkner Square, assisted by various members of other choirs, participated. The soloists were Master N. Baines, Mr. F. Harrison Roberts, Mr. T. Bickerton Hughes, and Mr. W. Scott. The organ duties were divided between Mr. Charles Collins and Mr. Fred G. Gillies (organist of Holy Trinity).

The scheme for the season of Sunday concerts at New Brighton Tower has just been issued. It is a document of undoubted interest, and it may be safely said that all musical Liverpool will begin the weekly pilgrimage on the 22nd inst.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Worksop Musical Society, a newly-formed body, directed by Mr. Hamilton White, gave a concert in the Town Hall, Worksop, on the 1st ult. For an initial effort the venture was extremely successful, the choir displaying numerous excellent qualities of both tone and training. In Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' they sang with admirable vigour and precision, winning well-deserved commendation. Webbe's 'When winds breathe soft' was another capitally rendered item in a programme which included Stanford's 'Last Post.' The principals were Mrs. Burrows, Miss Beevor, Mr. Vincent Ward, and Mr. T. E. Mackie, and Mrs. Hodding was the accompanist.

Another gallant enterprise is that of the Heeley Wesley Choral Society. On the 8th ult. the members gave a concert which, for a young organisation, was laudably ambitious in scope. Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Harford Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' tested the capabilities of the choristers, and found them very satisfactory. Under Mr. R. M. Bullmore's enthusiastic lead the little Society is working in the right direction and its prospects are encouraging. Miss E. Rich and Mr. F. Shimeld were the soloists, and Mr. E. G. Laycock, the accompanist, did excellent work. On the same date, at St. John's Church, Ranmoor, Mr. J. C. V. Stacey gave a very excellent performance of Mr. Alfred Gaul's cantata 'The Holy City,' the soloists being Miss Eva Ripper, Miss N. Pennington, Miss C. Pennington, Mr. T. R. Lees and Mr. C. H. Garland.

In the city the end of the season has arrived, there being now no outstanding fixtures of importance. The month's doings has included two interesting orchestral concerts. The Amateur Instrumental Society which, under its new conductor, Mr. Henry Dean, has had a successful season, gave a concert on the 13th ult., playing one of Haydn's Symphonies, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Four Characteristic Waltzes and some shorter pieces, with songs by Miss Pfeilschmidt and Mr. Hamer. On the following evening the Sheffield Ladies' Amateur String Orchestra performed a capital programme, under Mr. Georg Ellenberger, the soloists being Miss Mabel Swallow, a gifted and promising young violinist; Mr. Ellenberger, viola; Mr. E. Thorpe, violoncello; Miss Lutze, pianoforte; and Madame Muthesius, vocalist.

The Lincoln Musical Festival, to be held on the 4th and 5th inst., promises to be most successful both from the musical and financial point of view. At the evening concert of the first day two novelties are to be produced —'The Cricket on the Hearth' overture, by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and an Orchestral Suite in D minor, by Dr George J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral and conductor of the Festival, both works being conducted by their respective composers. This, with the two performances in the Cathedral on the following day, gives distinction to an event which has many well-wishers.

Foreign Notes.

ALTONA.—The Singakademie, of which Professor Woyrsch is the able director, gave an interesting concert last month, the programme of which included an 'Ode to Aphrodite,' by the conductor, and a remarkable setting for eight-part choir of Psalm 116, by Wilhelm Koehler, a new work, which was greatly applauded.

AMSTERDAM.—Berlioz's Requiem, and 'Wanderer's Sturmlied,' by Richard Strauss, were most successfully produced last month by the Maatschappy tot Bevordering der Toonkunst, under the conductorship of M. A. Verhey. ——A performance, at the Lyric Theatre, of Mozart's 'Die Zauberflöte,' on April 21, deserves to be recorded, as having been the first given of that work in the Dutch language.

BERLIN.—At an interesting concert given last month by Herr Neisser, of Wasa (Finland), with the co-operation of the Tonkünstler Orchestra, a symphonic poem entitled 'Korsholm,' by the Finnish composer A. Järnfeld, was introduced to Berlin audiences and received with much favour.——The newly-founded Madrigal Society, conducted by Dr. Hugo Goldschmidt, recently gave its first public concert, when a very fine interpretation was given of madrigals by Thomas Morley, Baldassare Donato, Claudio Merulo, Gastoldi, and others. Much enthusiasm was created by the re-appearance last month, at the Opera, of Frau Rosa Sucher, in the part of Sieglinde in 'Die Walküre.'

BIELEFELD.—At the musical festival held on the 4th and 5th ult. a highly successful performance took place, in concert form, of Peter Cornelius's opera 'Der Barbier von Bagdad,' with M. Messchaert as the superb interpreter of the title-part. The performances also included Brahms's 'Gesang der Parzen.' Musikdirector Lamping was the conducter.

BOLOGNA.—A Rossini Museum has just been opened, in connection with the Municipal Institute. It contains, inter alia, the autograph scores of the 'Stabat Mater,' and of several operas by the master, as well as letters, musical instruments, and other personalia.

BRUSSELS.—The series of performances of Gluck's operas at the Conservatoire concluded with the recent excellent production of 'Alceste,' under the direction of M. Gevaert. César Franck's scène biblique for soli, chorus, and orchestra, 'Rebecca,' was produced at the third Popular Concert of the season, under M. Dupuis's conductorship, with much success. At the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Poise's 'La Surprise de l'amour' has been performed for the first time, and well received.

COLOGNE.—The famous Cologne Maenner Gesangverein celebrated last month the sixtieth anniversary of its foundation by a grand concert, which included, among other numbers, very fine interpretations of Mendelssohn's four-part setting of 'Ecce quomodo,' of Palestrina's 'O bone Jesu,' and of Max Bruch's latest choral composition, 'Abschied des Volkes,' the latter under the direction of its composer.

COPENHAGEN.—A new four-act opera, 'Aladdin,' by the popular Danish composer, Professor C. Hornemann, has just been produced at the Royal Theatre with great success.

DRESDEN.—At a concert given by Mr. Percy Sherwood, a string quartet in G major, and a suite in C major, for two pianofortes, by the concert giver, obtained a first hearing, and were well received.——An interesting performance by the Tonkünstler Verein was that of a hitherto unknown octet in F major, for wind instruments, by Haydn, which Professor Grützmacher had discovered some time since. It proved a very charming and graceful example of the master's art, being, moreover, extremely well interpreted on the present occasion.

HALLE.—More than ordinary enthusiasm was displayed by the numerous audience which was present at the recent first performance, by the Singakademie, of Liszt's oratorio 'Saint Elisabeth.' The solo parts were in excellent hands, and the highly-efficient choir and orchestra, under the conductorship of Professor Reubke, rendered full justice to the manifold beauties of the work.

HAMBURG.—A new Requiem, for chorus, soli, orchestra, and organ, by Victor Heinisch, was produced last month at the Stadt Theater, creating a very marked impression. The work is dedicated to the memory of the late King Humbert of Italy, and will shortly also be performed at Rome.——M. Charpentier, the successful composer of the opera 'Louise,' gave a concert here with compositions from his pen, which were received with much favour, particularly an orchestral suite, 'Italy,' and a 'dramatic' symphony.

HELSINFORS.—Mozart's Grand Mass in C minor, in the skilfully completed version by Aloys Schmidt, has been produced recently, for the first time, under the direction of Herr Kajanus. The work was received with so much enthusiasm that four performances of it have taken place within the last few weeks.——The new Finnish National Theatre was opened last month with a festival progamme, to which Jean Sibelius had contributed a new cantata for chorus and orchestra, and A. Järnefeld a festival overture.

LEIPZIG.—An oratorio, 'Whitsuntide,' by R. Bartmuss, produced an excellent impression at its performance, on the 2nd ult., in the Friedens-Kirche, under the conductorship of Herr Hans Hiller.——At the Stadt Theater, Johann Strauss's charming operetta 'Wiener Blut' was produced for the first time, on the 3rd ult., with considerable success.

MAINZ.—A most successful musical festival, extending over four days, and devoted to compositions by Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner, was held in this city in the last week of April. The Liedertafel and Damen Gesang Verein, with the Munich Kaim Orchestra, were the principal executants, under the direction of Herr Weingartner.

MILAN.—A new violin concerto by Leone Sinigaglia, finely interpreted by Signor Arrigo Serrato, created a very favourable impression at a recent orchestral concert given at the Theatre della Scala. Considerable success was achieved by a new string trio in E flat major, by Martucci, at its recent first performance at the Conservatorio.

MUNICH.—Under the direction of Herr Woehrle, the musical director of the Cathedral, the last of a series of madrigal performances was given on the 4th ult., which included compositions by Leo Hasler and Joh. Hermann Schein, as well as two seldom-heard four-part songs by Haydn, 'Der Greis' and 'Beredsamkeit.' A new sonata for clarinet and pianoforte in A flat major, by Max Reger, interpreted by the composer and Herr Carl Wagner, found many admirers at its performance at a recent concert by the Hoesel Quartet Party. At the Royal Opera, the successful first performance took place recently of a new German version of the 'Orestiad' of Æschylus, with incidental and melodramatic music by Max Schillings. An interesting revival was that, by the Orchester Verein, of a little-known comic opera by Boieldieu, 'Les Voitures versées,' which greatly pleased the audience. A new operetta by André Messager, 'Die Brautlotterie,' has been brought out at the Gärtner Theater with some success.

MÜNSTER.—A marked impression was produced by the first performance, in concert form, of a new music drama, 'Loreley,' by the director of the Conservatorium, Herr Adolf Stierlein. The subject, which has fascinated not a few composers since the days of Mendelssohn, is apparently 'in the air' just now, another opera, 'Loreley,' from the pen of Herr A. Weichmann, having been brought out with good success last month at Nuremberg.

PALERMO.—The prize of 300 lire, offered by the Circolo Artistico for a 'Fantastic Dance,' for strings, harp and harmonium, has been awarded to the young composer, Carlo Nicosia.

PARIS.—The new lyrical drama 'Pelleas et Mélisande,' the libretto by Maurice Maeterlinck, the music by Claude Debussy, recently brought out at the Opéra Comique, met with but a very qualified success, while the new one-act comic opera 'Madame Dugazon,' with a cleverly-written score by Charles Hess, has been very well received here. A symphony entitled 'Liberté,' by the English composer Alfred Holmes (who died in Paris in 1176), has been revived with much acceptance at one of the recent concerts under the direction of M. Victor Charpentier, and was again produced at the festival concert given on the 18th ult., under the conductorship of M. Vincent d'Indy.

PRAGUE.—A most flattering reception was given, on his recent visit here, to Eugenio Pirani, the well-known Berlin composer and critic. A new opera of his, 'Das Hexenlied,' was produced with much success at the German Theatre, and at a concert given by the artist, with the co-operation of Miss Webster-Powell and others, a number of chamber works and songs from his pen revealed the composer's originality and versatility, and created a most favourable impression.

ROME.—Don Lorenzo Perosi's new oratorio 'Moses' was produced for the first time last month at the Costanzi Theatre before a very numerous and appreciative audience, who re-demanded several numbers. Herr Siegfried Wagner also made his appearance at the Costanzi recently, where he conducted excerpts from his comic opera 'Der Bärenhäuter,' as well as the 'Siegfried Idyll,' the 'Tannhäuser' overture, and the Funeral Dirge from 'Götterdämmerung,' by his illustrious father.

STOCKHOLM.—A new opera by Andreas Hallén, entitled 'Walpurgis-Messe,' has been successfully brought out at the Royal Theatre.

ST. PETERSBURG.—At a concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, recently conducted by Herr Nikisch, a new pianoforte concerto in three movements by Rachmaninoff was heard for the first time. Admirably interpreted as it was by M. Alexander Siloti, it produced a very favourable impression.

STUTTGART.—An excellent performance was given, on April 30, by the Neue Sing Verein, of Hugo Röhr's new secular oratorio 'Ekkehard,' under Professor Seyffardt's direction.

THE HAGUE.—A completely revised version of Richard Hol's historical opera 'Floris,' first produced some ten years since at Amsterdam, was brought out last month at the Royal theatre with great success. The veteran composer, now in his seventy-eighth year, who personally conducted his work, was received with the most hearty applause.

WARSAW.—A new opera, 'Livia Quintilla,' by the Polish composer, Sigmund von Noskowski, achieved a notable success at the Grand Theatre last month.——The talented Polish composer, Ladislas Zelenski, achieved a great success at a concert given last month with a number of his own compositions, including a Psalm for chorus and orchestra, an overture, 'Echoes from the Forest,' and fragments from an opera.

WIESBADEN.—The annual special performances at the Royal Theatre were inaugurated, on the 11th ult., by the production of Gluck's 'Armida,' in a new adaptation of the work, skilfully and on the whole successfully made by Intendant von Hülsen and Capellmeister Schlar.

Brief Summary of Country and Colonial News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

BASINGSTOKE.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Drill Hall, on April 22, when the programme included Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' and the last two movements of Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' Symphony. The band and choir numbered 100 performers, and the solo vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Foxton Ferguson. Mr. H. E. Powell conducted.

BEDFORD.—The Musical Society, under the conductorship of Dr. H. A. Harding, gave an admirable performance of Coleridge-Taylor's cantata 'The Blind Girl of Castél Cuillé,' in the Corn Exchange, on the 13th ult. The excellent band and chorus numbered 225 performers. The principal vocalists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Maud Turner, and Master Stanley Winter; and the work was most enthusiastically received

A short miscellaneous selection included Percy Godfrey's 'Coronation' and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches, and the Madrigals 'Awake, sweet love' (Dowland), and 'Now is the Month of Maying' (Morley).

BELFAST.—The members of the choir of Elmwood Presbyterian Church have presented Mr. C. J. Brennan, organist and director of the choir, with a writing desk, as a token of their high appreciation of his services.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.—Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' was performed by the Musical Union in the Great Hall on April 23. The choir, though not large, sang with good effect and excellent expression, and the orchestra carried out their exacting task with much efficiency. The solo vocalists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Grace Day Winter, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Arthur Walenn. The programme concluded with Percy Godfrey's Coronation March. Mr. A. Eaglefield Hull was the conductor.

COVENTRY.—Mr. C. H. Moody, who has been organist of Holy Trinity since April, 1899, has been the recipient of numerous tokens of appreciation on leaving to enter upon his new duties as organist of Ripon Cathedral. On behalf of the clergy and choir, the Vicar, Canon Beaumont, presented Mr. Moody with a handsome oak roller-top study desk. The Festival Choir, which Mr. Moody organised and successfully conducted for three seasons, handed to him a case of silver mother-o'-pearl fruit-knives, a pair of gold sleeve links, and an address. The choir-boys of Holy Trinity presented him with a silver and ebony baton, and the Vestry forwarded, through their clerk an address in which they expressed their approval of the very able manner in which he had carried out his duties.

DOVER.—A performance of the second and third parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha' was given in the Town Hall, on April 30, under the able direction of Mr. H. J. Taylor. The band and choir numbered 160 performers, and the principal vocalists were Miss Katie Smith, Mr. Henry Turnpenny, and Mr. Arthur Walenn. Longfellow's poem was recited by Miss Adey Brunel before the performance of each section.

EPPING.—The Musical Festival Society held their annual concert on the 1st ult., when they performed 'Judas Maccabæus.' The solo vocalists were Miss Stella Maris, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Bertram Mills. The choruses were very well sung by the choir. Mr. Donald Penrose, the conductor, is to be congratulated on the success of the entire performance.

IPSWICH (QUEENSLAND).—Two excellent performances of Stainer's 'Crucifixion' were given in St. Paul's Church during Holy Week, on Wednesday and Good Friday evenings. The Church choir, in which the boys are assisted by a contingent of ladies, gave admirable renderings of the choral march 'Fling wide the gates' and the 'Appeal of the crucified.' The solo portions were sung by members of the choir; special mention, however, is due to the really beautiful rendering of the duet by Mr. C. A. Flint and Mr. E. Morgan. The congregation joined heartily in the several hymns. Mr. O. Perry conducted with care, and the organist of the Church, Mr. R. Henderson Johnston, was at the organ.

LEAMINGTON.—The Leamington Orchestral Society, under the direction of their painstaking conductor, Mr. Walter Warren, finished their season on the 1st ult. The chief feature of the concert was the performance of Weber's Pianoforte Concerto by Madame Marie Fromm. Other items in the programme were Mozart's Magic Flute Overture; Dvorák's Suite (Op. 39); Elegie, Op. 43 (Tschaikowsky); Symphony No. 8 in F, first two movements (Beethoven); and 'Fest' Overture (Leutner). Miss Delia Mason was the vocalist.

MELBOURNE (AUSTRALIA).—The North Suburban Choral Union gave their third concert of the season on March 25, when the interesting programme included Schumann's 'Mignon's Requiem,' Haydn's 'Eleventh Symphony,' German's 'Bourrée and Gigue' ('Much Ado about Nothing'), and Elgar's 'Spanish Serenade,' all for the first time in this locality. The contributions of the choir included a new part-song by Miss Viola Jäger, entitled 'Song of Hesperus.' Mr. E. A. Jäger conducted.

PERTH.—The Perth Musical Society, with a membership of one hundred good singers, has completed a very successful season. On February 13 the Society, assisted by eminent soloists and Mr. Cole's orchestra, gave a very artistic rendering of Haydn's 'Spring,' vocal and orchestral items filling up the programme.

PETERSHAM (SYDNEY).—Mr. William T. Wood, choirmaster of All Saints' Church, was presented, on April 9, by the members of the choir and friends with a well-fitted travelling case, gold sleeve-links, and a Maltese cross pendant, together with an illuminated address expressing the gratitude of the donors to Mr. Wood for his untiring zeal as honorary choirmaster for the past twelve years.

READING.—The Orpheus Society gave a concert in the Large Town Hall, on the 10th ult., when a highly interesting selection of part-songs was performed. The programme included Atterbury's 'Come, let us all a-maying go,' Horsley's 'When the wind blows,' Abt's 'Vineta,' Cooke's 'Shades of the heroes,' Härtel's 'The Miller's daughter,' Martin's 'Haste, ye soft gales,' Hatton's 'Sleep, my sweet,' and two old English part-songs 'You lovers, who have loves astray,' by Hilton (1575-1657), and 'Strike it up, neighbour,' by Weelkes (1578-1623). The tone of the choir was excellent, and the rendering of the part-songs indicated the careful training by the conductor. Mr. Leonard Borwick and Mr. Ernest Windus (violinist) took part in the concert. In the interval a presentation was made to Dr. F. J. Read, the conductor, of a purse of money and an illuminated address expressing the thanks of the members for Dr. Reed's invaluable assistance as conductor since the foundation of the Society twenty-one years previously, and the hope that he would retain the position for many years to come.

TONBRIDGE.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed by the Choral Society in the Public Hall, on the 7th ult. The orchestra attached to the Society assisted, augmented by members of the Royal Engineers' Band. The principal solo music was rendered by Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Gertrude Macaulay, Mr. James Leyland, and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. J. W. G. Hathaway presided at the organ, and Mr. H. J. Taylor conducted.

Great ability and greater promise was shown by Miss Maud Tabb and Mr. R. V. Tabb at their concert on the 23rd ult. at Bechstein Hall. Miss Tabb's mezzo-soprano voice is very pleasure-giving in quality, and her rendering of a good selection of songs, including several by British composers, indicated musical perception. Mr. Tabb produced a pleasing singing tone from the violoncello, and his phrasing and accentuation were excellent. Madame Alice Tabb sympathetically accompanied the young artists.

The following scholarships have been awarded at the Royal Academy of Music: the Parepa Rosa Scholarship (for female vocalists) to Ida Kahn (a native of London), and the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship to Edwin York Bowen (of London).

Her Majesty the Queen has most graciously given her patronage to Master H. Vernon Warner and Miss Elsie Warner's pianoforte and violin recital announced to be held in St. James's Hall on the 23rd inst.

The Royal Academy of Music has received the munificent sum of £1,000, generously given by Mr. Ludovic Goetz, wherewith to purchase full-scores for the library of the Institution.

The Scottish Standard Bearer for May contains a biography and portrait of Mr. W. Prendergast, the recently-appointed organist of Winchester Cathedral.

The report and accounts of the Gateshead Choral Union shows, as heretofore, a prosperous and artistic season of achievement.

Answers to Correspondents.

CEOIL.—(1) You could not do better than study Grove's 'Beethoven and his nine symphonies'—an interesting and instructive book: the published price is six shillings. (2) The 'Angel scene' in Humperdinck's charming opera 'Hänsel und Gretel' is thus described by Mr. R. A. Streatfeild in his useful book 'The Opera.' 'Out in the forest the children (Hänsel and Gretel) amuse themselves with picking strawberries and making flower garlands, until the approach of night, when they find to their horror that they have lost their way. They search for it in vain, and at last, completely tired out, they sink down upon the moss beneath a spreading tree. The Dustman—the German sleep-fairy—appears and throws dust in their weary eyes. Together they sing their little evening hymn, and drop off to sleep locked in each other's arms. Then the heavens open, and down a shining staircase come the bright forms of angels, who group themselves round the sleeping children, and watch over their innocent slumbers till the break of day.' 'Hänsel und Gretel' was first produced at Weimar, December 23, 1893.

T. W. T.—No; the edition of Bach's works, edited by Mendelssohn and published by the now defunct firm of Coventry and Hollier in 1845, is not the same as the 'Grand Studies for the Organ' that had been issued earlier (in 1836) by the same publishers, and which are now in Messrs. Novello's catalogue. The story is fully told in a series of articles on 'Bach's Music in England,' which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES from September to December (inclusive), 1896. See especially the issues of November, p. 724, and December, p. 797, of that year.

CANTORIS.—The Polychord, invented by Friedrich Hillmer, of Leipzig, in 1799, was an instrument which resembled the contrabass, but smaller in size. It had ten strings of catgut, four of which were covered. The finger-board and neck could be made longer or shorter, whereby the pitch of the whole instrument could be raised or lowered without tuning each separate string. The 'ten-stringed instrument' of the Psalms—called Asôr, which is traced to a root signifying ten—is of the portable harp species.

SULLIVANETTO.—(1) The 'Light of the world' (Sullivan) is published by Messrs. Cramer & Co.; (2) A useful History of Music, of the note-book type, is that by Bonavia Hunt, published by Messrs. Bell; (3) The Funeral March by Wagner to which you refer is from 'Götterdämmerung'; (4) 'Who is the greatest living composer of music and the greatest living organist?' We hope this may be regarded as an optional question which will not jeopardise 'full marks' for Nos. 1, 2, and 3 if it remains unanswered.

A. D. H.—The Wagner literature is very extensive. Glasenapp's 'Life of Wagner,' now being issued in a good English translation by Mr. W. Ashton Ellis, is the best; two volumes have been published. Excellent hand-books on Wagner's operas are those on the 'Nibelungen Ring,' by Hans von Wolzogen; and on 'Tristan,' 'Mastersingers,' and 'Parsifal,' by Constance Bache. Wagner is considered by musicians of to-day as one of the greatest composers 'who have ever lived,' but the greatest—who shall say?

BARITONE.—The song 'Flow, thou regal purple stream,' by Dr. Samuel Arnold, is from his comic opera 'The Castle of Andalusia,' composed by him and produced at Covent Garden Theatre, in 1782. Many similar English songs are the survivals of operas that are as dead—nay, deader—than Queen Anne.

A. B. (Detroit).—We have given the specification of an English cathedral organ, that of York Minster, in our issue of April, 1901; and we hope to give others as opportunity offers, for the benefit of our American readers and others who may be interested.

PERCIVAL.—The following pedal studies (organ) are worthy of your attention: Organ Pedal Technique (Parts 1 and 2) by B. W. Horner; Best's Art of Organ Playing (Part 2); and Studies for Pedal Playing by Schneider.

A.R.A.M.—The parody to which you refer began, if we remember rightly:—

I had a voice, some years ago,
It was so sweet and soprano.

I. M. S.—The average salary of village organists depends a good deal upon the village and the organist. In such a case the law of averages does not apply.

STUDENT.—For an analysis of Beethoven's C sharp minor pianoforte sonata ('The Moonlight,' so called) see Dr. Harding's primer on 'Analysis of Form.'

ORGANAMUS.—We believe the largest organ in the world is that in the Town Hall, Sydney; but it will probably not remain so for long.

A COUNTRY READER.—The houses in which Mozart and Haydn resided during their visits to London are, unfortunately, all demolished.

DOT.—The passage is to be played semi-staccato—the slightest detachment of the notes; the slurs must, of course, receive attention.

J. L.—The setting of the Nicene Creed is probably Goss in D; that is the best guess we can make from the extract you send us.

B. C.—The Liszt extract (quoted on p. 233 of our April number) appeared in the issue of Punch for April 10, 1886, p. 170, col. 2.

ORGANUM.—Your rector or vicar is supreme in the matter. You hold office under him, and under no one else.

H. M.—We cannot give any opinion as to the reliability of the publishing company you name.

J. T.—Better not to face the congregation, but to sing from the choir stalls at organ recitals.

MINNEHAHA.—The Handel volumes to which you refer are not of any great monetary value.

P. F.—'La Musique Française Moderne,' is published by Fischbacher, Paris.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B.	STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A.	DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	2B.	DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions) ..	2s. 6d.
3A.	DITTO (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.	3B.	DITTO (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4A.	DITTO (all Positions)	2s. 6d.	4B.	.. ..
5A.	DITTO		5B.	.. ..
6A.	DITTO		6B.	.. ..
	Books 1A, 2A, 3A, and 4A now ready.			Books 1B, 2B, and 3B now ready.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK

A COLLECTION OF POPULAR ANTHEMS

FOR

FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

Each book of this series contains twelve anthems: some for Festival occasions—e.g., Christmas, Easter, Harvest—and others which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections, in order that suitable variety may be secured and practical needs supplied.

It is therefore anticipated that in churches where an elaborate musical service is not possible, this publication will find acceptance. In such cases the advantage of having, in one book, twelve standard anthems which more than cover the requirements of the Church's year is obvious.

BOOK 1.

THE KING SHALL REJOICE

(Third Edition)

AND

BEHOLD, O GOD OUR DEFENDER

BOTH FOR FOUR VOICES, WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENT.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC ODDIN TAYLOR.

Price Threepence each.

"There is much merit in this setting of 'The King shall rejoice.' The choral portion is in four parts throughout, and will present few difficulties to the singers. The part-writing is fluent, the harmonic scheme is direct and well knit, and the most important lines of the text are allied to music of a solid and emphatic nature."—Musical Times, May 1, 1899.

"'The King shall rejoice' was sung at the Special Service, at Sandringham Church, on Jubilee Day, 1897, and 'Behold, O God our Defender,' at Sandringham Church, on Queen's Accession Day, 1898."

The music to be sung at the approaching Coronation of King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra embraces a period of five centuries of English Church Music—from Thomas Tallis, who died in 1585, to the present day. The seventeenth century is represented by the honoured names of Orlando Gibbons and Henry Purcell, the eighteenth by Handel (with the most imposing of his masterly Coronation anthems), and the nineteenth by Samuel Sebastian Wesley, John Stainer, and C. Villiers Stanford. Following the custom of former Coronations, music has been specially composed for the approaching great ceremony—in the present instance—by Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Hubert Parry, and Sir Walter Parratt.

EARLY BODLEIAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

SIR JOHN STAINER.

The First Volume contains 110 Facsimiles of Manuscript Music—chiefly secular—preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, ranging from 1185 to 1505 A.D., with a description of the MSS. by E. W. B. Nicholson, M.A., Bodley's Librarian.

The Second Volume contains Transcriptions into Modern Notation by J. F. R. Stainer, B.C.L., M.A., and Cecie Stainer, with an Introduction by the late Sir John Stainer.

This important work has been many years in preparation. It affords a survey of the history of Musical Notation and Expression, and illustrates the development of the art of music over a period of more than three Centuries (1185 to 1505).

The Volumes include English and French Songs of earlier date than any hitherto known to exist, besides many examples of early Part-writing that no future historian of music can afford to ignore.

The late Sir John Stainer devoted much time in the latter years of his busy life to the preparation and supervision of this work, which may be regarded as the crowning achievement of his varied musical activity.

NOVELLO'S
SCHOOL OF PIANOFORTE MUSIC

EDITED BY

KARL KLINDWORTH.

PREFACE.

The characteristic features of Novello's School of Pianoforte Music are accuracy of text, minuteness of phrasing indications, and careful fingering. With these fundamental principles of good editing has been combined the important, though often neglected essential of the artistic presentment of the music to the eye. Special attention has accordingly been paid to clearness, especially in the direction of ample spacing of the notes, legibility, and, as far as possible, in providing convenient turning-over places—important matters which will materially assist the player in the study of the pieces contained in this series. The annotations of the Editor, the use of which will greatly aid the students in a proper interpretation of these works, speak for themselves.

MANUAL OF THE ORCHESTRAL LITERATURE OF ALL COUNTRIES

COMPILED AND EDITED BY

A. ROSENKRANZ.

IN CLOTH, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

The Manual contains an almost complete list of the orchestral compositions written by composers of all countries, from Lully and Rameau (1651) up to the present time—Edward Elgar, Camille Saint-Saëns, and Richard Strauss (1902)—a period covering 250 years.

The 5012 separate works for Orchestra scheduled in the Manual are written by 1337 different composers, and are classified as follows:—

Overtures	1272	Miscellaneous Pieces ...	434
Symphonies	588	Marches	467
Various Concert Pieces...	1542	Music for String Orchestra	709

A special table, showing the degree in which the different nationalities of the various composers are represented, is given in the preface.

An alphabetical list of the names of the composers is placed at the end of the Manual, and whenever it was obtainable, the year in which each composer was born is stated.

In order to keep "The Manual of Orchestral Literature" up to date, and make it absolutely reliable as a Handbook of reference, supplementary lists will be issued at regular intervals.

THE MUSIC STUDENT'S MANUSCRIPT NOTE BOOK
AND PRACTICE REGISTER

ARRANGED BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept, or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

SONGS
COMPOSED BY Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.

TRANSLATED BY LADY MACFARREN
AND
WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

TRANSPOSED EDITION:
Price, in paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"The present (transposed) edition contains not only all the songs composed by Mendelssohn—in addition to an air originally written for 'St. Paul'—but five by his sister, Fanny Hensel. The latter (see pages 3, 6, 64, 68, and 72, of this volume) were originally published under her brother's name, and were included in his Op. 8 and 9, as she did not wish to court publicity as a composer.

"The translations have been made to agree with the Novello edition of the songs in their original keys; moreover, this reprint has furnished the opportunity for thoroughly revising the songs, and for so laying out the accompaniments that the notes assigned to each hand are now placed in their proper staves. This improvement, in the carrying out of which not a single note of the composer's has been altered, conduces to clearness and will greatly facilitate the important work of the accompanist."

The editions of the Songs in their original keys are still published at the same prices.

SOUTH LONDON MUSICAL CLUB.

PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Committee OFFERS £10 10s. od. for the best ORIGINAL COMPOSITION in the Madrigal style for T.T.B.B., forwarded to the President, South London Musical Club, Gresham Hall, Brixton, London, S.W., not later than Friday, October 31, 1902.

The Composition, which must be the bonâ fide work of the competitor, must not be a mere Part-song or harmonised Melody. The words must be non-copyright, and the name of their author and the date and place of publication of the book in which they are to be found must be stated. Two vocal scores, with one clearly-written set of voice parts, distinguished only by a motto and accompanied by a sealed envelope bearing the same motto and containing the name and address of the composer, must be forwarded.

The prize will be awarded by a Committee appointed by the Club, with Sir Frederick Bridge, Mus. Doc., as final adjudicator, but will be withheld if the works forwarded are not of sufficient merit.

The Prize Composition will become the property of and be published by the Club, and the result of the Competition will in due course be announced in The Musical Times.

The manuscript of unsuccessful Compositions, which will, of course, be treated confidentially, will be returned in due course.

PRIZE MOTET and PART-SONG COMPETITION.—The MENDELSSOHN CHOIR of TORONTO, CANADA, offers a PRIZE of TWELVE GUINEAS for the best original SACRED UNACCOMPANIED MOTET or ANTHEM, in six or eight parts, after the style of Gounod's "Come unto Him," Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," or Tschaïkowsky's "Cherubim Song," No. 3. The competition to be open to all British musicians, including those of the Colonies. A PRIZE of FIFTY DOLLARS is also offered by the same Society for the best SECULAR UNACCOMPANIED PART-SONG; the competition to be open only to Composers resident in Canada. The Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto will hold all rights in the successful compositions as to publication, performance, and otherwise, until after the first public performance of the successful works by the chorus of the Society, when said rights will be surrendered to the successful competitors. No composition previously performed or published will be eligible, and no award will be made if, in the opinion of the judges, the compositions submitted are not deemed to be of sufficient merit. Each composition should bear a motto, and along with it an envelope bearing the same motto outside, containing the name and address of the Composer. Compositions should reach the Honorary Secretary of the Society, Mr. Geo H. D. Lee, Dominion Bank Chambers, Toronto, on or before November 15 next. The Adjudicators are Dr. Albert Ham, Organist and Choir Director of St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, and Mr. A. S. Vogt, Conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir, of Toronto, who will have associated with them Sir J. Frederick Bridge, Organist of Westminster Abbey, with whom the final decision will be left.

(BARITONE).
(Assistant Vicar-Choral, Westminster Abbey)
Mr. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—
"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.
"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.
"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.
"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH."—BROMLEY.—"The title part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionalism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

THE SWANTON £50 CHALLENGE IS STILL UNACCEPTED. See current No. Musical Opinion.

THE CHALLENGE.

The superiority of the Swanton Organ-Blowing Engines and Apparatus is not disputed even by my Competitors.

My £50 Challenge has now been open for twelve long months, but no firm has the courage to pick up the glove.

The obvious inference is that a contest on impartial lines is not desired by other makers.

CALL AND SEE THEM AT WORK.

At all times my factory is open to visitors. It is only a few minutes by train from the City. You can see much that is interesting, including—

THE SWANTON WATER ENGINE,
THE SWANTON ECONOMIZER,
THE COMPOUND CENTRIFUGAL ORGAN BLOWER
(for Gas Engine or Electric Motor), all in actual operation.

If you cannot call, a dainty Brochure is yours for the asking.

A Clergyman writes: "Your Edition is well selected, well edited, and well printed."

An Organist writes: "I find your music pleases the Clergy, pleases the choir, pleases the congregation, and pleases myself. As a rule it seems to combine the minimum of difficulty with the maximum of effect. I generally try to end my choir practices with one of your pieces, as it always sends the choir away in a good temper."

THE MUSICAL TIMES AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
JULY 1, 1902.

Owing to the serious and deeply regrettable illness of His Majesty the King, the Coronation announced to take place on the 26th ult. is indefinitely postponed.

SIR WALTER PARRATT, M.V.O.,

MASTER OF THE KING'S MUSICK.

There is an element of antiquity in the organistship of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Three hundred and fifty years ago the occupant of the post was John Marbeck (or Merbeck), who, in 1550, published 'The Booke of Common Praier Noted.' Richard Farrant probably shared the duties with Marbeck. Among others, the appointment has been held by Dr. William Child and Sir G. J. Elvey. The office of Master of the King's Musick appears to be of later origin. In 1625, Charles I. had a curiously constituted orchestra—8 hautboys and sackbuts, 6 flutes, 6 recorders, 11 violins, 6 lutes, 4 viols, 1 harp, and 15 'musicians for the lute and voice,' in addition to trumpeters, drummers, and fifers. Nicholas Lanier was Master of this odd lot of musick-makers. Louis XIV. instituted a band of two dozen players upon stringed instruments, and in imitation of the French monarch, our Charles II. started, in 1660, a similar organization, popularly known as 'four and twenty fiddlers.' The important office of Master of the King's Musick has been filled by such well-known musicians as John Banister, Dr. Greene, Dr. Boyce, John Stanley, William Shield, and Sir W. G. Cusins. The duties connected with these royal appointments above referred to had never been discharged by the same person previous to the year 1893; but from that time the two offices have been held—and worthily held—by the distinguished musician who forms the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

Walter Parratt was born at No. 6, South Parade, Huddersfield, February 10, 1841. The house still stands, but the neighbourhood has greatly deteriorated in the intervening years. His father, Thomas Parratt (1793-1862), was the chief musician of Huddersfield and organist of the parish church for fifty years; he was a good classical scholar, an excellent chess player, and, moreover, a man greatly esteemed and beloved. Mr. Thomas Parratt was succeeded in the Huddersfield organistship by his eldest son, Mr. Henry Lister Parratt, who has held the post for forty years; thus it has come to pass that father and son between them have officiated at ninety Christmas Day services in unbroken succession. On his maternal side, Sir Walter can trace connection with the Temple family and the great essayist, Joseph Addison. Mrs. Parratt, the mother of these gifted brothers, is held in reverent memory, and 'Her children rise up, and call her blessed.'

At a very tender age Walter showed signs of great musical ability. His earliest recollections are of the pinafore period, when, at the age of four, he knelt behind his father seated at the organ keyboard, and played the right notes on the pedals with his tiny hands. At the age of five he took a church service, and when only ten played the whole of Bach's 'Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues' from memory! He says: 'I used to play them twice through in a week.' At that time the only C organ in Huddersfield was at Paddock Church, which necessitated a walk of nearly two miles for the luxury of a practice.

AN ORGANIST, AGED ELEVEN.

His first organ appointment was at Armitage Bridge Church, near Huddersfield,

THOMAS PARRATT,
ORGANIST OF HUDDERSFIELD PARISH CHURCH FROM 1812 TO 1862.

where (aged eleven) he succeeded his brother Henry in March, 1852. His salary was £10; and the organ had only one manual, and that was of G compass. Coming events cast their shadows before—long before; the name of his vicar was Windsor! This divine had an ingenious turn of mind, and in order to obtain 'pedal effects' while playing upon his harmonium he invented a genual method, so that by pressing knobs (which acted on certain notes) with his knee he obtained sustained pedal notes without disturbing his ordinary blowing arrangements. Mr. John Watkinson, a Huddersfield friend of his boyhood, recalls that Master Walter appeared in public as a pianoforte prodigy, and that he played Schulhoff's 'Carnival of Venice' variations. This was at a 'Grand Concert' given by his father (in October, 1852), at which the English Glee and Madrigal Union were the chief performers, the juvenile pianist being then eleven years old. A local journal thus records the event:—

> Between the parts, Master Walter Parratt performed two difficult fantasias on the pianoforte, and gave evidence of rare musical talent in so young a performer, who with the cultivation of the genius he possesses may prove a worthy follower of the mighty Thalberg, the 'ten-fingered.'

A LONDON ORGANISTSHIP.

London was the scene of his next organ appointment, which furnishes an almost unknown incident in his life. At the age of twelve he lived in the choir school of St. Peter's (Episcopal) Chapel, Charlotte Street (now Palace Street), Pimlico, just under the shadow of Buckingham Palace, where he now conducts the music at Court functions. He was organist of the Chapel, a post at one time held by Dr. Dupuis, and in later years by Mr. Franklin Taylor. This chapel, by-the-way, was built and ministered in by the celebrated Rev. Dr. Dodd, who, in 1777, was hanged for forgery! The incumbent in 1853 was the late Rev. Morton Shaw, recently rector of Rougham, Norfolk. In an interesting letter to the present writer, dated December 29, 1899, Mr. Shaw says:—

> Sir Walter Parratt was my organist at St. Peter's Chapel when twelve years old, and was very efficient at that age, and showed the promise of the genius since so wonderfully fulfilled. He used to play Bach's fugues from memory, and, his legs being too short to reach the pedals from the seat, he used to play them by walking over them. He was a first-rate accompanist. His first service was on a first Friday in Advent, when Mr. Keble was our special preacher. Walter was a dear, sweet boy, and I have a very pleasant recollection of him.

The choir school was not satisfactory, and the boy was very soon recalled to Huddersfield, but not before he had taken some organ lessons from George Cooper, at St. Sepulchre's Church, Holborn. On one occasion, while yet only twelve, he accompanied the anthem at a service in St. Paul's Cathedral. John Stainer was then a chorister at St. Paul's. How little those two boys, of nearly the same age, could have thought that they would, in succession, become organists of Magdalen College, Oxford, and receive the honour of knighthood.

HAMPSTEAD RECOLLECTIONS.

In the following summer (of 1854), Walter Parratt again succeeded his brother Henry in an organistship, that of St. Paul's Church, Huddersfield. Henry Parratt had accepted the post of organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, in succession to Father Willis, who built the organ in 1852. From time to time the Parratts, father and sons, visited the Rev. Henry Perkins, uncle of the youths, at his beautiful house, having a fine garden, in the Vale of Health, Hampstead. Mr. Perkins, formerly a missionary in India, was curate of St. John's Chapel, Downshire Hill, afterwards curate of Christ Church, and, subsequently, vicar of All Saints', Child's Hill—all situated in that northern suburb famous for its Heath. Mr. T. L. Forbes, a well-known amateur organist of Hampstead, has kindly furnished us with the following recollections of nearly half-a-century ago:—

> One Sunday evening Walter Parratt had been playing at Christ Church, Hampstead, and, as the service was half-an-hour earlier than that at Downshire Hill Chapel, he was brought to the latter in time to play the concluding voluntary. Going direct from the C to the G organ, he at once played the St. Ann's Fugue of Bach with capital grasp and brilliancy. The stool was high, and he seemed, I remember, to have at times to jump on to the pedals. Both the Parratts, Henry and Walter, were in those days 'Handelians'—playing constantly all the well-known choruses, also the overtures to 'Samson,' 'Esther,' 'Alexander's Feast,' &c., and some of Handel's secular overtures and others. Equally were they brilliant performers on the pianoforte, playing much from memory.
> The style of organ-playing of the Parratts at the time I allude to was wonderfully bold—no hesitation in soloing a hymn tune of suitable character upon the 'Great Trumpet,' or 'Thus saith the Lord' ('Messiah') on the 'Great Trumpet.' But never a shadow of vulgarity—a splendid style, which has now, apparently, been 'improved' upon in favour of items of a character more suited to the instrument!

MRS. THOMAS PARRATT.

It was with pardonable pride that Mr. Thomas Parratt would hasten from the Parish Church to St. Paul's (Huddersfield) in order to hear the outgoing voluntary played by his gifted son, who had no idea of his father's presence.

MEMORY AND CHESS.

Even in his teens Walter Parratt gave many evidences of a remarkable memory. During his organistship of St. Paul's Church, one of the candidates for the post of principal bass in the choir was Mr. Ben Stocks, now the President of the Huddersfield Choral Society. At the competition Mr. Stocks had only one copy of the music—a new song he had worked up for the occasion. On arriving at the church the singer explained to the young organist that a promised second copy had not arrived. 'He asked me,' recalls Mr. Stocks, 'to allow him to look over the song, which I did, and after doing so he passed me the copy back, saying that he thought he could accompany me without having the music before him. This he did, and at the conclusion again asked to look at the copy, when, to my surprise, he pointed out two notes that I had sung wrong!'

WALTER PARRATT,
AGED THIRTEEN.

His ability as a chess-player was very marked even in his boyhood. He soon became one of the strongest chess-players in Yorkshire, and, at the age of sixteen, took part in important matches; moreover, he proved himself to be a worthy foe of Mr. John Watkinson, then editor of the British Chess Magazine, a Huddersfield publication, and of other eminent experts. For several years he was secretary to the Huddersfield Chess Club, and occasionally sent chess problems to London newspapers.

In regard to matters musical we find him taking part in a concert at which Charles Hallé performed, concerning which the Huddersfield Examiner, of November 6, 1858, said:—

Mr. W. Parratt acquitted himself with great ability in his performances upon the New Patent Pedalier, and was deservedly encored. Costa's 'March of Israelites,' Bach's 'Pedal Fugue in E,' and Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March,' were the pieces selected; and, on the latter being encored, Mr. Parratt substituted Handel's celebrated 'Overture to the Occasional Oratorio.' It was, undoubtedly, a trying position for a youth to be put in such close competition with so great an artiste as Mr. Hallé; but we are glad to be able to state that his performances were of unusual merit, and after the concert Mr. Hallé expressed his admiration of Mr. Parratt's clever playing.

The young organist was in great request for opening organs, not only in Yorkshire, but further afield. In some of those early programmes we find the names of Bach and Wély in juxtaposition! People were attracted by the liveliness of Wély, and in so doing they would listen to Bach.

TWO COMPETITIONS.

The year 1860 was an eventful one, in that it brought him two disappointments, which, however, were unattended by any discouragement—Sir Walter Parratt is made of sterner stuff than to be cast down at a seeming reverse. Early in the year he competed for the organistship of Newcastle Town Hall. The judges were Henry Smart and W. T. Best, who, out of twenty-two candidates, returned Parratt as third in order of merit, the other two being Dr. William Rea and the late Dr. Spark. Nothing daunted, young Parratt—he was only nineteen—entered in the same year for the Leeds Town Hall organistship, Goss, Cooper, and Best being the adjudicators. He did better than at Newcastle, and took the second place out of seven selected candidates, the victor being William Spark, nine years his senior. How entirely the course of his life might have been altered had he gained either of these posts! The mention of these defeats may help to encourage some downcast young musician who finds it difficult to imagine any silver lining to the dark cloud of disappointment, and who fails to appreciate the words Nil desperandum!

WITLEY.

At the end of 1861 he was destined to experience a great contrast in his surroundings, the busy Yorkshire manufacturing town of some 52,000 inhabitants giving place to the tranquillity and inertia of a Worcestershire village of fewer than 500 souls. He left Huddersfield to become organist of Great Witley Church, near Worcester, and private organist to the Earl of Dudley, at Witley Court, at a salary of £100 a year and a house. Nash, in his 'History and Antiquities of Worcestershire,' refers to St. Michael's Church, Witley, as 'dry and wholesome'—a remark which might, with equal propriety, be made in regard to the theology of many sanctuaries. It is interesting to find that the painted ceiling, by Verrio, in the church, and the ten stained windows, by Price, are said to have come from the magnificent chapel at Cannons, near Edgware, the seat of the Duke of Chandos, so worthily associated with the name of Handel. There was an entrance from the billiard-room of Witley Court to the church. His first residence at Witley was a grange surrounded by a moat. He was very successful in training a choir of village boys and girls,—there were no available men—and on one occasion when the organ broke down these juvenile singers bravely and effectively sustained the service without accompaniment. The late

CARICATURE SKETCH OF SIR WALTER PARRATT AND THE LATE MR. W. F. DONKIN.

Lord Dudley was much interested in the chess playing of his organist, and used to invite him to Witley Court to meet various people who were strong players—among them the late Lord Lyttelton—and pretended to be quite vexed if Sir Walter did not win his game.

At Witley, after his marriage, in 1864, to Miss Gledhill, of Huddersfield, he lived a country life, planting his own potatoes, keeping poultry, and looking after 'a very intelligent pig.' And here it may be mentioned that Sir Walter Parratt has a very strong affection for animals. Nothing arouses his sympathy so readily as any approach to cruelty to a dumb creature. Once, at Wigan, he not only soundly rated a man for urging on an overladen donkey while going up hill, but went behind the cart and pushed it with all his might. Others seeing him came to help; thus was given a practical lesson in humanity to the driver of the poor beast. Having plenty of time on his hands at Witley he read a great deal, and walked from seventy to a hundred miles a week; 'there was not much else to do,' he remarks during a tramp across Hyde Park, and adds, 'but now, with penny buses and twopenny tubes, the art of walking will soon be lost.' He worked hard at Schumann's pianoforte works, then little known in this country, and a 'Valse-Caprice pour piano par Walter Parratt' (published) belongs to these Witley days. Although Sir Walter Parratt has never shown any great affection for Press personalities, we find that he contributed an anonymous article to the Pall Mall Gazette of January 16, 1867, on 'Musical Transcription,' which caused a good deal of comment.

TENBURY AND A CHESS FEAT.

Although Witley was musically isolated, were not Tenbury and Ouseley well within reach? In this connection the Rev. John Hampton, the present Warden of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, and Ouseley's valued helper forty years ago, kindly sends us the following reminiscences:—

Yes, I have most lively recollections of many visits from Parratt during his stay at Witley. He would think nothing of the walk—fifteen miles each way. On one occasion he amused us by arriving in time for breakfast, he having risen at four o'clock in the morning! The choral service seemed to have a wonderful charm for him. He would occasionally take the organ, and well I remember singing one evening in Wesley's 'Wash me throughly,' to his magic accompaniment. But, of course, the great attraction for him was the Bart. [Ouseley], who had for him the highest regard, and was as pleased as a child to get a kindred spirit who could make great fun out of musical puzzles as well as enjoy the 'Beauties' of Palestrina down to the Gloucester organist [S. S. Wesley]. They had high times together, and we all felt that the visits did our Warden great good mentally and physically.

A very remarkable feat of Sir Walter Parratt's memory is recorded in Dr. F. G. Shinn's book on 'Musical Memory,' also in the words of the Rev. John Hampton:—

In one of the lodgings attached to St. Michael's College, Tenbury, some eight or ten men were assembled. Von Holst and Sir Walter played on the piano in turn such music as was asked for, and always from memory. This went on for some time, when the chess-board was brought out, and Sir Walter proposed to play two men in consultation while he remained at the piano, still playing anything asked for, either from Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, or Chopin. He never looked at the chess-board, but continued to converse with those around, who did all they could to distract him, although without success. His memory never failed him for at least an hour, when the game was won by him, and he told us how he had been watching the chances of a poor fly which had become entangled in a spider's web. Both the antagonists come here occasionally, and have often spoken of the memorable occasion.

WIGAN.

The next change in his career came about in a curious way. He accidentally severed an artery in his left hand. It was a very severe cut—the marks are visible to this day; and although he made light of it to the extent of playing double pedals in order to relieve his disabled hand, still the mishap 'got on his nerves.' It was thought desirable that he should seek a more active sphere of work than the life at Witley afforded. One day Lady (then Mrs.) Parratt said to him: 'Let us look in The Musical Times and see what appointments are going, and take the first that turns up.' It so happened that this Journal of thirty-four years ago contained the following advertisement:—

WANTED shortly, ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for the Wigan Parish Church. He must be a sound Churchman. Organ of 3 manuals and 47 stops. Salary not less than £70 a-year. A very good opening in the town and neighbourhood for a thorough practical Teacher. Apply to the Rector of Wigan, Wigan. (The Musical Times, January 1, 1868.)

The vacancy thus announced was filled by the appointment of 'Mr. Walter Parratt, organist to the Earl of Dudley at Witley,' who, according to the Wigan Observer, 'proved himself a tasteful and competent musician.' The same journal of April 3, 1868, recorded that—

Mr. Parratt commenced his duties as organist of the Parish Church on Sunday last, and in the evening a peal from the church bells announced the fact.

The contrast between the sylvan quietude of Witley and the grimy atmosphere of Wigan must have been very great; but a man of Sir Walter's grit rises above his environment, and thus it came to pass that he was 'very happy' during the four years of his Lancashire life. He settled down to the daily round of a provincial organist, but without letting the grass grow about his feet after the manner of some men similarly placed. He kept up his chess-playing, beating his adversaries in many matches, opened various organs, took part in a choir cricket-match—there were not many runs in his score—and held the office of superintendent of St. Andrew's Church Sunday School. As choirmaster of the Wigan Church Choral Association he did excellent work, and at the concerts given by the Parish Church choir he enlisted the aid of such distinguished artists as Sainton and Lazarus. The kindness he met with from everybody at Wigan—among them the late Lord Crawford, the Countess and all the family—he will never forget, and he numbers among his dearest friends many in that Lancashire town. There, as elsewhere, he strenuously carried out the excellent advice given in the 9th chapter of Ecclesiastes, the 10th verse, to which the reader may be referred.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE.

In the year 1872, John Stainer became organist of St. Paul's Cathedral. This wise appointment created a vacancy at Magdalen College, Oxford. Stainer and Parratt had met and fraternised at Tenbury, and it is not surprising that the newly-elected chief-musician of St. Paul's should write to the Wigan organist in these terms: 'Why not apply for the post I am leaving?' Parratt came south, played at Magdalen, and was at once elected. The loss which Wigan sustained may be estimated from the following account of his last Sunday evening's service in the Parish Church of that town:—

For many months the voluntaries with which he has closed the services have detained a large portion of the congregation long after the Benediction had been pronounced, and on Sunday very few indeed of those who had been present at service left the edifice until the half-hour's playing with which Mr. Parratt delighted his listeners was concluded. Moreover, there was a very large addition to the congregation from other churches and chapels. Nearly all denominations in the town were represented, and as Mr. Parratt closed the organ there were universal expressions of regret that Wigan was losing a gentleman whose services to music in this town cannot be estimated, and whose genial and kindly disposition made him a general favourite. (Wigan Observer, October 5, 1872.)

Oxford opened up a fine field—which had been well tilled by Stainer—for the ever-energetic newcomer and worthy successor to one who had done splendid work in his college and in the University. Parratt not only unwearyingly and ably discharged his arduous duties at Magdalen, but he held the organistship of St. Giles's Church in the city, where, after evening service, he instituted congregational practices of chants and hymns for the following Sunday. He was choirmaster of Jesus and Trinity College Chapels; he conducted the Exeter College Musical Society, the Trinity College Glee Club, Societies at Jesus (where they sang things in Welsh which he could not understand) and Pembroke Colleges, in addition to the Oxford Choral Society. He took a very active part in the operations of the Oxford University Musical Club, and one of our illustrations, in caricature delineation, shows him playing a duet with the late Mr. W. F. Donkin, who was lost in the Caucasus.

OXFORD OCCUPATIONS.

John Sebastian Bach still held the chief place in his musical affections, and in the 'Italian Concerts,' said by the Undergraduates' Journal to have been played by him, a well-known work of the great Cantor's can be identified. On May 15, 1873, he took the degree of Bachelor of Music, and in the same year gave organ recitals at the Royal Albert Hall. He rendered invaluable aid to Ouseley in the preparation of his University professorial lectures at Oxford, and 'Ouseley was never tired of expressing his obligation.' Similar assistance was freely and enthusiastically given to Dr. Corfe, organist of Christ Church, in performances of Bach's St. Matthew Passion and Christmas oratorio in the Cathedral, at which, in the absence of an orchestra, Parratt played the whole of the accompaniments on the organ, and, moreover, in a most masterly manner. On one occasion, in the absence of Corfe, he started to play the service at the Cathedral, and when that pedestrian-devoted organist returned late from one of his long walks, he said: 'I knew it was you, Parratt, as there is no one in Oxford who could play without using the pedals.' As conductor of the Magdalen choir at the May Day celebration on the famous tower of the college, he figures in Holman Hunt's well-known picture of that sunrise event. In April, 1874, he was associated with Dr. S. S. Wesley in the opening of the organ at the Victoria Rooms, Clifton. He says: 'I think I am the only musician with whom Wesley did not quarrel.' For a memorable performance of 'Agamemnon' at Balliol College, in June, 1880, he composed appropriate music, which, by-the-way, he has never heard!

LECTURES.

To the Oxford period belongs his first appearance on the lecture platform, due to the instigation of his old chess friend, Mr. John Watkinson, of Huddersfield. On January 12, 1875, he discoursed at one of the Highfield Lectures in Huddersfield on 'Pianoforte music and its composers since the death of Beethoven.' A year later, when 'The Pianoforte Sonatas of Beethoven' was his theme, he said:—

> We have all heard the story which has been related of several eminent men, that if they were cast on a desert island, and could only have two books, they would choose the Bible and Boswell's 'Life of Johnson.' If a musician were placed in that position, and if through some miracle his piano were cast ashore in a playable condition, I suppose his choice of two books would, in the case of ninety-nine out of a hundred, include these sonatas [of Beethoven] as the first choice; about the second there would be some difference of opinion. For myself I should choose the Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues of Bach, but I doubt if this would be the common selection.

In his case, however, the possession of a copy of the '48' would be superfluous, as he has them all in his head! The titles of his other lectures are 'Old dance tunes and their influence upon the development of musical art,' 'Organs and Organ Music,' and 'The organ as an imitation orchestra.'

HOBBIES.

At Oxford he became an ardent Freemason. He was initiated, May 25, 1875, at the Apollo University Lodge, and ultimately attained the dignity of Senior Grand Warden of Oxfordshire; paradoxically speaking, his present status in the Craft is Past Senior Grand Warden, and he is also Past Grand Organist of England. Chess, however, was his chief hobby. He became President of the Oxford University Chess Club, an office subsequently held by Prince Leopold (afterwards Duke of Albany). He captained the team which played in the first inter-University match against Cambridge in 1873, with the result that the dark blues won nine games, the Cambridge men two, and two were drawn. In the following year, however, the tables were turned, and in responding to the toast of the club, Parratt said that next to winning at chess, his highest pleasure was in losing at the game, and he would sooner see his University beaten again by Cambridge than not play them at all. He made much music with Prince Leopold during this Oxford period, and frequently played chess with that music-loving son of Queen Victoria: on one occasion he played two blindfold games against the Prince and Sir Robert Collins (his Equerry) and beat them both!

AN APPRECIATION.

No better conclusion to this Oxford period of his career could be furnished than the following sidelight on Sir Walter Parratt's University activities, kindly contributed by Mr. Basil Johnson, Music Master at Rugby School, and formerly an Academical Clerk at Magdalen College:—

> I am most glad to write you a few Oxford recollections of my old friend and master, Sir Walter Parratt, for he could have had no more devoted a member of his choir than I was, and not many had the great privilege of being under his guidance for so long as myself, for I was his pupil at the Royal College of Music after leaving Magdalen.
> The first impression that rises in my mind when I think of him at Oxford was the love and respect which we all had for him. Of course his genius was recognised, and the enthusiasm which he inspired among his many pupils was unbounded; but apart from this we all loved the man himself for his modesty, his kindness of heart, his keen sympathy in all that was going on and in what we were all doing, and his industry and devotion to duty, qualities which have come to be known now by a far larger and greater circle. He worked enormously in those days as now. He played two services a day at Magdalen. He never had an assistant, and scarcely ever would allow anyone to take his place. He played the pianoforte a great deal at the Musical Club and at College Concerts, conducted several College Societies, and always taught assiduously. No figure was better known than his in Oxford, generally tearing down the street at a quarter-mile pace, waving his hand to every friend or shouting out a jovial greeting. It was an encouragement to meet him.

His heart and soul were in his work at Magdalen. He once said to me that he always felt that our Chapel there was a specially sacred place. His organ playing is now famous, but I venture to think that it has never been better appreciated than by those of us who heard it day after day at Magdalen and came to see how much thought there was in it. His treatment of some of the Psalms—e.g., lxxviii., lxxxix., civ., cvi., cxlvii., remains vividly in my memory now after twenty years; also his accompaniments of certain anthems and certain oratorio movements from Bach, Haydn, and Mozart, to which he gave the orchestral colouring with a delicacy and finish such as I never heard from any other player on any organ.

Sir Walter's attainments in sight-reading, playing from memory, and transposing have always been phenomenal. I remember his transposing Wesley's 'Wilderness' once all through for the sake of a new chorister who had to take the solo in an emergency, playing it from beginning to end with the utmost clearness and brilliance, and telling me afterwards that 'it was altogether an awkward occasion as he had no copy of the anthem in the organ-loft'! He was recognised at Oxford as a genius in other spheres besides music. No brain was more active even in that seat of learning. He was a great reader and had a wide knowledge of all sorts and conditions of things. Besides all this he was a great chess-player and an enthusiastic Freemason. Once he told me that his two hobbies had been chess and Freemasonry, and there is no doubt that he gave considerable time to both these pursuits. The puzzle is to discover how he ever found time to practise!

WINDSOR.

Ten busy and delightful years had been spent at Oxford when the call, in the nature of a 'command,' came from Windsor. In 1882 Sir George Elvey retired from the organistship of St. George's Chapel, which he had held for forty-seven years, and Mr. Walter Parratt, as he was then, succeeded him in that important and pleasant post. Many deep-rooted ties were severed in leaving Oxford, where the organist of Magdalen was immensely popular, but many as valued were to be formed in the new and honourable office to which he was now called.

The ancient house in which he resides—the official habitation of the organist—is most pleasantly situated in the Lower Ward of Windsor Castle, as shown in our illustration. The view from the drawing-rooms, across the river and beyond Eton, is very fine and picturesque. A part of the building is occupied by the Chapter Library—an apartment in which took place the first reading of 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' by command of Queen Elizabeth, who was present on that interesting occasion.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

One of the first changes made by Sir Walter on coming to Windsor was the rebuilding of the organ, which included the alteration of its compass from F to C, and the transference of the manuals from the east to the south side of Green's noble case, a change which enabled the player to see both the east and west ends of the stately sanctuary. He had scarcely settled down to the quiet life suggested by the tranquillity of the Cloisters when, greatly to his astonishment,

Sir George Grove asked him (in 1883) to accept the principal professorship of the organ at the Royal College of Music, with a seat on the Board of Professors. His acceptance of the offer proved to be a tower of strength to the College, and the powers-that-be may well ask: 'What should we do without Parratt?' Many organists can bear testimony to his great teaching gifts, marvellous memory, his remarkable personality, and unvarying kindness. He also holds the conductorship of the Choral Class at the Royal College. No less than eight of his former pupils are at the present time organists of English Cathedrals, and one, Dr. Percy Buck, of Harrow, is an ex-cathedral organist, while other 'old boys' are, the organist of the Temple Church, the music-master at Rugby, and H.M. Inspector of Music in the Education Department. In 1892, on the occasion of his Knighthood, he was presented with a congratulatory album containing many signatures of past pupils; and on dit those who have studied under him propose to entertain him at a dinner during the present month. These tokens of esteem and affection he greatly values.

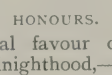
HONOURS.

Marks of Royal favour came to him in the honour of Knighthood,—conferred by the hand of good Queen Victoria, at Osborne, on August 5, 1892—the appointment of Private Organist to Her Majesty, and in 1893, that of Master of the Queen's Musick, both the latter offices having been renewed by King Edward VII. His Warrant reads thus:—



This is to certify that
Sir Walter Parratt, M.V.O.,
is, by the King's Command, hereby appointed into the Place and Quality of Master of the King's Musick.

To have, hold, exercise, and enjoy the said Place together with all Rights, Profits, Privileges and Advantages thereunto belonging.

Given under my Hand and Seal this twenty-third day of July, 1901, in the First year of His Majesty's Reign.

Clarendon.

Seal.

On January 30, 1894, the 101st anniversary of his father's birth, he received the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causâ, from his old University (Oxford), and, in succession to the late Sir John Stainer, he was elected an Honorary Fellow of St. Michael's College, Tenbury. He greatly values the distinction of having been elected a member of the Athenæum Club, under Rule 2, which provides for 'the annual introduction of persons of distinguished eminence in science, literature, or the arts, or for public services.' In 1901 the King conferred upon him the Cross of the Royal Victorian Order.

VARIOUS ACHIEVEMENTS.

In addition to the Agamemnon music already referred to, Sir Walter Parratt has composed music to 'The Story of Orestes,' several anthems for the Obiit services at St. George's Chapel and other special occasions, and some songs. He has edited madrigals for the Bach choir, and he initiated and edited 'Choral Songs by various writers and composers in honour of Her Majesty Queen Victoria' (1899), the last of which is from his own pen. He contributed ten articles to Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' and he wrote the chapter on 'Music' in Mr. Humphrey Ward's compilation, 'The Reign of Queen Victoria' (1887). Mention must be made of his conductorship of the Windsor and Eton Choral Society, the Windsor and Eton Amateur Orchestral Society (which he founded), and the Windsor Amateur Madrigal Society, all honorary and local appointments which provide a fine outlet for his abilities and energy. At one of the concerts of the Choral Society Sir George Grove delivered a little address on Mendelssohn's 'Scotch Symphony' before its performance; and the members of the Madrigal Society had the honour of singing before Queen Victoria on several occasions, in addition to rendering excellent service at the Bach performances, initiated by Sir Walter, in St. George's Chapel. He has held the office of examiner for musical degrees in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and he is now senior examiner in the University of London, and examiner to the University of Wales. He has rendered similar service at the Fellowship examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and at the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music.

PERSONALITY.

To describe the personality of a man is always difficult, especially when his idiosyncrasies are of so strongly marked a nature as those belonging to the subject of this sketch. Of some men it may of a truth be said, the more you know them the less you like them; with Sir Walter Parratt it is exactly opposite. Intercourse with him is in the nature of a mental tonic. Of a strong magnetic personality, his interests are many. He has a fine literary taste, and the range of his authors is wide: De Quincy is a favourite. Architecture has a strong fascination for him, and the works of Pugin are to be found among 'My Friends,' as he calls his books. His chess achievements and Freemasonry hobby have been mentioned. The amount of work he gets through is astonishing. His well-knit figure and wiry frame seem fit for anything. One would think that all his nerve force would be used up in his multifarious duties; on the contrary, any superfluous energy he works off by vigorously manipulating a pair of 7-lb. dumb-bells. Highly cultured, he has happily escaped the 'superior' veneer which some University men mistake for good breeding. In the nature of freaks, there may be mentioned that on one occasion he played through a service without using his thumbs, and once, in very cold weather, he played in a pair of thick woollen gloves! He is fond of a joke and does not disdain a pun. A sentence on a post-card, written in red ink, reads: 'You see I have the pen of a reddy writer!'

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

It is a very pleasant experience to sit with him in the organ-loft at a service in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. In that roomy height, among the brilliant banners of the Garter Knights, one experiences the environment of another world. The rush of life, its cares, its strenuousness, its discords, seem to be resolved into a peace nearly approaching that which passeth all understanding. The service, not the organist, dominates the character of the accompaniments; the voices, not the instrument, are the first care of this reverent chief-musician. An old, sweet-tone, stopped-diapason on the choir organ is a special favourite, and the accompaniments throughout are of simple unobtrusiveness. Would that all organists could hear the devotional beauty of the service in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and profit thereby.

Sir Walter Parratt has a great dislike to the over-blown and over-grown church organs of the present day. He spoke very strongly on this point at the Bradford Church Congress in 1898. At a previous Congress (Wakefield, 1886), when speaking in support of the value of ladies' voices in country church choirs, and enlisting such valuable aid when few boys' voices are obtainable, he said:—

After long experience I am of opinion that ladies are the most regular in attendance, the most interested in their work, and in every way the most easily managed part of any musical society.

In an article on the organ (Victorian Magazine, January, 1892) he wrote, apropos of the office of the church organist:—

The organist must remember, too, that he is in a position of great responsibility. None of us who go to church can escape from him. We must hear his attempts to give musical expression to the vigorous imagery of the Psalms, and it is a terrible thing to hear him at the end of a sermon kicking out his stops with a view to the performance of some vulgar and entirely inappropriate march.

SIDELIGHTS.

Two interesting side-lights on Sir Walter's methods may now be given. The first is by his assistant at St. George's Chapel, Mr. Martin Akerman, who writes:—

The choristers of St. George's Chapel possess one of the warmest spots in Sir Walter Parratt's heart. Their games, music-makings, and theatricals all in turn are sources of great interest and pleasure to him. Each term he hears the boys perform on various instruments and reports thereon, besides giving valuable advice to the various instrumentalists, and occasionally to a budding composer. On Saints' days the choir practice takes place at the choir school, when the boys generally prevail upon their genial choirmaster to perform something. I have heard him give, what is the boys' greatest delight, Mozart's one-fingered waltz, and also 'God save the King' and 'Rule, Britannia!' as a duet for one player! Sir Walter also knows the juvenile affection for sweets and fruit. Huge bags of oranges or apples appear after morning practice in addition to tins of sweets 'to moisten their little throats.' In bad weather, in order to prevent the boys from contracting colds, he will visit them instead of their having to climb up the hill to him for their daily choir practice at 8.30 a.m. For their last theatrical performance he promised to write the incidental music, but found time only to contribute one item, a humorous song, which was sung to the huge delight of both performers and audience.

The second is from Dr. Walford Davies, organist of the Temple Church, and a former chorister and assistant to Sir Walter at Windsor:—

Of Sir Walter's work with his choristers I can tell of my own intense enjoyment while I was one of them, and of my admiration since. One evening, before he came to Windsor, in 1882, I remember seeing a fellow-chorister prostrate himself into a whimsical and uncomfortable attitude. He announced that he was about to 'do penance' because Sir George Elvey was leaving. If he had known how happy we were destined to be with Sir Walter, he might, without disrespect to Elvey, have saved his self-imposed pains. I remember that the daily practices (9 to 10 a.m.) were soon changed to 8.30, lasting usually half-an-hour, and thus lengthening our playtime. I believe the same arrangement holds to this day, and I doubt whether Sir Walter misses more than three of these practices, if as many, through the year. His faithfulness in this respect is inspiring to younger men. He turns what might be drudgery into a daily pleasure. I remember the delight with which we ran to our 8.30 practices, and recall the frequent joy of new anthems to read. Of these, I recollect with special affection two, which I think are excellent types of his own tastes: 'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place' (Brahms), and 'Thou Judge of quick and dead' (Wesley). While he continually brought new music into use, the old school was not neglected; and I suppose the répertoire of Windsor is one of wider range than almost any in England. And I have the impression that Sir Walter's own enthusiasm and vital pleasure in all the schools, from Tallis to Brahms, has much to do with the ideal recollection of them all that can linger in an old chorister's mind. What boy ever really learned to love Gibbons in F of his own accord?

THE BOOK-PLATE OF SIR WALTER PARRATT.
DESIGNED BY MISS ROSIE M. M. PITMAN.

Of his choir-training I remember some notable features: his plan of resting the boys' voices; his never-failing exercises, especially of long held notes and scales; his insistence upon clearness of consonants and natural easy speech in song; his objection to such vocal distortion of words as 'claap the glaad haand' in Crotch's chorus from 'Palestine'; and I remember his clearly-spoken reverent example to us of how Wesley's solemn words should be sung:

'And watch a moment to secure
An everlasting rest.'

To describe my old master's organ-playing I should search for such words as clear, restful, precise, lasting, satisfying. He has a statuesque quality which his critics would call cold and his admirers sane. His proverbial love of Bach is, I think, typical. Those who look for colour and for strong nervous rhythmic sense as the signs of a great artist may declare him unemotional; but those who see greater things to love in the intensity and depths of polyphony, and in the stately, noble restraint of an old cathedral school, will claim Sir Walter Parratt as their faithful champion.

THE MASTER OF THE KING'S MUSICK.

It only remains to refer to the office of The Master of the King's Musick. One of his duties is to conduct the Private Band of the Sovereign whenever the players are called upon to perform, either in the private apartments of their Majesties, or at state functions. The répertoire embraces composers of every nationality. The band consists of thirty-four performers—violins, nine; violas, four; violoncellos, two; double basses, two; flutes, oboes, clarinets, and bassoons, two each; horns, three; trumpets, two; a bass trombone, harp, and tympani complete the number. Previous to the régime of the present Master the performers had always to stand when playing in the royal presence, but, through the kindly offices of Sir Walter, the late Queen commanded that her musicians in ordinary should assume the more comfortable posture of sitting.

Mr. Alfred Gibson, the leader of the King's Private Band, has kindly furnished us with the following interesting notes:—

During the lifetime of our late lamented and beloved Queen the duties of the Private Band were very interesting for many reasons. Her Majesty not only took great interest in its members, but she selected many of the works performed, some on account of old associations, and others by reason of sympathy with and liking for the works of certain composers, both classical and modern. The concerts given at Osborne in particular seemed to bring us closer to Her Majesty, and her kindly interest in our work drew from us the best we could give; many of the performances there will live in our memories as most refined and finished, and, moreover, exceedingly interesting.

I am sure that every member of the Band feels proud to play under the baton of Sir Walter Parratt. He is a strict disciplinarian, but his unfailing tact and humour bring out the best points of every player. The rehearsals are models of well-ordered work, not a moment being wasted. A busy man himself, he is always kindly considerate in regard to our engagements, and although no failing of duty in the Private Band is permitted, rehearsals are appointed at convenient times, and everything possible is arranged for the benefit of all concerned. All work heartily with him, and we are most enthusiastic in the performance of our privileged duty.

QUEEN VICTORIA.

Sir Walter has had important and responsible duties to perform in connection with many domestic events—baptisms, marriages, deaths, and memorial services—connected with the Royal Family. Moreover, it is an open secret that he was a special favourite of our late revered Queen Victoria, and that she had a particular personal regard for him. One of the most treasured of the many gifts, royal and otherwise, that he has received is a richly-jewelled baton, with his monogram set in enamel and diamonds, presented by Her late Majesty in acknowledgment of the Serenade in the Quadrangle of Windsor Castle on her 80th birthday. A description of that interesting and memorable incident, of which the present writer was a privileged eye-witness, appeared in the issue of this Journal for June, 1898.

Although the performances of the Private Band at Windsor and at Osborne took place late in the evening, no one of those who listened was more alert and interested than the aged Queen. She would make enquiries about any new composer, if a piece by such an one had been played. Her memory was quite extraordinary. On one occasion she asked Sir Walter to play some dances from Auber's opera 'Masaniello,' which she had not heard for many years. When the Band had finished, she said to the Master: 'Sir Walter, you only played two dances, there are three! The one you omitted is a Guaracha.' 'Yes, your Majesty,' he replied, 'I did not care for that; but we will play it now.' At its conclusion the Queen said: 'I think you were right, Sir Walter.' One more peep into that happy past. 'The Queen once sang to me,' Sir Walter tells us, 'a song by the Prince Consort. It seemed so strange for me to be sitting at the piano, playing the accompaniment, while she was standing.' Thus Sir Walter experienced the sensations of Mendelssohn, who, fifty years before, enjoyed a privilege that very rarely falls to the lot of any musician.

The career of Sir Walter Parratt is one that serves as an inspiration to every young musician, obscure though he be, to pursue his pathway in life with high aims and noble endeavour, stimulated by hard work, and encouraged with the thought that he may thereby reach the goal of success and gain the esteem of his fellow men.

Dr. Percy Buck writes from 4, Woodlands, Harrow:—

'Dear Sir,—Arrangements are being made for a dinner of the old pupils of Sir Walter Parratt, for Tuesday, July 29, at which he will be the guest of the evening. As secretary to the dinner committee, I find it exceedingly difficult to trace the addresses of all Sir Walter's old pupils. May I, therefore, avail myself of your widely-read Journal to ask them to communicate with me in regard to particulars of the dinner?'

THE ROYAL MUSIC LIBRARY AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

The Royal Music Library, as a separate collection, dates no farther back than the time of George III. Some of the oldest books and manuscripts, many of English origin, may have formed part of the old Royal collection originated by Prince Henry in the reign of James I.; but the large collection of manuscript operas by Steffani and other eighteenth-century composers doubtless formed part of the library of the Elector of Hanover. The precious Handel autographs give a distinction to the Library which makes it unique. George IV. left no mark on the collection; but during the reign of Queen Victoria it was largely added to by presentation and a judicious system of purchase. The hand of the Prince Consort may be traced in making the collection what it now is—of practical use as a good working library.

Until quite recently the books were kept in glazed bookcases in a room at the back of the state ball-room. This location—an upper story approached by a single and narrow staircase—was a most unsatisfactory one, as in the event of a fire the entire collection, with its priceless Handel treasures, might have perished. Last year, however, the cases and their contents were removed from the elevated position they had so long occupied and deposited in a fire-proof room situated in the basement of that labyrinthian building known as Buckingham Palace. There the books remain under the vigilant care of the Master of the King's Musick.

The old Library has now become the private room of Sir Walter Parratt. It contains the organ upon which, in 1842, Mendelssohn played in the presence of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort. For sixty years this curiously-designed instrument stood in one of the private apartments of the Prince Consort. After the late Queen's death it was re-erected in its present position. Our illustration (on p. 453) shows the wardrobe appearance of the organ. No pipes are visible, and the two wings were so designed as to flank the sides of a fire-place, with a mirror between. The bellows, now in the same room as the instrument, originally stood in a corridor. The organ, built by 'Gray, New Road, Fitzroy Square,' was doubtless erected soon after the marriage of Queen Victoria in 1840. It contains one manual (C compass), and an octave of pedals. The key-board and pedal-board can be drawn in and out, like two drawers; when they are recessed, the right-hand side of the organ assumes the cupboard-like appearance of the corresponding wing. The tone is pleasantly old fashioned, and as Sir Walter Parratt plays a few bars of 'How lovely are the messengers,' the strains become reminiscent of that 'happy day,' sixty years ago, so fully and pleasantly recorded by Mendelssohn when he visited the Queen and Prince. Here is the extract from the letter written by Mendelssohn to his family in Berlin, and dated July 19, 1842, in which he refers to this organ at Buckingham Palace:—

I must give you a minute account of my last visit to Buckingham Palace, for I know that you will be as much interested in hearing about it as I am in telling you. . . . Prince Albert had asked me to go to him on Saturday at two o'clock, so that I might try his organ before I left England. I found him alone; and as we were chatting the Queen came in, also alone, in a simple morning dress. She said she was obliged to leave for Claremont in an hour, and then, suddenly interrupting herself, she exclaimed, 'But, goodness! what a confusion!' for the wind had littered the whole room and even the pedals of the organ—which, by-the-way, made a very pretty feature in the room—were covered with leaves of music from a large portfolio that lay open. As she spoke she knelt down and began picking up the music; Prince Albert helped, and, I too, was not idle. Then Prince Albert proceeded to explain the stops to me, and the Queen said that she would meanwhile put things straight.

I begged that the Prince would first play me something, so that, as I said, I might boast about it in Germany. He then played a chorale, by heart, with the pedals, so charmingly and clearly and correctly that it would have done credit to any professional; and the Queen, having finished her work, came to sit by him and listened, and looked pleased. Then it was my turn, and I began my chorus from 'St. Paul,' 'How lovely are the messengers!' Before I had got to the end of the first part they had both joined in the chorus, and all the time Prince Albert managed the stops for me so cleverly—first a flute, at the forte the great organ, and at the D major section the full organ. Then he made a lovely diminuendo with the stops, and so on to the end of the piece, and all by heart—that I was really quite enchanted.

Sir Walter Parratt's room also contains Handel's double ('large') harpsichord — a Ruckers instrument, dated 1612—bequeathed by the composer of the 'Messiah' to King George II. But alas! the only remaining portion of its original grandeur is the case. A night's rest in a room with such surroundings might well be broken with visions of Handel and Mendelssohn.

It is now time to refer to some of the King's music-books carefully preserved in the lower regions of the Palace. And here it may be observed that this article—the first of a series on music libraries—makes no pretension to be exhaustive. It is written with the object of endeavouring to interest the general reader, not to satisfy the cravings of the bibliophile. Upon entering the room, the centre of attraction is the splendid collection of Handel manuscripts—eighty-seven volumes, bound in royal red. Handel bequeathed them to his faithful henchman and amanuensis, John Christopher Smith, who similarly disposed of them to King George III. as a token of gratitude; they are the private property of the Sovereign. These precious treasures cover a period of nearly half-a-century—from 1702, when Handel was a youth of seventeen, to 1751, when, at the age of sixty-six, he composed the oratorio of 'Jephtha.' The volumes are of various sizes, ranging from the small oblong folio to the tall tome. One gazes upon the original manuscript of the 'Messiah'—the rugged caligraphy of a great man—with feelings of reverence mingled with awe. No dull monotony of crotchets and quavers in dignified procession, but character in every symbol, which shows itself in the words, writ in the boldest of capitals—GOD WITH US.

Mozart is peculiarly represented in two volumes, bound in royal red, which contain the following composition of that great master, written in his childhood, and personally presented to Queen Charlotte, the spouse of George III., by the little fellow during his visit to London in the year 1765. Here is the title:—

> Six sonates pour le Clavecin qui peuvent se jouer avec L'accompagement de violon ou flauto Traversiere. Très humblement dédiees à sa majesté Charlotte, reine de la Grande Bretagne, composées par J. G. WOLFGANG MOZART, Agé de huit Ans. Oeuvre III.

The preface, dated '18 January, 1765,' is in French, very long and eulogistic. It may or may not have been written by the young gentleman himself, but it concludes in these words:—

> Je suis avec le plus profound respect, Madame, de Votre Majesté, Le très-humble et très obéissant petit serviteur, J. G. W. MOZART.

In the original edition, the violin part is not printed separately; but it is here to be found in manuscript, written by Leopold Mozart, the father of the juvenile composer. Probably in order not to disconcert the little fellow, the music is so printed that no turning over of the pages is necessary—a large sheet, folded when the book is not in use, can be opened out at the keyboard. Another juvenile effort of Mozart's may be referred to, although the book containing it is preserved at Windsor Castle. It is the autograph manuscript of the religious play, entitled 'Die Schuldigkeit des ersten und grossten Gebotes' ('The observance of the first and greatest Commandment'), composed by Mozart at the age of ten. This precious volume, purchased for the sum of £10 by the Prince Consort in the year 1841, is fully described by Otto Jahn in his 'Life of Mozart' (English edition, vol. i., p. 51). He says:—

> The score, which fills 208 pages, bears unmistakable traces of boyish workmanship in the blotted notes, and in the uncertain writing and spelling of the text of the songs (that of the recitatives is in another and a firmer handwriting), but there is no sign of boyishness in the music itself.

It may be assumed that Haydn made the acquaintance of the Library thirty years after Mozart paid his only visit to England, as C. F. Pohl, in his valuable 'Haydn in London,' tells us that Queen Charlotte presented him (Haydn) with a manuscript of Handel's second Passion Oratorio (Brockes); this may have been the original autograph, as its whereabouts is unknown. Mendelssohn, a great favourite of our late Queen and her Consort, may be found in an interesting full-score manuscript of his 'Athalie,' in a copyist's hand; but the score contains several alterations by the composer, who also wrote in it a characteristic inscription in French, a pretty compliment to the nationality of Racine. By gracious permission of His Majesty the King we are enabled to give a facsimile of this inscription.

The collection of manuscript operas by that very remarkable musician Steffani (1655-1730) is of unusual interest. It formed part of the effects of George I. which that monarch brought with him from Hanover. All Steffani's operas composed in Hanover contain the first violin part written with the G clef on the first line of the stave. Steffani was very kind to Handel when the latter composer visited Hanover, and the old and the young musicians subsequently met in Rome. Bach and Handel in their youth both listened to Steffani's operas at Hamburg; moreover, it is more than probable that Handel had the run of the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace! For example, in a Divertimento drammatico, entitled 'La lotta d'Hercole con Achelo,' by Steffani, on the shelves of the Royal Library, we find the following :—

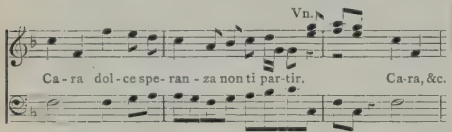
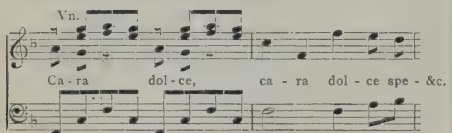
The foregoing is the beginning of the symphony to a song, of which the vocal strain opens thus :



It continues after this manner :—



Here we can trace the source of 'Angels, ever bright and fair.' An opera, in one act (also by Steffani), entitled 'Baccanali,' contains the first notes of 'Let the bright seraphim'!

But this is not all: in these scores of Steffani there may be found the germs of the 'Hallelujah Chorus,' 'Why do the nations?' 'For unto us,' 'How beautiful are the feet,' 'O ruddier than the cherry!' It is evident that the works of this old and almost forgotten composer, Steffani, proved a rich quarry to George Frederick Handel, Esquire.

Some curiosities may now be noticed. At the end of a volume containing Byrd's anthem, 'Lord, in thy rage rebuke me not,' there is a song with chorus, beginning :—

> Welcome they who lead or follow
> To the Oracle of Apollo,
> Here he speaks out of the pottle
> Or his tripos the tower Bottle.

Andrea Nencini is an unknown composer, but he is here represented by the full score of a 'Te Deum, en Anglais, écrit pour deux chœurs, et deux orchestres,' the original manuscript dedicated and sent to the Prince Consort on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Royal, afterwards the Empress Frederick of Germany. The 'famous Mr. Godfrey Keller,' although a shining light in London during the reign of Queen Anne, is among the forgotten celebrities of long ago. An accommodating set of sonatas by him bears this title :—

> Six Sonatas; the first Three for a Trumpett, Houbois, or violins, with Double Basses. The other Three for two Flutes, and two Houbois, or two violins, with Double Basses. Composed by Godfrij Keller. Amsterdam: engraven and printed by Stephen Roger.

A volume of Fantasies for the organ, composed for Charles I., shows that the Italianization of an English name is not a modern fancy, the author's Coperario being a thinly-disguised form of John Cooper, the master of Henry and William Lawes. Of English composers who retained their patronymics we find some curious canons (circa 1611), written in from two to twenty parts, by Elway Bevin, a pupil of Tallis. Of the same mechanical cleverness are specimens by Dr. John Bull. Some of these 'puzzle' canons, in their rotary progressions, are in the nature of a forecast of the 'Inner Circle' trains on the Metropolitan Railway.

Of peculiar interest are two collections of virginal music. The first, 'Will Forster's Virginal Book,' is an octavo volume of 238 folios, and probably belonged to Sir John Hawkins. The music is written on six-line staves. At the beginning of the volume is a 'Table of the Lessons,' written in the same hand as the rest of the book, and signed '31 Januarie 1624. Will. Forster.' The compositions by Byrd, Thomas Morley, John Bull, John Ward, and others, are both sacred and secular. They have some curious titles, e.g. :—

> The Daies of Man.
> For looke howe highe.
> Parsons Innominey.
> If my Complaints, or Pyper's Galliard.
> Watkins Ale.

The other collection is a fine folio volume known as 'Benjamin Cosyn's Virginal Book.' It contains ninety-eight various pieces of music, including 'Six services for the King's Royall Chappell.' At the beginning is an index, divided into 'A Table of these Lessons followinge made and sett forth by Ben Cos,.....made by Mr. Docter Bull.....made by Mr. Or. Gibbons,' and 'A Table of all these lessons generally contained in this Booke are in Nomber : 96. By me Beniamin Cosyn Right owner of this Booke.' The names of the composers include Mr. Cosyn himself, Orlando Gibbons, Doctor Bull, and

Thomas Tallis. Some of the quaint designations of the pieces may be given :—

Sermone Blando.
Filliday Floutes me.
The Galliard to Doct. Bulle's Fantastick Pavin.
The Quadren Pavin.
The Galliard to it.
A Fancy for a Double Orgaine.
Docter Bulle's Jewell.

There is also 'A Catch of 9 parts in one,' set to the words 'Let us goe pray for John Cook's soul.' *

A fine folio volume in the autograph of Henry Purcell arouses special interest. An old manuscript catalogue of the Royal Music Library, compiled about the year 1780, says of this book: 'This volume is Purcell's original score of several of his anthems and odes, and was presented by Dr. Philip Hayes.' This magnificent tome, which bears upon its first page the signature of 'E. H. Purcell, grandson of the author of this Book,' is entitled 'A Score Booke containing severall anthems w^th^ Symphonies.' The anthems are at one end, and at the other are 'Welcome Songs and other songs, all by my father,' as the only surviving son of the composer therein recorded. Among the anthems, all of which have accompaniments for strings, is 'My heart is inditing' (8 voices), 'one of y^e^ anthems sung at y^e^ coronation of James II.' Two anthems have obbligati for two violins. We find in this book such a direction as 'the triple of the symphony again,' and as a title, 'Symphony w^th^ 2 Trumpits, 2 Violins, a Tenur and Bass.' The inscriptions on some of the 'Welcome Songs,' &c., speak for themselves.

A Welcome Song for his Majesty on his return from Newmarket, Oct. y^e^ 21, 1682.

A Latine Song made upon St. Cecilia, whose day is commemorated yearly by all Musitians, made in ye year 1683.

Sighs for our late Sov'raiyn King Charles y^e^ 2^d^.

A Song that was perform'd at Mr. Maidwell's, a schoolmaster, on ye 5th of August, 1689, y^e^ words by one of his scholars.

Next to the Handel autograph scores this Purcell autograph volume is one of the most precious in the Royal Music Library.

The 3,000 volumes of which, roughly speaking, the Library consists include many modern publications—e.g., complete editions of the great classical composers, and an entire set of Wagner's operas in full score, a most valuable acquisition; thus the ancient and modern productions of the art find a home in this Royal collection. Many of the books, presentation copies of feeble effort, are, however, of little value, notwithstanding their gorgeous bindings.

For kind help rendered in the preparation of these inexhaustive remarks on the King's Music Library, thanks are due to Mr. Barclay Squire, and in no small degree to Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Musick, for his kindness in many ways.

The next article of this series will treat of music in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, which is to celebrate its Quincentenary in the month of October next.

THE FORERUNNERS.

The fate of all pioneers belongs to somewhat of a tragedy, no less in art than in active life. Amerigo was the forerunner of Columbus; and although his name has been perpetuated in the histories as the man who gave his name to the New World, the romance of Columbus has, nevertheless, occupied most of the ideas of human kind in its remembrance of the great discovery. Now, Art is a more remote province than a mere geographical conquest; and it is therefore most reasonable (though infinitely pathetic) to find that in art the cruelty which attends the career of the ancestry of things seems even more acute than that which goes side by side with mere physical discoveries. Copernicus, for example (to take a scientific instance), discovered the relations between planetary movements and cube-roots. Surely that was a most amazing matter to diagnose. The man in the street, however, knows nothing of planetary movements, or of cube-roots; yet he knows everything about the laws of gravitation. Mark then the sequel. Sir Isaac Newton discovered the laws of gravitation from the data furnished by Copernicus. Newton remains for ever as the ideal of human genius; but how few remember the influences which provided him with his material? One may say, of course, that every locus represented by an equation of the second degree is either a parabola, a hyperbola, or so forth; but of what effect is that to the average man? He skims the words over; he yawns; he mutters 'pedantry'; and he never suspects that what are to him the commonplace things of life are the outcome of such cabalistic terms.

Music is the counterpart of mathematics in so many points that it is not wonderful that it, too, has had an ancestry which is largely buried in neglect. Music may be described as mathematics transformed by a fairy-wand into a figure of glory. An ellipse made silvern, two straight lines converted into 'golden rules'—you might continue the list indefinitely—but herein lies the essence of its effectiveness. And who were the forerunners? Who were they who snatched from the night some principles of art, and some such sense of fine combination, as in the end has produced the magnificent body of latter-day music which we recognize as fulfilling in a peculiar sense the emotion of the time? One asks the question in vain. You look abroad and find only such traces as persuade you of no more than their mere existence. You are in a historical mood, haply; and you read with glow and admiration 'Summer is icumen in.' Then you ask, somewhat dismally: 'Whence came this particular art?' Here is clearly no forerunner. The thing seems complete in itself. It represents no beginning. Its complex beauty, its most definite self-assertion, make no appeal whatever to the future. It is a summary, not a timid suggestion; it is rather posterity than ancestry. It has had a forerunner all its own, and yet is a forerunner itself.

It is only after such a revelation that one begins to search the facts that lie actually under one's eyes. (By such a method, it may be said, and by it alone, have all the great scientific discoveries been made.) Treading cautiously, you watch in your advance the panoramic figures of Time as they stepped vividly in their own day. Here is Gluck. He is not attractive at a first glance; he has no particular love for strangers; he is curiously inaccessible. There approaches one Dr. Burney, who has braved extraordinary perils by land and by water in order to see the great composer. He plays 'Orfeo' to the English musician; and then—and then—he fades into space; and in his place there swims up a face resolute and most determined, a face upon which Gluck has cast his shadow—one ready, you would say, for every onslaught, and for every chance and change of time. Looking back upon the ideals of Gluck, this face is contemplative, and turns to both a backward and a forward issue. It is the face of Richard Wagner. Here is one, you would say, who, above all men, has the power of piercing the future. It was his attribute, even in his own day, to be known as the musician of the future. And yet one sees him looking back and facing his forerunner with most attentive zeal. Gluck had formulated in one of his famous prefaces his dramatic ideal. Wagner took the thing up and multiplied it fourfold. The forerunner had not worked in vain; he had created Wagnerism, and had yet completed a wonderful work in itself.

Let me go back somewhat in history. The men whose musical work is identified (far more in the character of collector and annotator than in that of composer) with the name of Gregory the Great were certainly the forerunners, in the strictest sense of the term, of much foreign mediæval musical art. They amassed a body of melody; they discovered how to express their religious belief in a single line; they lamented for their dead in music; they celebrated ideally the 'marriage of true minds'—note their 'Veni, Sponsa Christi'; they sang hymns of war in warrior tones—'Deus tuorum militum'; they cried 'amore langueo' with an inimitable sense of repose and of languishment; they were, in fact, in their own way, the interpreters of human emotion, from a superficial aspect of things, as wonderful as one can conceive. Sometimes I think that ancient Egypt, as one sees it through its dim and faint records, had some such musical vitality, and that the most wonderful nation of past days compiled its qualities in a musical outburst of thought. How great a forerunner is here! Here is a nation teaching Judaism how to sing. 'In Exitu Israel de Egypto'—the hymn which has been termed 'Modus Peregrinus'—was surely learned from the nation who understood the weariness of the flesh, who knew well how brief were the days of this life, and who, rather than die for ever, made mummies of men, and kept dead things in an inanimate condition of existence, sooner than relinquish the thought of resurrection. And there is no doubt that Judæa, the persistent, learned the Egyptian lore; there is no doubt that the chants and the songs which the Jews have handed on to us came from Egypt. Here was indeed a forerunner of the world, as I have just now said; and I fancy that in this modern civilization of ours it will not be easy to find so curious an example of the temporal ancestry of things which fulfil, at the present day, a complete vision of an Art.

I have elaborated as far as is necessary the principle which seems to run through all artistic endeavour. That endeavour must be preceded by a paternal effort. The father, the son, the grandson, may not reach the kingdom which was originally marked out for their possession; and yet, in the final issue, the forerunners win their crown. They, in their lifetime, had no reward; they had no recognition. They stepped into the darkness surely with a sense of failure upon their souls, even as Moses, looking from the hill whereon he drew his last sigh, gazed upon the promised land knowing that he would never enter upon the fruition of its glories. But we who look back upon lives fulfilled can see that the forerunners are greatly to be admired. Purcell is, perhaps, an exception in some measure. He certainly had applause in his own day; but the applause was not approachable to his genuine merit. Yet he forecast Wagner—the artist who founded Bayreuth, and was the favourite of a King; he forecast him so curiously that, in a certain passage of 'King Arthur,' you have Wagner, in considering precisely a similar situation, using the same phrases, the same harmonies, the same orchestration (essentially, and, of course, within limits) as those invented by Purcell. Let nobody for one moment think that Wagner was therefore in any sense one who at any time depended upon another man's idea for purposes of his own creation. My point is rather this, that Purcell was a forerunner in so far that his absorption of musical ideas in his own day was so complete that, in the passage of time, the new musician adopted a phrase as natural which had to the older master doubtlessly appealed as a singularly bold and original idea. In other words, the forerunner had conquered a province; he had made novelty a commonplace; he had accomplished his mission.

I have it in my heart, then, to be sad for many of the forerunners of music. They look ahead; they are on tip-toe, peering into the future. They push the abysm of time (as it were) away from their feet; and they mount upwards, but they faint because Time is cruel to them, and will not grant them a lease wherein to fulfil their ideals; but Time, relenting, gives the heritage over to another of a later period, and he reaps the reward which the dead had hoped to attain. It is something of a heart-rending thought; but it is so universal in the commoner walks of life, that one is almost surprised to find the same law working out to what seem to be more important issues in the life that is naturally regarded as more chosen and as more separate.

With all the temptations to emotionalism that music contains, this art more than any seems to me to contain eternal seed-qualities which make for future repute, for future appreciation. One may have, at this moment, it may be, many controversial enemies; that is neither here nor there; it is in the nature of things. But one still watches the passage of music along a path which no words can oppose with any effectual effort:—

> Quod non imber edax, non Aquilo impotens
> Possit diruere.

One sees the advance of things through the forecasts which belong to a dead generation. Those forerunners (I will not doubt it) did not think that they had come to the end of their art. They were but groping their way. They found the milestones on their path, and, as one might do in a country lane, they left their bunch of wild flowers behind them, as they journeyed forward. Nevertheless, they did their work; and very often it happened that their work in itself was of a most remarkable quality. Their chief accomplishment, however, seems to have been to delve a path for the generations that were then only in the making. How strange a problem is thus set before the imagination! They were the forerunners of our art; and we, standing upon a mere bridge of time, dismiss them with a backward gesture, feeling our own imperturbable finality in musical phraseology. We see the receding bridges, it is true, but do we herald, even in idea, the on-coming tidal rush of the future? Richard Strauss, for example, makes no secret of his visitations into the house of the future. To him, as to all his companions in the past, it has occurred that he has been belaboured with abuse, that his work has been pronounced impossible, and outside all decent consideration. Richard Strauss, under one's contemporary eyes, may be developing into the position of a forerunner.

The cemeteries which contain the ashes of great men seldom find a last resting-place for the relics of those who, stepping high upon the ladder of the present, look forward to the triumphs of the future. The more primitive forerunners of music lack recognition. They are treated as the necessary begetters of modern musical thought, not as the splendid adventurers who made modern musical thought a possible thing. Yet they were the guessers of musical life; they spoke of the 'music of the spheres'—feeling in some grandiosely uncertain way that music existed throughout the Kosmos. Not for them was rule or definite law. They imagined greatly; and the lesser generations that came along captured their big ideas, put them into shape and form, and made them intelligible to this most unintelligible race of man. It is for that reason that one can ascend, generation by generation, and find that the forerunners of our immediate times were, indeed, men of most deserved repute, who stood only at the outset of the cycle later to be completed. We have a very great pride in our modernity; and we have reason. But the modernity of yesterday was no less vain. The savage that drummed upon stretched skins thought himself extremely modern; but to-day we laugh at his miserable drum. Yet was he, no less than Gluck, than Wagner, than Richard Strauss a—forerunner. Let it not be thought for a moment that one cares not for any forerunners any artistic generation. 'Homo sum,' said Terence; and I belong to my time also. One does but draw a parallel—here and there burlesque, it is true; but anybody who has the purpose to be philosophic may do something to help human thought and human endeavour.

MORLEY'S PLAINE AND EASIE INTRODUCTION TO PRACTICALL MUSICKE.

Passages from a Lecture delivered by the late Sir John Stainer, Professor of Music, to the University of Oxford, December 8, 1897. The tercentenary of the year in which Morley's book was published (1597).

No book of musical instruction is so worthy of commemoration on its tercentenary as this by old Thomas Morley. He was born in 1557 when Palestrina was between twenty and thirty years of age, he was a contemporary of Wilbye, Weelkes, Dowland, Converso, and Marenzio. Monteverde had not yet stood forth as the champion of an advanced style.

Morley had studied assiduously the compositions of former generations—those of Dunstable, Fulda, Josquin, Ockenheim, Mouton, Horatio Vecchio, Tallis, Kirby, and others, and he was a pupil of our great Englishman, Bird, who was his senior by about twenty years and yet survived him by nearly twenty years. It is necessary to bear this in mind, and throw ourselves back into the midst of his entourage, in order to gauge correctly his true position in the history of the art of music. His early musical training was probably received when a chorister-boy of St. Paul's Cathedral, of which he afterwards became organist, but he resigned this post and kept his appointment as a gentleman of the Chapel Royal.

This introduction to practical music which survives as a permanent monument of his learning and genius was written when he was forty years of age. Seven years later he was taken to his rest. He dedicated the work, with profuse expressions of gratitude, to his master, Bird; and like many books of that period, it is thrown into the form of a dialogue between a pupil, his friend, and their teacher. This dialogue-form of teaching, though cumbersome and involving a great deal of useless repetition, is in one respect very valuable, for we often incidentally obtain peeps into the thoughts, habits, and tendencies of the times, which would not occur at all if the book were in the ordinary form. The characters are introduced in this manner: — Polymathes says to his friend, Philomathes,—

'Staye (brother Philomathes) what haste? Whither go you so fast?'

Phil.—To seeke out an old friend of mine.

Pol.—But before you goe, I praie you repeat some of the discourses which you had yester night at master Sophobulus his banquet: For commonly he is not without both wise and learned guests.

Phil.—It is true in deede. And yester night, there were a number of excellent schollers, (both gentlemen and others) but all the propose which then was discoursed vpon, was Musicke.

His friend then says, with a little dash of sarcasm:—

'I trust you were content to suffer others to speake of that matter.'

Whereupon Philomathes replies:—

'I would that had been the worst: for I was compelled to discouer mine own ignorance, and confesse that I knewe nothing at all in it.' . . . 'Supper being ended, and Musicke bookes, according to the custome being brought to the table: the mistresse of the house presented mee with a part (i.e., a separate voice-part) earnestly requesting mee to sing. But when after manie excuses, I protested unfeignedly that I could not: euerie one began to wonder. Yea, some whispered to others, demaunding how I was brought vp: so that vpon shame of my ignorance I go nowe to seeke out mine old friend master Gnorimus, to make myselfe his scholler.'

This passage is a valuable allusion to home-music of the sixteenth century. We pride ourselves in this Victorian era as being very musical, but we clearly are still far behind our ancestors of the Elizabethan period. It would be interesting to note, if single voice-parts of madrigals, the music without bars, and without cues, were handed round after a dinner-party, how many of the guests would be compelled to 'protest unfeignedly' that they 'could not'!

[The 'Scale of Musicke which wee terme the Gam,' as presented to Philomathes to learn at his first lesson, and various puzzling passages in Morley, were then explained by the Professor, who remarks: 'No wonder that Philomathes at last gets confused and forgets something, and apologises to his master:—"O I crye you mercie, I was like a potte with a wide mouth, that receiueth quickly, and letteth out as quickly."']

Philomathes, having counted up the number of notes in the scale of Hexachords, asks (very naturally), 'Why then was your scale devised of XX. notes and no more?' Morley evidently does not quite know how to answer this question; he did not dare suggest that the Guidonian system was insufficient or inadequate, and yet he knew quite well that all vocal composers of his time (including himself) exceeded these limits at both extremities. His reply is an evident subterfuge: 'Because that compasse was the reach of most voyces: so that vnder Gam vt the voice seemed as a kinde of humming, and aboue E la a kinde of constrained skricking. But wee goe from the purpose, and therefore proceede to the singing of your ensample.'

Philomathes is then introduced to the various 'formes of notes': Large (equal to eight of our semibreves), Long (equal to four semibreves), Briefe (equal to two semibreves), Semibreife, Minim, Crotchet, Quauer, Semiquauer.

This list of notes is a most interesting link between mediæval and modern music.

[The length of the various notes was then explained; it was shown that the Minim was formerly the shortest note in existence, although even in Morley's time a semiquaver was necessary.]

During the period when Vocal Music was the principal branch of the art, the old long-drawn notes answered all purposes, because, though they looked very long on paper they could be sung as fast as desired; and they were probably always sung much faster than we now imagine. The Minim, being their shortest note, must have been equal to our quaver, at most. But instruments of the keyboard family, virginals and other predecessors of our pianofortes, had been rapidly coming into vogue, and brought with them a special kind of music, that is to say, Variations on themes, sacred or secular. The rapidity of execution on virginals in the days of Morley was extraordinary, and demisemiquavers were in common use in virginal music.

The master then discourses with Philomathes on Ligatures, and here we have the most reliable account of these complicated signs which has come to us; not that there is a dearth of treatises on this subject, but because the explanations are often so entangled and unintelligible.

All, however, in Morley is perfectly clear and plain.

Next our student is introduced to Mood, Time, and Prolation.

Mood when a Long was the unit divided into Breves.

Time when a Breve was divided into Semibreves.

Prolation when a Semibreve was divided into Minims.

But as the note called the Large was still in use, the Mood was divided into Greater or Less. Greater when the Large was the unit, Less when the Long was the unit. In what we should call triple measure, the unit was not dotted as now, but it was understood to contain three of its kind, not two. As if we, for example, in $\frac{3}{2}$ time, made our semibreve without a dot, to equal three minims; or in $\frac{3}{4}$ time made our undotted minim to equal three crotchets. But our ancestors discovered how to make even this complicated.

The Mood was Perfect when a Long equalled three Breves, Imperfect when it contained two. Time was Perfect when a Breve equalled three Semibreves, Imperfect when it equalled two. Prolation was not called Perfect and Imperfect, but Major when the Semibreve equalled three Minims, and Minor when it equalled two. What we call compound times were obtained by mixing these together. It may not be realised that the note called the Large equals 256 Demisemiquavers, or in the Greater Mood Perfect equals 384 Demisemiquavers.

Morley then enters into the subject of proportions. At the close of the fifteenth and in the early part of the sixteenth century, learned musicians loved to revel in the mixture of notes of all sorts of relative lengths—Duple, Triple, Quadruple, Quintuple, Sextuple, Septuple, Octuple, Nonuple, Decuple. These were simple. Then there were compound—Sesquialtera, Sesquitertia up to Sesquinona, then Duplasesquialtera, and so on. But this silly attempt to combine notes of such different relative lengths was happily confined to the works of theorists, it rarely found its way into compositions intended for use. Old Morley seems to have been laughing up his sleeve while discoursing upon it. It is rather suggestive that he should have taken nonsense-words for his Plain-song :—

> Christes crosse be my speede, in all vertue to proceede, A, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, j, k, l, m, n, o, p, q, r, s & t, double w, v.x. with y, ezod, & per se, con per se, title, title, est Amen.
> When you haue done begin againe begin againe.

Pages of very complicated music in various proportions follow.

In Part Second, the master expounds descant to his pupil. This chapter is full of interest to the historian, as it shows that the extempore descant of the previous century had become in Morley's time merged into what we should call counterpoint. It is gradually being formulated, as in the course of the next century, by the learned and dry Fux, but it has ceased to be alla mente, and it is rapidly merging into the later counterpoint. Morley's method is to take a simple subject which he calls his Plain-song, and add a part note against note, two notes to one, three notes to one, and with discords by 'binding' or suspension. To this :—

he gives over fifty different counterpoints. What we call the Fourth Species, or, by Syncopation, he calls quaintly a 'Driving-way' or 'Binding-wise.'

There are several points of historical interest here. Descant, as is well known, was originally the art of making simple harmony, generally by adding one part only, to a short piece of church plain-song. Rules for going up or down according to the movement of the plain-song, and for making concords and for avoiding discords, were learned by heart, and were often so well mastered that not only on looking at a plain-song could an expert add his descant, but even on hearing it sung — if sung slowly. Philomathes says, 'When I learned descant of my maister Bould, hee seeing me so toward and willing to learne, euer had me in his companie, and because he continually carried a plain-song booke in his pocket, he caused me doe the like, and so walking in the fieldes, he would sing the plain-song, and cause me sing the descant.'

But theorists often found some difficulty in getting a morsel of plain-song convenient or suitable to their clever tricks, so they took to writing their own plain-song—gradually dropping the title plain-song (as it had in fact ceased to be plain-song), and called it canto fermo, fixed-song or subject. Examples of these when written down, laid the foundation of that art of counterpoint on any given subject, which is the backbone of Bach's, Mozart's, and Mendelssohn's choral works and fine fugal writing.

The next noticeable fact is that the word Fugue is creeping gradually into use, as signifying a point of imitation carried through two or more parts, but not so strict as the following of the Dux and Comes in the Canon.

In the Part Third, Morley treats of Vocal composition, or as he terms it, the 'setting of songs,' giving rules for harmonization, and for writing cadences. Of course the word Song, did not necessarily mean a solo, there were 'songs' in three, four, five, or six parts. He also gives an interesting four-part setting of the eight Gregorian Psalm Tones or Gregorian Chants. He then discourses on the characteristics of Motets and Madrigals. His description of the latter is most quaint: 'The more varietie of points bee shewed in one song, the more is the Madrigal esteemed, and withall you must bring in fine bindinges and strange closes according as the words of your Dittie shall moue you.' Then come various specimens of Canon, including the well-known one in the shape of a cross. Then Morley gives general hints as to composition; amongst them is a warning not to put rests and stop a voice in the middle of a word. He gives a funny example from our old English writer, John Dunstable, who, in setting the words 'Ipsum regem angelorum,' stops the Tenors at angelo . . . and after beating eight bars, makes them sing 'rum'; then another eight bars are counted and they again say 'rum.' But notwithstanding Morley's warning, the habit of stopping in the middle of a word lasted on for another 150 years; it frequently occurs in the opera-songs of Handel and his contemporaries.

He laments sadly over the growing distaste for the sacred and dignified motet, and the rapid usurpation of 'light' music, which, he says, 'is not particular to vs in England, but generall through the world.' Morley is curiously inconsistent when he makes this onslaught on light vocal music, for he himself was one of the finest composers in Europe of Fa las, Ballets, and Canzonets. He also speaks of the 'new-fangled opinions of our countrey men, who will highlie esteeme whatsoeuer commeth from beyond the seas, and speciallie from Italie, be it never so simple, contemning that which is done at home though it be neuer so excellent.' History does indeed repeat itself. Morley would have been astonished could he have foreseen that, 250 years later, our beautiful song-writer, Hatton, found it profitable to bring out a set of songs under the name of Czapech, and that Herr Manusfeldt's songs were very much admired until they turned out to be the compositions of our Hugo Pierson, then they were shelved for ever. That in my youth, a Miss Diana Dickson got a hearing as Signorina Dianelli; that recently, Mr. Campbell was only allowed to walk the operatic stage as Signor Campobello; and that a good English violinist, in order to secure an impartial hearing, appeared before the public under a German pseudonym. What folly! How can we excuse ourselves? Here is an excuse: It has been our national characteristic for 300 years; let us agree to say that we are not responsible for it, it is entirely the result of heredity!

Old Morley generally treated the weaknesses of his time and the unkindness of critics in a polite and gentlemanly way, but some stupid musicians had said that his book was so comprehensive that it would take away their pupils, that it would rob 'a number of honest poore men' of their living. Morley quickly disposes of them, he declines to answer such 'malicious caterpillars.' He adds, 'And as for those ignorant Asses, who take vpon them to lead others, none being more blinde then themselues. . . . I ouerpasse them, as being unworthie to be nominated.'

In reading over the long list of dances of various kinds, one must regret that they are so entirely neglected and forgotten; they can all be recovered from old books like 'Chorégraphie' and others. Touching rapidly on dance tunes of the period, Pavans, Galliards, Almanes, Branles, Voltes, and Countrydances, the master then tells Polymathes and Philomathes that they now 'lacke nothing of perfect musicians' and only require practice and experience. He adds, 'and seeing night is already begun, I thinke it best to returne, you to your lodgings and I to my booke.' They tell the master they will be busy on the morrow 'making prouision for our journey to the Vniuersitie,' they beg him for some songs (i.e., vocal works) which may direct them in their compositions, and also 'recreate vs after our more serious studies.' He replies 'As I neuer denied my schollers any reasonable request, so will I satisfie this of yours, therefore take these scrolles, wherein there be some graue, and some light, some of more parts and some of fewer, and according as you shall haue occasion use them.'

[In conclusion were sung some of the 'songs' from these very scrolls which the master handed to his scholars as a farewell gift: two beautiful motets and a madrigal—'Eheu, sustulerunt Dominum' and 'Agnus Dei,' and 'O sleepe, o sleepe fond fancie'—as well as three other compositions by Thomas Morley, the madrigal 'Arise, awake, you silly shepherds sleeping,' and two balletts—'Fyer, fyer! my hart!' and 'Daintie fine sweet Nimphe delightfull,' the former taken from 'The Triumphes of Oriana' (1601), and the latter from the 'First Booke of Balletts to five voyces' (1595).]

HANDEL'S MESSIAH:
PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

By Professor Prout.

III.

I have now to speak in detail of the results of the collation of the text of the oratorio, and also of the modifications of Mozart's score which have appeared either necessary or advisable. The most convenient plan will be to take the work number by number; but it will be first needful to give the sources on which the text of the present edition is based.

The most important of these is the photo-lithographed facsimile of Handel's autograph, the original of which is in the King's Music Library at Buckingham Palace. Of this there are two editions: the earlier was published in 1868 by the Sacred Harmonic Society, and the later in 1892 by the late Dr. Chrysander, as one of the supplemental volumes issued by the German Handel Society. It is the latter that I have collated for the present edition.

Next in importance and value to Handel's own manuscript are the copies made by his amanuensis, Christopher Smith. Foremost in interest among these is the copy known as the 'Dublin score,' because it was that from which Handel conducted the first performance of the oratorio in Dublin. This copy formerly belonged to the late Rev. Sir Frederick Ouseley, who bequeathed it, together with the rest of his valuable musical library, to St. Michael's College, Tenbury. Though the greater part of this score is in Smith's handwriting, it contains three complete numbers in the composer's autograph; and in most of the movements there are notes, sometimes of great importance, added by Handel himself. The indications senza Ripieni and con Ripieni, which are not found in the autograph, and which have been already spoken of, are all taken from this score. I have to express my best thanks to the Rev. John Hampton, the present Warden of St. Michael's College, for the generous manner in which he has placed this priceless manuscript at my disposal for the purpose of this edition.

Another valuable and most interesting MS. score, also in the handwriting of Smith, is that belonging to Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, who has most kindly allowed me to collate it. This copy, which formerly belonged to Dr. William Hayes, whose name is written on the fly-leaf of each of the three volumes in which it is bound, has an advantage over both the autograph and the Dublin score in being quite complete. Mr. Goldschmidt has also collated it with the Hamburg conducting score, formerly in the possession of M. Victor Schoelcher; by its aid I have been able to verify more than one doubtful reading, and thus to make use (at second hand) of the Hamburg score, also in Smith's handwriting.

I have also to thank my friend Dr. W. H. Cummings for the loan of a curious and interesting volume, in Smith's handwriting, containing songs from Handel's oratorios, transposed, most probably, for some special singer. Among these are 'Comfort ye' and 'Ev'ry valley,' in D, 'Rejoice greatly,' in G, and 'He was despised,' also in G. The examination of this volume has occasionally helped me to settle a doubtful point.

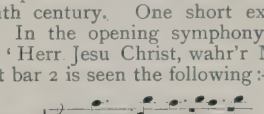
Of the printed editions of the full score, I have collated those of Walsh (or, more accurately, Randall and Abell) and Arnold; and of scores with Mozart's accompaniments, the original (oblong folio) edition by Breitkopf and Härtel, the reprints of the same by Addison, Novello, the London Handel Society, and Peters, and Franz's edition, already spoken of. In nearly every case the same mistakes are to be found; and the chief result of the examination has been to confirm my previous feeling as to the necessity of a revised and corrected text.

In going through the oratorio it would be wearisome and unprofitable to call attention to every small correction that it has been necessary to make, such as the deletion of countless shakes, added, for the most part, in the first published edition; neither is any mention made of what are obviously printer's errors. Nothing of importance has been consciously passed over, though it is more than possible that, with such a multiplicity of detail, a few points may have inadvertently been overlooked. Enough will, in any case, be given to show the chief respects in which this edition differs from its predecessors. For easier identification every tenth bar in the full and vocal scores is numbered.

PART I.

No. 1.—Overture.—In the introduction (Grave) of this overture, Mozart has added parts for bassoons, horns, and trombones, while for the fugue he employs only strings. Handel, as we know from the parts bequeathed by him to the Foundling Hospital, used oboes and bassoons, in addition to the strings, in both movements. It is more than probable that he employed the organ also, though of this there is no positive evidence. I have therefore re-scored the overture, removing the parts for the brass as being inappropriate and superfluous, and restoring the reed instruments, doubling the oboes in some places by clarinets, and introducing the organ from time to time.

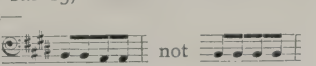
The double dot was not in use in Handel's time, and the value of a single dot after a note varied according to circumstances, adding either a quarter, one-third, half, or three-fourths to the length of the preceding note; the performer was guided by the context in deciding the exact value to be given to the dot. Of this there is abundant proof in the music of the middle of the eighteenth century. One short example will suffice. In the opening symphony of Bach's Cantata 'Herr Jesu Christ, wahr'r Mensch und Gott,' at bar 2 is seen the following:—



where it is quite evident that the first group in the first flute must be played , so that the second note shall be of the same value as the fourth note of the second flute. There are many passages in Handel's music in which it is certain that the notes, if performed exactly as written, do not give the effect intended by the composer. This question has been fully discussed by the late Sir W. G. Cusins in his pamphlet 'Handel's Messiah: An examination of the original and of some contemporary MSS.,' pages 21 to 24. The writer brings strong evidence to prove that in many places in Handel's works a quaver was written where a semiquaver was intended. The introduction of the overture to the 'Messiah' is undoubtedly one of these passages; I have therefore felt no hesitation in changing the text throughout to—

In this I am supported by the authority of Dr. Crotch's arrangement of the overture for the organ. As Dr. Crotch had studied at Cambridge under Dr. Randall, who had himself been a viola player in Handel's orchestra, there can be no question as to the trustworthiness of the traditional reading that he has given.

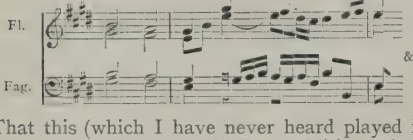
No. 2.—Recit.—'Comfort ye, my people.' The autograph here shows two interesting variations from the printed editions. In the bass of bar 15, Handel wrote for the last four quavers—



In the Dublin score Smith has the four B's; but this copy, though in general extremely correct, is not altogether free from transcriber's errors, and, as Handel's manuscript here is perfectly distinct, I have adhered to it, considering the musical effect of the $\frac{4}{4}$ chord on the last beat of the bar to be a distinct improvement. At bar 22, Handel has written—

Here, again, the Dublin score agrees with the printed editions in giving D, not F, at the seventh quaver of the bar. Possibly Handel himself made the change; in any case, it has seemed best to give both versions here, and to leave the choice of reading to the singer. In this number I have added nothing to the score except a few notes for clarinets in bars 12, 13, and 26, to fill up the empty two-part outline of the harmony.

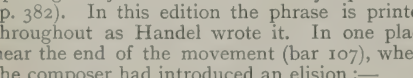
No. 3.—AIR.—'Ev'ry valley.' In this number considerably more modification of the printed score has been necessary. To fill up the numerous bars in which only the voice-part and bass were printed I have thought it advisable to write parts for clarinets, and to add notes in a few places to the bassoon parts. On the other hand, I have cut out without hesitation the tasteless flourishes for flutes and bassoons in the accompaniment to some of the cadences. For instance, the final cadence for the voice (bars 74 to 76) is thus accompanied in the printed score:—



That this (which I have never heard played in this country) is one of Hiller's additions there can be no doubt; for nothing at all resembling it is to be seen in any one of the three scores of which Mozart's autographs exist.

In bar 24 the first note of the bass is D, not B, both in Handel's manuscript and in the Dublin score. The mistake (evidently in the first instance a printer's error) was made in Walsh's edition, and has been copied by all succeeding editors. The fact that it leaves the chord without any third might at least have excited some suspicion as to its correctness. In several passages of this air I have removed or simplified the additional accompaniments, where they seemed irrelevant or superfluous,

No. 4.—CHORUS.—'And the glory of the Lord.' The division of the syllables in the opening subject has been already spoken of (p. 382). In this edition the phrase is printed throughout as Handel wrote it. In one place near the end of the movement (bar 107), where the composer had introduced an elision:—



the word 'and' is omitted, as in all the printed editions, the sense being quite complete without it. At bars 12 and 13 the first entry of the subject in the alto is thus accompanied in the printed score:—

This harmony seems quite contrary to the spirit of the music; had Handel intended the double suspension here, surely he would have indicated it in the figured bass. I have therefore replaced the passage (which I suspect to be Hiller's) by the simpler harmonic progression which Handel's bass naturally suggests. The only addition I have made to Mozart's score is the organ part; in two places (bars 17 to 29, and 63 to 68), in which no accompaniment but that of the basses is given to the chorus, I have doubled the voice parts in unison—in the former case by the organ, small notes in the wind being given for use where no organ is available; in the latter passage by the wind.

No. 5.—RECIT.—'Thus saith the Lord.' Here is another case in which Handel's notation does not express his precise intentions. In his time dots were very seldom written after rests; and it was a matter of common knowledge that if a quaver were written after a rest, and before a dotted quaver followed by a semiquaver, the first note should be played as a semiquaver, e.g.:—

This figure, which plays an important part in the accompaniment of this recitative, is indifferently written by Handel in both forms.* In bars 3 and 4 we find it as at (B), while in the immediately succeeding repetitions of the passage Handel takes the older notation (A). In the latter part of the recitative he gives the form (B) in bars 22 and 29, but retains (A) in bars 25 and 27. It is quite evident that the rhythmical figure should be the same in each case; I have therefore adopted the modern notation throughout. It is curious that Mozart, who in the similar figure occurring in 'The trumpet shall sound' has altered Handel's notation in accordance with modern usage, has not done so in this number, but has left it as it was written by Handel and as it is printed in Walsh's edition—the only one to which he had access.

No. 6.—AIR.—'But who may abide.' In Handel's original score in Buckingham Palace these words are set for a bass voice to quite different music, though the first five notes of the subject are identical in both. The second and far superior version is found in the Dublin score, and is in Handel's autograph throughout. It is written in the alto clef, but is nevertheless printed for a bass in nearly all the editions I have met with. Mozart gives it to the bass, though Walsh's edition, from which he prepared his score, has it correctly for an alto voice, the part being printed in the G, not the C clef. In his score the air is found in the Appendix, the older version just spoken of being given in the text. In Arnold's edition the piece is also correctly given for alto. I have, of course, printed it for the voice for which Handel wrote it. In the Dublin score the usual indications as to Ripieni are not given; but as the preceding recitative is marked senza Rip., there can be no doubt as to Handel's intention. Had he meant con Ripieni he would certainly have written it to contradict the previous direction. I have therefore added senza Rip., but have put the words in brackets to show that they are not in the original. The only addition I have made to this number has been a part for clarinets, to fill up the empty two-part harmony. In bar 22 I have slightly modified the disposition of the harmony (not Handel's) for the strings; at bars 48 to 58 I have given the flute parts to the clarinets, transposing them an octave lower, to support the voice instead of obscuring it; and in the final cadence of the voice part (bars 148 to 150) I have added clarinets, and struck out the flute parts as superfluous.

* Sir W. G. Cusins, in the pamphlet already referred to, points out that in one place in the Dettingen Te Deum Handel has written  for the trumpet, and  for the oboe in the same passage, proving that a quaver might stand either for a quaver or a semiquaver.

No. 7.—Chorus.—'And He shall purify.' In this chorus I have for the first fourteen bars restored Handel's organ accompaniment. I have added clarinets to the score, in order to use them with bassoons to replace the organ, if necessary. (See remarks on No. 4.) At bar 4 the first violin part, both in the autograph and the Dublin copy, has—

and later editors have copied him, regardless of the fact that this reading causes bad consecutive octaves with the viola. Mozart doubtless noticed the octaves, for in the earliest edition of his score we find a conjectural emendation in the viola part—but in the later reprints of this edition the consecutives reappear! Even Franz, who, it might have been imagined, would have noticed the octaves, and at least have taken the trouble to collate the passage with the autograph facsimile, does not appear to have done so; he follows other editors in giving the text incorrectly.

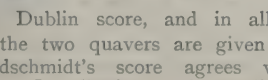
At the first entry of the alto (bars 9 and 10) Handel's autograph has quite distinctly—



In the Dublin score, and in all printed editions, the two quavers are given as . Mr. Goldschmidt's score agrees with the autograph. In adhering to the reading of the original manuscript I have been guided by two considerations: first, that the subject of the chorus has (not), and that the same form of the melody is persistently carried through the movement; and secondly, that in one place (the tenor in bar 27) Handel at first wrote and then corrected it, as is clearly seen in the facsimile. It is further worthy of notice that the chorus is founded upon a movement in one of his Italian duets 'L'occaso ha nell' aurora' (German Handel Society, Part XXXII., pages 119 to 121); and in this movement the subject invariably appears with two even quavers. It is doubtful whether the alteration was made by Handel himself; if it was, it would no doubt be in order to make the passage go with the bass at the same point. The notes in the second violin and viola at bar 15 are not in the original MS., but have been added in pencil by the composer himself in the Dublin score. At bar 40 I have deleted the D's which Mozart has written for the horns, because they make a $\frac{4}{3}$ chord, which (as already mentioned) Handel hardly ever employs.

Occasional Notes.

The Private Band of the Sovereign has undergone more than one change since its formation in the days of long ago. At the time of the Accession of Queen Victoria (in 1837) it consisted entirely of wind-instrument players. In an article entitled 'Her Majesty's Chamber Band,' which appeared in the Musical World of December 22, 1837, the constitution is given as follows:—

Clarinets	5	Horns	2
Flutes	2	Trumpet	1
Oboes	2	Trombone ..	1
Bassoons	2	Serpent	1
Drums	1

Thus making a total of seventeen players. The journal above referred to furnished the names of the performers, and analysed their nationality. The former included such familiar patronymics in the orchestral world as Waetzig (twice, clarinet and horn), Card (flute), Malsch (oboe), and Schrœder (trombone); nine are designated Englishmen and the remaining eight foreigners. The leader was 'Mr. Williams, of Hereford,' a celebrated clarinet player in his day and the author of an instruction book for the instrument, while the Master of the Queen's Musick at that time was Mr. George Frederick Anderson, who held the appointment for upwards of thirty years. At the end of 1840, the year in which the marriage of Queen Victoria took place, the Private Band was re-organised by the Prince Consort, who changed its constitution from a wind band to a full orchestra. The Prince's beneficial influence showed itself in many ways, but none more so than in his love for music and the means he used for the propagation of the art in its best and purest forms.

The English Coronation Exhibition, organized by Herr Nicholas Manskopf at Frankfort-on-the-Main, is not only a compliment to Our Most Gracious Sovereign King Edward VII., but also to the English nation. It is probably the first of the kind in Germany, and therefore the thanks of all English music-lovers are due to Herr Manskopf, not only for his generous appreciation of English music and musicians, but for the practical part he has taken in furthering their interests in Germany. In his Musical Museum, a singularly fine opportunity is offered for some peeps into the workshops and into the lives of musicians of every country, epoch and school, for if Herr Manskopf is anything he is eclectic in his tastes. With all the zeal of an enthusiast, he has been forming this collection for many years past, and with so much success that it now numbers upwards of 15,000 specimens. The late Duke of Edinburgh took the greatest interest in the museum, and conferred on its promoter the Saxe-Coburg Family Order (Sachsen-Ernestinischen Haus-Orden).

The special Coronation Musical Exhibition contains nearly 100 entries, and almost all our leading living composers are represented. There are signed photographs and manuscripts of Dr. Frederic Cowen, Dr. W. H. Cummings, Dr. Edward Elgar, Mr. Edward German, Mr. Percy Pitt, Dr. Villiers Stanford, and many others, in addition to the portraits of several of our leading singers and instrumentalists. An interesting feature is the collection of portraits of the children of Queen Victoria, taken at an early age, arrayed in fancy-dress costumes. These, evidently the work of an amateur, bear upon them the different names of the children in the handwriting of the late Prince Consort, and they have probably never been exhibited before. It only remains to be said that the Exhibition and the Museum can be visited free of charge on application to Herr Nicholas Manskopf, 18, Wiesenhüttenstrasse, Frankfort-on-the-Main, and that he gladly welcomes any of our music-loving countrymen who may be passing through Frankfort, or who may be sojourning at Homburg, Nauheim, Wiesbaden, or any other German holiday resort.

Professor Horatio W. Parker, the distinguished American composer, was the gratified recipient of the honorary degree of Doctor of Music conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge on the 10th ult. This distinction is another instance of honour to whom honour is due. In presenting Professor Parker to the Vice-Chancellor, on the 10th ult., Dr. Sandys, the Public Orator of Cambridge, observed that the University of Yale had recently celebrated its bi-centenary, and that Mr. Parker's fame was far from being limited to the land of his birth. Among those of his works which were well known in England were his 'Legend of St. Christopher,' his 'Wanderer's Psalm,' his 'Hora Novissima,' and his 'Astant Angelorum Chori.' In a musical career extending over hardly twenty years, the number of his compositions had been no less than fifty-four. After seven years' work as Professor at Yale, he was now enjoying a year of comparative repose, though he was far from ceasing to cultivate the art of his choice. Even amid the celestial repose of the Elysian fields, Orpheus himself (if there is truth in Virgil's song)

> 'Makes music on his seven-stringed lyre;
> The sweet notes 'neath his fingers trill,
> Or tremble 'neath his ivory quill.'

We append the Latin text of the Orator's speech:—

Collegio Yaleano, ultra oceanum Atlanticum posito, ob annos ducentos feliciter exactos haud ita pridem libenter gratulati, non minus libenter hodie virum eximium salutamus qui Collegio in eodem artem musicam praeclare profitetur. Viri huiusce autem fama, non patriae tantum finibus inclusa, etiam trans oceanum ad nos volavit. Inter opera eius egregia, quae annorum minus quam viginti in spatio exiguo plus quam quinquaginta ad numerum edidit, artis musicae peritis nota sunt imprimis Sancti Christophori acta modis musicis ab eo accommodata; etiam peregre notus est Cantus eius Peregrinus; neque minus nota 'Hora Novissima,' et carmen illud, cuius in ipso limine 'astant angelorum chori.' Nunc annorum septem post labores professoris in munere toleratos, anni unius otio bene parto fruitur; sed ne in otio quidem arti suae eximiae colendae defuit. Orpheus ipse, si vera canit Vergilius, etiam camporum Elysiorum inter otia divina

> 'obloquitur numeris septem discrimina vocum, > iamque eadem digitis, iam pectine pulsat eburno.'

We hope very shortly to furnish our readers with a Biographical Sketch of Professor Dr. Parker.

The interest taken in the English Coronation ceremony, and not only of the present time, but of bygone days, is very widespread. Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, our valued correspondent in America, has contributed some exhaustive and illustrated articles on 'Coronation Music' to the New York Daily Tribune, of which he is the musical critic. The editor-in-chief of the Tribune is, by-the-way, the Special Envoy sent from the United States to the Coronation of Great Britain's King.

Certain remarks of the German Emperor anent Wagnerian noisiness have inspired Dr. Richter to write from Bowdon (Cheshire) to the Allgemeine Musikzeitung a letter, of which the following is a translation. Its purport cannot fail to prove interesting. The great conductor and friend of Wagner says:—

I cannot escape the conviction that at the performances of Wagner's works in many places sufficient attention is not paid to the exact reproduction of the p's and pp's, which is absolutely essential if we are to produce the effect wished for by the master, which is, moreover, quite practicable. I am certain that in no scores are there such precise directions for the delicate and the refined in performance as are put in Wagner's masterpieces; but if such are not conscientiously observed, then, indeed, any musical work becomes noisy. A change for the better in this respect can best be wrought by the Press; if the 'Honest Markers' are but duly attentive, and 'rap over the knuckles' the negligent ones, then . . . .

Conductors will in future have to mind not only their p's and q's, but their p's and pp's.

The preliminary programme of the Bristol Musical Festival, to be held on October 8, 9, 10 and 11, has been issued. The chief works to be performed are as follows:—

Handel: Messiah ('the whole work'), Zadok the Priest, and The King shall rejoice.
Beethoven: Pianoforte concerto in E flat.
Mendelssohn: Elijah and Antigone.
Berlioz: Grand Requiem.
Wagner: Tannhäuser overture, Walkürenritt, Trauermarsch, &c.
Brahms: Tragic overture.
Tschaïkowsky: 1812 Overture.
Grieg: Bergliot, In Autumn (overture), and Pianoforte concerto in A minor.
Parker: St. Christopher.
Elgar: Coronation Ode.
Coleridge-Taylor: Hiawatha Trilogy.
Roeckel: Song Cycle (first time).

The following composers have accepted the invitation of the Committee to conduct their own works at the Festival: Dr. Edward Grieg, Dr. Horatio W. Parker, Mr. Joseph L. Roeckel, and Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor. The Festival Orchestra and Chorus will consist of nearly 600 performers, and Mr. George Riseley will conduct.

The 'heavenly length' of Schubert's great C major Symphony did not commend itself to critical ears when it was first performed, or rather rehearsed, in London nearly sixty years ago. This is what a certain distinguished writer on the musical press said of it and Gade's Symphony in C minor:—

Philharmonic Society.—The band met on Wednesday morning to try some new works, under the direction of Dr. Mendelssohn. A Symphony in C by Schubert, a Symphony in C minor by Gade, and Mendelssohn's MS. Overture to Victor Hugo's tragedy of 'Ruy Blas' were tried. The symphonies were not approved of, in spite of their Continental reputation, but Mendelssohn's overture was received with enthusiasm. Schubert is the celebrated composer of a thousand songs—but a song and a symphony are different matters. Gade is a young Danish composer, who has been greatly flattered lately, and whom Mendelssohn has elevated by his protection; his age is 23. In his Symphony in C minor he intended to represent the Middle Ages, but we think Hallam has done it much better in his history. We regret that our notion of Schubert's symphony was an extravagant, unmeaning rhapsody—and of Gade's, the unfinished and not over-promising effort of a very young student. Mendelssohn's overture is brilliant and spirited, and contains one passage in particular of marvellous beauty. Everything was in C.

It was doubtless this and similar comments, written and spoken, which induced Mendelssohn, who brought Schubert's symphony with him from Leipzig, to withhold his own Ruy Blas overture from public performance.

The handsome monument erected to Franz Liszt—the work of the Munich sculptor Hermann Hahn—was unveiled with impressive solemnity on May 31 in the Grand-Ducal Park at Weimar, Herr Hans von Bronsart delivering the festival oration. As a matter of course, a large share in the proceedings, both on this and the preceding days, was assigned to performances of the great pianist-composer's works. In these the Weimar Orchestra, reinforced by members of the orchestras of Meiningen and Sondershausen, took a prominent part under the direction of Professor Kellermann, one of the most enthusiastic disciples of the master. The festivities culminated in an excellent scenic production at the Court Theatre of the oratorio 'Saint Elizabeth,' which deeply impressed the numerous audience gathered together from all parts to render homage to the memory of one of the most gifted and noble-minded artists the world has ever seen.

'One who was present' writes:—

The speech which Herr Richard Strauss made at the recent Düsseldorf Musical Festival in proposing the health of Dr. Edward Elgar and the younger school of English musicians, has been seriously misunderstood in some quarters. He did not say that 'English musicians had not progressed since the Middle Ages'—no man of even average intelligence could possibly say anything so absurd. What he meant, and what he said, was that since the Middle Ages, and at any rate since the time of Purcell, the musicians who at any given time were progressive in relation to other English musicians were yet not as advanced as their most advanced contemporaries abroad, whereas now for the first time England had a school of young composers, with Dr. Elgar at their head, who were not behind the most advanced musicians of Germany. Even this proposition will probably not command universal assent; but it is certainly one in support of which (unfortunately) a great deal is to be said. It is hard to understand why anyone should gratuitously assume that a man like Richard Strauss should go out of his way to talk nonsense.

The death of Mr. Thomas Patey Chappell—which, we very much regret to record, took place at 14, George Street, Hanover Square, on the 22nd ult.—removes one of the oldest music publishers and pianoforte manufacturers in the Metropolis. He was the second son of Samuel Chappell, who founded the well-known firm in New Bond Street more than eighty years ago, and of which the deceased has been the senior partner for nearly sixty years. The erection of St. James's Hall—opened in 1858—was mainly due to his enterprise. A man of an exceedingly kind disposition, Mr. Thomas Chappell was held in the greatest respect by all who knew him. He was a member of the Council of the Royal College of Music, and for a long time held the responsible post of Honorary Treasurer to that Institution.

A ROYAL CONCERT.

The office of President of the Royal College of Music, so long and interestedly held by King Edward VII. as Heir Apparent, has now passed into the hands of H.R.H. The Prince of Wales. It was therefore a celebration of this event, and in honour of the visit of T.R.H. The Prince and Princess of Wales, that a students' concert (postponed from February 24) was held in the fine Concert Hall of the College on the afternoon of May 27. The royal party, which included Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll), Princess Henry of Battenberg, Princess Victoria of Schleswig Holstein, and Princess Victoria Eugénie of Battenberg, and who occupied seats in the gallery, were received by the Director and Council of the College, and remained till the end of the concert.

The programme was as follows:—

GOD SAVE THE KING.

1. OVERTURE—"William Tell" ... ... Rossini.
2. PART-SONGS—(a) "Vineta" ... ... Brahms.
   (b) "Cupid and Rosalind" ... C. V. Stanford.
   THE CHORAL CLASS.
3. VIOLIN SOLO—"Adagio from Concerto No. 2, in D minor" ... Max Bruch.
   WINIFRED SMITH (Scholar).
4. SONG—"Bolero" (Vêpres Siciliennes) ... ... Verdi.
   KATE ANDERSON (Student, ex-Scholar).
5. ODE, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra—"To Music" (By command.) C. Hubert H. Parry.
   Solos—CICELY GLEESON-WHITE (ex-Scholar), A.R.C.M.
   KATE ANDERSON (Student, ex-Scholar).
   HAROLD WILDE (Scholar). NORMAN RIDLEY (ex-Scholar).
6. FINALE TO SYMPHONY in C minor, No. 1, Op. 68 ... Brahms.

Conductors:
SIR WALTER PARRATT, M.V.O., Mus. Doc.,
Master of the King's Musick
SIR C. HUBERT H. PARRY, D.C.L., M.A., Mus. Doc., Director.
PROFESSOR C. VILLIERS STANFORD, D.C.L., M.A., Mus. Doc.

The College is doing excellent work in the training of its students, but on such an occasion it might not be unreasonable to look for a programme made up entirely of English music. In regard to the performances of the students, detailed criticism of individual effort is better withheld, but it may be said without reservation that the standard of attainment reached by these young people, whether in solo or in concerted strains, was again very high, and deserving of all praise. The outstanding feature of this pleasant music-making was the 'Ode to Music,' a composition in which the genial Director has perfectly caught the spirit of Mr. A. C. Benson's beautiful lines, with the result that words and music are happily blended in a work of poetic charm. Sir Hubert Parry, who has rendered invaluable service to the College, was received with well-deserved cheers, again and again renewed, on taking his place at the conductor's desk.

The new Concert Hall is at the rear of the College, and is 5 ft. below the level of the ground floor of the main building on account of the great fall of ground at the rear. The basement, which is about 16 ft. high, contains a large Examination Hall (78 ft. by 58 ft.), dressing-rooms, store-rooms, heating and organ-blowing apparatus. The Concert Hall is 119 ft. by 58 ft., and about 43 ft. high, and it seats an audience of 900 people. The gallery, located over the entrance into the hall, is reached by two staircases, one from each corridor, and will accommodate 114 persons. The orchestra has a sliding platform 14 ft. by 8 ft., which, when not in use, can be moved out of sight by a simple arrangement. The organ, built by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons, and of which we gave the specification in our issue of July, 1901, is the munificent gift of the Director of the College, Sir Hubert Parry. Mr. Sidney R. J. Smith, F.R.I.B.A., was the architect, and Messrs. G. H. and A. Bywaters were the builders of this commodious and acoustically good Concert Hall.

EARLY BODLEIAN MUSIC.*

It would be difficult to overstate the value and importance of this collection. Begun in 1895, it was interrupted by the discovery of the famous Canonici Manuscript, and the consequent publication in 1898 of the volume on Dufay and his contemporaries, then resumed, and now after six years of labour brought to a successful issue. As the last work of Sir John Stainer it has a special claim upon our regard: it is the typical and characteristic monument of a career, the close of which brought to every English musician a sense of intimate and personal sorrow. But apart from this the collection is, on its own merit, of the highest intrinsic worth: at once interesting to the artist and invaluable to the historian.

The work is laid out in two volumes. The first contains 110 facsimiles, sixty-two of which are from MS. Selden 26, and the remainder from other manuscripts in the Bodleian, the whole prefaced with a bibliographical introduction by Mr. E. W. B. Nicholson. The second contains Sir John Stainer's unfinished essay, transcriptions into modern notation of nearly all the examples reproduced, and an appendix in which some of the more striking melodies have been, with great taste and learning, re-set by the addition of new parts or accompaniments. It is on this appendix that the weight of criticism will probably fall. Musicians who bear with equanimity the present state of the 'Messiah' or the 'Israel' may, perhaps, protest against any alteration of these unknown and anonymous compositions. But such a protest appears entirely unjustifiable. The works are given to the historian in their original form: in many of them a fine melody is spoiled, to our ear, by crude or imperfect harmonization: to reset them is to do them the same service which has been effected for the German Folk-songs by Brahms, and for the Irish Folk-songs by Dr. Stanford. Indeed, it adds no little to the artistic interest of the book that these melodies should be repeated in a shape which, without altering their essential character, renders them available for performance at the present time.

Mr. Nicholson's introduction is as thorough and workmanlike as might be expected from his preface to the volume on Dufay. Each of the manuscripts is carefully described; each is dated within the narrowest limits of possibility; many of the accounts are illustrated with historical details as to the manuscripts themselves or the persons to whom they relate. Nothing has been omitted which could throw any light on questions of authorship or attribution: evidence of handwriting, of language, of collateral testimony has all been gathered and estimated, and the result is as complete a survey as the nature of the field admits. It may be added that although the present collection covers all the music of the period which is, as yet, known to exist in the Bodleian, Mr. Nicholson holds out a hope that in course of time even more discoveries may be made.

A deeper interest attaches to Sir John Stainer's introductory essay. In the limit of a dozen pages it prepares us for the proper understanding of the examples, discusses the conditions under which they were written, and considers their historic and artistic value. Especially notable is the defence of consecutive fifths, and the description of the way in which the old love of them was, by crossing of parts, made compatible with contrapuntal rule. But, indeed, every topic germane to the chief issue is treated either here or in the notes appended to the various transcriptions: questions of rhythm and notation, the compass of the voices employed, the part played by canonic or imitative devices, the use of instruments in accompaniment—all are skilfully debated and summed up with learning and judgment. There is no evasion of difficulties, there is no suggestion of a parti pris, and the whole remains as a model of the way in which a true student should approach a scientific problem.

The transcriptions, made by Mr. J. F. R. Stainer and Miss C. Stainer, and edited by Sir John Stainer, naturally raise the two main questions of early mediæval music—the use of the rhythmic modes and the practice of musica ficta. The former has been exhaustively treated by Professor Wooldridge, in his recent volume, and no more need here be added than that the present examples give an entirely coherent and intelligible scheme. The latter presents one of the hardest problems in musical history; the more difficult because of our predisposition to estimate the work of the fifteenth century by the ears of the nineteenth. The absence of accidentals from the written score would seem to have originated in liturgical music, owing perhaps to the Bull of Pope John XXII., and to have spread thence, though without uniformity of practice, to non-liturgical forms of composition. The insertion of these accidentals by the singer appears to have been determined, in the first instance, by the desire to avoid the tritone and the imperfect fifth. On this point at least the 'Anonymus of S. Dié' would seem to be conclusive. Then the practice was apparently extended by two causes. First, the fondness for the perfect fourth, so marked that in the chord which we should now call the $\frac{6}{3}$ on the supertonic, the third was not unfrequently sharpened (see example lxxiv. in the present work: Vol. II., page 141). This would also explain such remarkable passages as that of Bartolomeus de Bononia, quoted on page 35 of the Dufay volume. Second, the preference for progression, in a cadence, by the semitone rather than the tone—a preference clearly apparent in the full close of a musical sentence, and possibly (though this is not so certain) in the half close as well. It may be doubted how far the process was ever really determined by a feeling for modulation as such, i.e., for different tonal

* Early Bodleian Music: Sacred and Secular Songs, together with other MS. Compositions, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, ranging from about A.D. 1185 to about A.D. 1505. With an introduction by E. W. B. Nicholson, M.A., Bodley's Librarian, and transcriptions into modern Musical Notation by J. F. R. Stainer, B.C.L., M.A., and C. Stainer. Edited by Sir John Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc. centres as the bases of musical form. On this point it might perhaps be suggested that the present volume has a little overstated its case: or, rather, that the statement on page 1 of the Introduction is not wholly compatible with the theory of modulation later on. Again, in one or two of the examples, notably in the madrigal 'Si je vous eslonge' (No. ci.), there is possibly room for an alternative interpretation. But the question is extremely obscure, and it may be assumed that the transcribers had good reason for the solutions which they have adopted.*

Considered artistically the examples are remarkably unequal. Some are merely crude experiments, in which three reluctant tunes are driven together with a result which can only be described, in the Editor's words, as an 'appalling cacophony.' Some are extremely beautiful, the melodies graceful and tender, the part-writing pure, solid, and transparent. As instances of the latter may be noted the 'Beata mater' of Dunstable, the four-part 'Ave Regina,' and the delightful song 'As Y lay upon a nyght.' Of the former some are left mercifully untranscribed, one or two are given as illustrations of an alien method. It must, of course, be remembered that the feeling of the time was contrapuntal, not harmonic. It was more important that the parts should move, and especially that they should represent familiar melodies, than that they should always combine into chords that would satisfy a sensitive ear. Indeed, it is probable that a sense of the intrinsic beauty of harmony is a comparatively late growth in musical development. Some of the more primitive peoples of Europe are still indifferent to it: and the same may well be true of our early ancestors. Yet by some happy inspiration, counterpoint often brought its own harmonic beauty. One exquisite cadence, which appears so frequently in these volumes that it may be taken as typical, is obviously determined by contrapuntal considerations: and there are others nearly as good. Indeed, as late as Queen Elizabeth's Virginal Book we may find progressions which our modern harmonic system is the poorer for having discarded.

It only remains to add a word of praise on the part played in this work by printer and publisher. The facsimiles are admirably clear; the type and paper are excellent, and the volumes are set forth in an extremely attractive form. There are one or two tiny misprints, but they are not sufficiently serious to confuse the reader; as a whole the work is presented in a manner worthy of the erudition and skill which it displays.

W. H. Hadow.

* On the general question the reader should consult the passage from Prosdocimus de Beldemandis, quoted on page 33 of the Dufay Volume. The example there given would seem to indicate the extreme limit of possibility, and the author is urgent in his warning that the practice is nunquam ponenda nisi loco necessitatis. On the whole, Sir John Stainer's maxim 'When in doubt, leave it out' is the safest guide.

CORONATION MUSIC.

Mr. J. S. Shedlock read a researchful paper on the above subject before the members of the Musical Association on the 10th ult. The discourse treated of Coronation Music both outside and inside of Westminster Abbey. There were formerly pageants in connection with the passage of sovereigns through the City of London, and the lecturer referred to the various 'noyses of musicke' when, on January 14, 1558, Good Queen Bess proceeded from the Tower to Westminster; to the Danish March, the 'owne-country musicke' of the wife of James I., with which she was greeted, and to 'loud and excellent music composed of violins' played in the streets. Still more interesting was the account given of the 'Passing through the City' of Charles II., for some of the music composed by Matthew Locke and performed on that occasion has been preserved in a folio volume, which formerly belonged to the merry monarch. Dr. W. H. Cummings possesses five part-books containing some of the music; these also belonged to the king, and every movement is signed 'Mr. Locke.' The music was scored for sackbuts and cornets. Transcriptions of two of the movements, an 'Ayre' and a 'Saraband,' were played by Mr. Shedlock on the pianoforte.

Passing on to subsequent coronations, the lecturer showed by one or two quotations from old newspapers the great difficulty of getting definite information respecting the music performed on these eventful occasions. In the accounts of these 'Entertainments,' as they were termed in the olden days, most minute details are given about almost everything except the music. A statement that the choir 'burst into a joyful anthem,' or that the music was 'harmonious,' or merely that an anthem was sung, is about all the information that can be gleaned. Even Evelyn describes how at the Coronation of Charles II. he heard 'rare music, with lutes, viols, trumpets, organs, and voices,' but he does not tell us of what that music consisted. The most notable instance in which details—which would have been most welcome—are not available is that of the Coronation of George II., for which Handel wrote his famous coronation anthems. Mr. Shedlock paid a high tribute to Thomas Attwood, one of the most prominent of our native composers of the early part of the eighteenth century. Extracts were read from the dedications of his two coronation anthems, 'I was glad' and 'O Lord, grant the king a long life,' the one to George IV. and the other to William IV. Sir Frederick Bridge, who occupied the chair, in referring to the first anthem, expressed his opinion that it was unduly neglected.

In addition to the pieces by Locke, mentioned above, the musical illustrations consisted of Dr. Blow's anthem, 'Behold, O God, our Defender,' written for the Coronation of James II., and Dr. Turner's 'The Queen shall rejoice,' composed for that of Queen Anne. These were well sung by a small choir of men and boys. Dr. Cummings and Mr. T. L. Southgate took part in the discussion following the reading of the paper, which greatly interested a large audience.

Church and Organ Music.

SULLIVAN'S THANKSGIVING TE DEUM.

The glad tidings of peace consequent upon the termination of the dreary war in South Africa caused a thrill of gladness throughout the Empire. Innumerable Thanksgiving Services were held on the 8th ult., the Sunday following the receipt of the good news, at which the note of praise resounded clear and strong. The King and Queen and many members of the Royal Family attended the morning service at St. Paul's Cathedral at which was performed for the first time, under the reverent direction of Sir George Martin, a Te Deum laudamus (A Thanksgiving for Victory) composed by the late Sir Arthur Sullivan. A prefatory note in the published score reads thus:—

> The setting of the Te Deum was written by request, with a view to its performance at the Thanksgiving Service to be held in St. Paul's Cathedral at the close of the war in South Africa. It is the composer's last finished work.

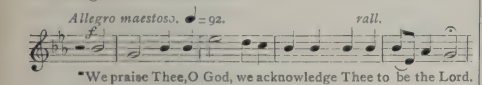
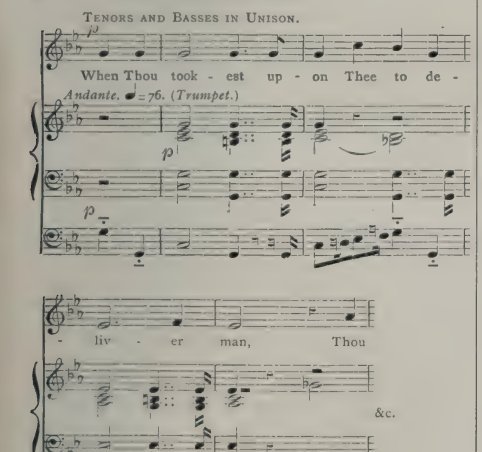
> May, 1902. 4, Amen Court

It is a matter of no little interest that Sullivan, in this his swan song, returned to his first love—church music. In every page of the score we can trace the hand of the skilled musician, once a chorister of the Chapel Royal. Moreover, the work is impregnated with a robustness distinctly national in the directness of its diatonic expression. The introduction of the composer's familiar hymn-tune 'Onward, Christian Soldiers'—first in fragments and afterwards in its entirety—infuses a military element into this Thanksgiving Te Deum, the significance of which is obvious.

Without attempting to give a detailed technical analysis of the work, a few remarks concerning its outstanding features may be offered. This setting of the Te Deum is written for chorus, strings, brass (military) instruments and organ (obbligato), and is in the key of E flat. At the fifth bar the opening strain of 'Onward, Christian Soldiers' is given out by strings and trumpets. All the voices then enter in energetic unison thus:—



An exceedingly impressive passage is the thrice-repeated 'Holy,' sung softly by all the voices on the note middle C, the common chords of C major in the accompaniment heightening the beauty of the effect by this simple means. At the words 'The glorious company of the Apostles praise Thee' the key is changed to A flat, the rhythm becomes triple, and the speed is accelerated—Allegro energico. This animated section is as melodious as it is invigorating, and, like the whole composition, the music is exceedingly grateful to the singer. A sequential figure, in various keys, forms an appropriate accompaniment to the section beginning 'When Thou tookest upon Thee.' Here it is, one bar after the accompaniment figure:—



The part-writing broadens out into eight-part harmony at the words 'O Lord, save Thy people,' and these dignified chords are almost entirely unaccompanied. Sullivan was a master of effect; he knew the value of simplicity not only as an element of contrast, but as a means of expression, and in these massive chords he has given full proof of his genius in this respect.

Passing on to the final section of the work—from 'Vouchsafe, O Lord' onwards—the voice parts furnish a counterpoint to a canto fermo formed by the tune 'St. Gertrude,' now given in extenso by the accompanying instruments. As may be assumed, this is all very ingeniously worked out, and proves to be exceedingly effective and imposing withal. The coda begins thus—a repetition of the opening (vocal) theme, the hymn tune forming a strenuous accompaniment to the full-voiced choir:— and so on to the end—a pæan of praise and thanksgiving in strains of holy mirth.

It only remains to be said that Mr. Charles Macpherson, the sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, has provided an excellent accompaniment for the organ (written in three staves), to the octavo edition (published by Messrs. Novello) of this, the last completed work of Arthur Sullivan.

THE TUNE 'ST. GERTRUDE.'

The foregoing remarks on Sir Arthur Sullivan's Te Deum afford an opportunity of satisfying some curiosity as to the origin of the name—'St. Gertrude'—given to this famous militant tune. The information is furnished by the lady after whom the tune was named, Mrs. Gertrude Clay-Ker-Seymer, a sister-in-law of the late Frederick Clay, in a letter to the present writer:—

> Dear Sir,—In answer to your letter regarding the composition of Sir Arthur Sullivan's tune to 'Onward, Christain Soldiers,' which he dedicated to me, I can tell you that I believe the tune was written at Hanford, my home in Dorsetshire, while Sir Arthur was staying there, but it is so long ago I cannot be quite sure; what I do remember, however, is that we sang it in the private chapel attached to the house, Sir Arthur playing the harmonium, and having taught us the tune, as we had not the music. Therefore it was certainly not published then, but I think we may assume that it was written there. Sir Arthur often stayed with us for several weeks at a time, and composed several songs, &c., while at Hanford, after which place he named another of his hymn-tunes, but not one of such striking merit as 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' which has now a world-wide reputation, and of which I am proud to be the sponsor.—Yours truly,

The tune, in its original form, made its first appearance in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1871.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

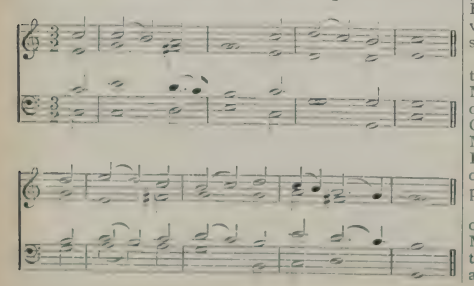
A performance of music was given in this new edifice on the 11th ult., the primary object, according to a note in the programme-book, being to test the acoustic properties of the building. Seeing, however, that the interior is at present bare, the test was scarcely a good one; the vocal music sounded better than the instrumental. The first number in the programme was Wagner's 'Holy Supper of the Apostles,' written for men's voices and orchestra. The performance was excellent, but the work, with the exception of two or three striking passages, is dull. When Wagner wrote the music he had just heard Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' and as he took Meyerbeer to a certain extent as his model for the stage, so he seems to have tried to imitate the other composer in sacred music. But he was little fitted to follow either master; his genius lay in quite a different direction. A dignified and expressive motet, 'Amavit sapientiam,' by the late Thomas Wingham, came next, and then Beethoven's C minor Symphony. But the programme was extremely long, and the latter work, welcome as a rule, delayed less familiar music by Palestrina, Byrd, Blow, and Purcell, and, moreover, music more appropriate to the place. The performance closed with Purcell's noble Te Deum. In the ecclesiastical music the choir was heard to advantage. The conductors were Mr. R. R. Terry, director of the music at Westminster Cathedral, and Mr. Arthur Barclay, who holds a similar position at the Oratory, Brompton, the organist of which, Mr. E. D'Evry, gave an excellent performance of Bach's D minor Toccata on the temporary organ erected in the Cathedral.

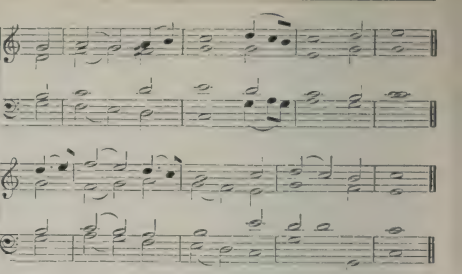
Mr. W. Barclay Squire writes us from the Savile Club, under date the 13th ult.:—

'I shall be obliged if you will allow me to correct in your columns a statement in the programme of music performed at Westminster Cathedral on the 11th ult. to the effect that Byrd's Mass for four voices was discovered by the late Mr. Thomas Wingham. The work in question, which had been lost since 1822, was found by me in an interleaved copy of four Part-Books of the Second Book of the composer's "Gradualia," acquired by the Trustees of the British Museum in 1888. From these Part-Books I made a score which I submitted to Mr. Wingham, and on his promising to perform it if printed, the Mass was edited by the late Mr. Rockstro and myself and published by Messrs. Novello in 1890. To Mr. Wingham the credit is due of having been the first, by the admirable performances at the Oratory, to draw attention to the beauty of Byrd's music, but the actual recovery of the lost work was announced by myself in a letter to the Athenæum of December 15, 1888.'

'WAREHAM,' IN ITS ORIGINAL FORM.

We gladly accede to the request of a correspondent to give the original harmonies of the tune 'Wareham' from 'A Sett of New Psalms and Anthems, in four parts. By William Knapp, 1738,' to which we referred in our last issue, p. 399. It will be observed that the progressions are not above reproach.





FESTIVALS.

The leafy and, so far as 1902 is concerned, the wintry month of June brought with it the usual foregatherings of church choralists not a few. The London Gregorian Choral Association celebrated its thirty-second anniversary Festival in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 5th ult. One thousand voices took part at the Choral Evensong, with the experienced aid of Dr. Warwick Jordan at the organ. The Non-Gregorian strains of the service included Handel's Coronation anthem 'The King shall rejoice,' a processional hymn-tune by Sir John Stainer ('When evening shadows gather'), and 'O God, our help in ages past' to the time-honoured tune 'St. Anne's.' The music created its usual effect of imposing impressiveness.

At the Crystal Palace the Nonconformist Choir Union held its annual festival on the 14th ult., the day of the month and the number of these gatherings synchronising. As aforetime, Mr. E. Minshall conducted the choral numbers, while Mr. T. R. Croger directed the orchestral portion of the programme. The selection of music was of a varied nature to suit all tastes, and its interpretation showed that pains had been taken by the 4,000 executants and their experienced conductors. The full band of the Union played the accompaniments, Miss Maggie Purvis and Mr. Henry Turnpenny contributed some songs, and the organ was safe in the well-tried hands of Mr. Fountain Meen.

The London Wesleyan Methodist Choir Union is an infant organization with an abnormally long name, and it held its first festival in Wesley's Chapel, City Road, on the evening of the 16th ult. The committee is to be commended for arranging a Service as its initial effort, and we trust that this may continue to be the guiding principle of a Union which should have a career of much usefulness, and to which we wish all possible success. The 'order of service' included Tours's Te Deum in F, Dykes's Benedictus in the same key (the evening canticles would have been more appropriate), Goss's noble anthem 'Praise the Lord, O my soul,' Sullivan's 'Hearken unto me, my people,' in addition to chants and hymns. The fact that about 1,000 representatives from nearly fifty choirs took part augurs well for the future prosperity of the Union. Mr. C. J. Dale conducted, and Mr. A. Furse presided at the organ. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles H. Kelly, an ex-president of the Conference, who paid a high tribute to the importance of music in the services of the church.

Too late for mention last month were the Festivals of the Church Sunday Schools, on May 24, with Mr. Harry Morgan as conductor, and Mr. F. W. Belchamber at the organ—and the London Sunday School Choir and Orchestra, on May 28, under the joint conductorship of Mr. J. Rowley, Mr. William Whiteman, and Mr. D. M. Davis (9,000 singers!), both held on the Handel Orchestra of the Crystal Palace. Both these organisations give proof of earnest endeavour and well-directed zeal.

The first festival of the Association of Church Choirs of the Rural Deanery of Holborn took place on May 29 in St. Andrew's Church, Holborn Viaduct, under the skilled directorship of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, organist and director of the choir (St. Andrew's, Wells Street).

The united choirs numbered 200 voices, the organist on the occasion being Mr. H. D. Phillips, organist of St. Andrew's, Holborn. Leonard Butler's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D, and Mr. Docker's anthem 'Sing we merrily,' with Beethoven's 'Hallelujah ('Mount of Olives'), were amongst the chief features of this interesting occasion. The Rev. Prebendary Covington, who inaugurated the Association, is to be congratulated upon the complete success of the festival, and we learn that the Associated Choirs will sing Spohr's 'Last Judgment' next Advent at St. George's Church, Bloomsbury.

THE ROYAL OPERA.

The opera season has been pursuing a more or less uneventful career during the past month. One of the promised revivals has taken place, and Donizetti's 'L'Elisire d'Amore' was mounted on the 14th ult., and extremely well performed. While old opera-goers rejoiced in the tunes which they could 'take home with them,' the younger generation, fed on stronger meat, deplored the rhythmic monotony of Donizetti and the poverty of his orchestration, while admitting the attractiveness of some of the melodies. The two chief parts were in the hands of Signor Caruso, as the timid lover Nemorino, and Mdlle. Regina Pacini as Adina. The vocalisation of the former was very fine, and in 'Una furtiva lagrima' he particularly pleased the very enthusiastic audience. Mdlle. Pacini made her début on the 4th ult. as Lucia to the Edgardo of Signor Caruso, and the good impression she made then was fully confirmed, especially in the brilliancy and fluency of her technique. She executed the roulades and shakes of 'Ardon gl'incensi' almost perfectly; and in 'L'Elisire d'Amore' her vocal agility was such as this generation seldom hears, and it was exhibited to the greatest advantage in an air from Bellini's 'I Puritani.' In these days there is little demand for a buffo of the old Italian sort, so that the truly excellent fooling of Signor Pini-Corsi as Doctor Dulcamara must have seemed quite novel to most of the audience. But novel or not, his was a singularly complete performance, and stood out as quite the best thing of the evening. Signor Mancinelli conducted.

The Wagner performances have not been quite up to the level reached in previous years. It would be a thankless task to emphasize the shortcomings in each of the performances, but it may be said that the work which suffered most—especially at the hands of the orchestra—was 'Die Meistersinger' at its first performance on May 30. It is far more satisfactory to dwell on the one really first-rate Wagnerian performance of the season—that of 'Die Walküre,' on the 7th ult. On that night Miss Marie Brema was the Brünnhilde, and the intensity and spirituality of her performance, which are well known to opera-goers, had the effect of nerving everybody concerned to great efforts. Herr Van Rooy on that night surpassed himself as Wotan, and that means a good deal; Frau Lohse was an excellent Sieglinde, and Herr Klopfer as Hunding sang excellently. The new stage arrangements at the end of the second act were again excellent.

Herr Kraus appeared as Walter in the first of the 'Meistersinger' performances. He is not a knightly Walter, but acts capably, and he sings with great spirit. Mr. Bispham was Beckmesser, and Herr Van Rooy Hans Sachs, the merits of both impersonations being familiar from past seasons. As time goes on Mr. Bispham elaborates his impersonation more and more, and Herr Van Rooy makes Sachs more and more a man of the middle classes. At the other performance of the 'Meistersinger' the Walter was Herr Pennarini, who is very Teutonic, and the Eva was Frau Lohse, who, though unfortunately out of voice, acted charmingly. The Brünnhildes in the 'Siegfried' performances have been Madame Nordica and Fräulein Dönges. The former sings the music admirably, and the latter is obviously a capable artist.

M. Van Dyck has sung as Tristan. He was very impressive, especially in the last Act, by reason of his splendid histrionic gifts. Madame Nordica as Isolde always sings with fine art and apt expression, but does not exhaust the dramatic possibilities of the part. Herr Van Rooy was a finely sympathetic Kurwenal. The new scenery for all the Wagnerian works has been really beautiful, but that for Tristan was the best of all, and few finer stage pictures have been seen than those in the second and third Acts.

Outside Wagner the Syndicate has given us some superb performances. Those of 'La Bohème,' the first of which was on May 24, have been nearly ideal. Madame Melba as Mimi, Fräulein Scheff as Musetta, Signor Caruso as Rodolfo (almost if not quite his best part), with Signor Scotti, M. Gilibert, and M. Journet as the other students, make up a splendid cast, and on each occasion, under Signor Mancinelli, the opera was performed with excellent spirit.

Madame Calvé returned on the 18th ult. as Carmen. Her particular matchless dramatic powers are unimpaired, and her voice, too, still has its peculiar charm. M. Maréchal, of the Paris Opéra Comique, has a great reputation. His undoubted dramatic power enabled him to give a very consistent and interesting picture of Don José (in 'Carmen') with his fatal weakness and his outbursts of brutal strength, and he has an extremely sympathetic voice which he uses skilfully. In the great situation at the end of the third Act he acted with very marked and picturesque power. As Faust he scarcely reached so high a level, though he sang 'Salut, demeure' most agreeably.

It remains only to mention the performance of 'Aïda' (on the 6th ult.), with Madame Nordica as Aïda, and Signor Caruso as Radamès—the former's 'O patria mia' being specially noteworthy. Signor Caruso acted with much fervour, and the success of Madame Kirkby Lunn as Amneris also deserves recognition.

THE LINCOLN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It is hardly a matter for much surprise to find that Dr. G. J. Bennett has made his influence felt upon the music of the city of which he may be regarded as the 'Chief Musician.' Each triennial festival he has conducted has marked some advance on its predecessors, in either programme or execution, and the fifth, which took place on the 4th and 5th ult., showed a distinct advance in both respects. The time available for full rehearsals, which is even more limited than at most provincial festivals in this country, makes it impossible to depart far from well-trodden paths so far as choral music is concerned, nor is public taste so advanced that any deviation would be likely to prove acceptable. But in orchestral music it has been found possible to infuse an element of freshness into the event, and the history of the orchestral concert, which on the last two occasions has been added to the festival programme, is interesting and perhaps not uninstructive. It can hardly be assumed that in Lincoln there is any pressing public demand for orchestral music, so that the only method of creating one has been to reverse an elementary commercial principle, and make the supply precede the demand. The method of a subsidy is not very popular with us, but we are gradually beginning to understand and apply it in various matters connected with art. In this case a number of enterprising citizens contributed to the cost of this extra concert, which as an ordinary commercial enterprise could not possibly have paid its way, for the band of eighty consisted of well-known London players, with Mr. Alfred Burnett as leader, and the programme was by no means of an ad captandum type.

To begin with, it included two novelties, and of such things the public is rather shy, though how art is to progress without them it is difficult to realize. Sir Alexander Mackenzie visited Lincoln for the purpose of introducing his overture to 'The Cricket on the Hearth,' a three-act opera, the libretto of which, by Mr. Julian Sturgis, is founded on Dickens's story. We are told that the thematic material of the overture is taken from the opera, and from this we should judge the work to be eminently tuneful and genial, something of the 'Singspiel' order in point of form, and as thoroughly English in character as the well-known 'Britannia' overture, to which it bears an obvious relationship. There is the same ability to create melodies in the masculine, diatonic, breezy style of Dibdin, coupled with a musicianship that can intensify their interest by skilful treatment.

The other novelty was a Suite in D minor by Dr. G. J. Bennett, whose appearance as a composer was hailed with satisfaction by all who know his very decided gift as a creative musician. We should have inclined to doubt whether Mr. German had left much room for anything fresh in 'Suites,' but Dr. Bennett dispelled the doubt. His very fresh and interesting work is in five movements, all artistically developed, but commendably concise. The first is a 'Tempo di Marcia' that is martial and tuneful, yet free from taint of commonplace; the second, a delightful little Entr'acte, full of Mozartian touches; a 'Valse,' which, if it lacks the voluptuous abandonment of the Viennese School, has much rhythmic swing; a 'Melodie,' in which the counterpoint for the divided strings is admirable, and a capital Finale, suggesting a rustic festival, and making prominent use of a traditional tune, localized in various districts under different names, but styled in the county of Lincoln 'The Lincolnshire Poacher.' Both overture and suite were conducted by their respective composers, and were exceedingly well played. A third prominent member of the Royal Academy of Music appeared in the person of Mr. Edward German, who conducted two movements of his Norwich Suite, 'The Seasons'; while, by a coincidence, a fourth, Goring Thomas, was represented in the programme by the well-known contralto air from 'Nadeshda,' very artistically sung by Miss Muriel Foster. The 'Pathetic' Symphony formed a prominent feature of the programme, but Dr. Bennett's powers as a conductor were most favourably illustrated by a reading of the 'Tannhäuser' Overture that showed genuine grip.

One of the two choral performances in the Cathedral was given up to 'Elijah,' which needs no detailed criticism. The oratorio was preceded by Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, and the effect of the chorale at the close was made even more triumphant than usual by the very judicious use of the two organs, the temporary instrument at the west-end, on which Dr. Keeton, of Peterborough, played, being reinforced by the screen organ, at which Mr. T. T. Noble, of York, was stationed. The volume of diapason tone that seemed to envelop the hearers was most impressive, without being in the least overpowering.

Of more general interest was the afternoon programme. It opened with Handel's Coronation Anthem 'Zadok the Priest,' which lost some of its stateliness by being unduly hurried. Then came the chief thing in the programme, Dvorák's lovely 'Stabat Mater,' which had full justice done it, as had Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' By way of relief between the two choral works Beethoven's 'Seventh Symphony' was played, and was listened to with intense enjoyment amid surroundings worthy of so great a work. The chorus of over 400 voices was contributed by Lincoln, Nottingham, Fulbeck, Gainsborough, and Hull, with the cathedral choirs of Lincoln and Peterborough as a nucleus. It was exceedingly satisfactory in balance and pleasant in tone, and was well up to its work. The principals were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black, and in the minor parts of 'Elijah' Miss Gwendoline De Ath, Miss Helen Taylor, Mr. E. Dunkerton, and Mr. C. Woodward lent useful aid.

THE ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF GERMAN MUSICIANS.

The musical festival of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein, which took place from the 6th to the 10th ult. at Crefeld, was the thirty-eighth that has been held in connection with the annual meetings, held at different cities, of this truly representative association of German musicians. Founded in 1861 by Franz Liszt, and supported by a number of adherents to what was then known as the 'neo-German' school of music, the Verein has considerably increased its membership in recent years, and it occupies a highly influential position in the present day. Moreover, the principle laid down by its founders—that of affording full scope for the manifestations of more advanced musical thought—is being strictly adhered to by the present committee of management, which includes Fritz Steinbach, the well-known Meiningen conductor, and Richard Strauss. Thus the programmes of the six concerts given in connection with the festival were designed with the object of presenting a picture of present-day creativeness in the domains of symphony and chamber-music, choral composition and song.

The composers represented on this occasion included, among others, Gustav Mahler, Max Schillings, Georg Schumann, W. von Baussnern, Leo Blech, Hans Sommer, Max Reger, Hans E. Pfitzner, E. Jacques-Dalcroze, E. Humperdinck, and Richard Strauss. Much interest was created by the performance, under the composer's direction, of the new Symphony in D minor by Gustav Mahler, the director of the Vienna Opera, the final movement of which, introducing a choir of boys' voices, with contralto solo, produced a most marked impression. A good reception also was given to a symphonic fantasia 'Meergruss' by Max Schillings; to an Idyl for grand orchestra, entitled 'Pan,' by the young Munich composer Hermann Bischoff; and an orchestral piece, 'Waldwanderung,' by Leo Blech, a musician of Prague. An orchestral suite from a new fairy opera, 'The Sleeping Beauty,' by Humperdinck, was received with great favour, while one of the most generally appreciated numbers in the chamber-music concert was a pianoforte quartet in F minor by Georg Schumann.

Amongst the more important choral works may be instanced the cantata 'Hackelberends Begräbniss,' by Müller-Reuter, the conductor of the festival; a scene from an opera 'Die Glocken von Plurs,' for soprano solo and chorus, by Ernst Seyffardt; and a 'Chorus of the Dead,' by Fritz Neff. The last-named work, by a young and, as yet, little-known Munich composer, elicited much favourable comment on account of its deep feeling and excellent workmanship. The principal choral achievement of the festival, however, was that of Liszt's oratorio 'Christus,' under the direction of Herr Müller-Reuter. The ability and enthusiasm displayed by both choir and orchestra secured for this work a truly memorable performance. Next year, and for the second time in the annals of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein, the meeting is to be held in Switzerland, viz., at Bâle.

THE STRAUSS-POSSART CONCERTS

AT QUEEN'S HALL.

The first of these interesting performances took place on May 31 with a recital of Byron's 'Manfred,' with Schumann's incidental music, the latter performed by the Queen's Hall Orchestra and Choir, under the direction of Herr Richard Strauss. The chief feature was, however, the sonorous declamation and splendid portrayal of Byron's gloomy hero by Herr von Possart, notwithstanding the anomaly of giving an English poem in an English concert hall in the German language. The fact that the delicate orchestration to No. 6 ('Beautiful spirit') was played alone and the recitation given afterwards was to be regretted—surely in a performance under such auspices the composer's intentions should have been regarded.

Unusual interest was aroused (on the 2nd ult.) by the recitation of Tennyson's 'Enoch Arden' by Herr von Possart, with Herr Richard Strauss's illustrative music. It is no reflection upon the fine elocutionary powers and poetic temperament of the distinguished reciter to say that Tennyson's melodious lines do not gain in mellifluence by being spoken in the German language. Nothing but the highest praise can be given to the charming music of Herr Richard Strauss. For the most part it is incidental, but always in perfect taste. One wishes that there was more of it, every strain is so beautiful in its creative interest and poetic import. The composer played his music (on the pianoforte)—introducing certain modifications of the printed score—with exquisite refinement and self-restraint and in the spirit of a great artist.

The orchestral concert conducted by Herr Richard Strauss two days later does not call for more than a record, except to mention that the very remarkable tone-poem 'Tod und Verklärung' received a most impressive interpretation under the composer's direction. The 'Don Juan' and 'Till Eulenspiegel' tone-poems by the same composer respectively opened and closed an enjoyable and memorable music-making, at which Herr von Possart again recited splendidly.

THE MIDLAND INSTITUTE OF MUSIC.

(BY OUR BIRMINGHAM CORRESPONDENT.)

The terminal concerts of this flourishing Institution were of a varied and interesting character, and showed the progress made under the energetic and artistic rule of the Principal, Mr. Granville Bantock. Two concerts of chamber music were given at the Institute on the 14th and 16th ult. The programme comprised Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 11); Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, with string orchestra; the Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25) of Brahms, representing the classical school; and Dvorák's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 21), and Richard Strauss's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 13), standing for the romantic school. The performances, for students, were surprisingly excellent, and their names deserve to be recorded. The pianists were Miss Scott, Mrs. P. Baker, Miss Parsons, and Mrs. Gaunt; violinists, Miss C. Ratcliff, Miss Hodgkinson (in the Bach Concerto), Miss Warwood, Miss M. Brittain, and Miss Wadely; viola, Mr. H. G. Ketelbey, who also gave a highly-finished rendering of Bach's 'Chaconne' for violin alone; violoncellists, Mr. P. L. Dyche and Mr. P. Hall. Much promise was shown by the vocalists, Miss E. N. Easton, Miss Clara Winwood, Miss D. Rattey, and Mr E. W. Carter.

On the 18th ult. the Students' orchestral concert took place in the Town Hall. The band numbered sixty, with about fifteen professional players, and the choir (all students) was a well-balanced body over a hundred strong. The concert opened with Bach's Cantata, 'Sleepers, wake!' the soloists being Miss Lizzie Matthews, Miss Minnie Payton, Mr. W. J. Ottey, Mr. G. A. Peck, and Mr. S. Stoddard. The performance was extremely good throughout. Miss Amy Kendal gave the Jewel Song from 'Faust' in brilliant style, and Miss Wadely and Mr. T. A. Matthews were respectively the soloists in Max Bruch's Violin Concerto, No. 1, and Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto, No. 4, both doing justice to their parts. The march and chorus 'Hail, bright abode,' from 'Tannhäuser,' closed the concert. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted, and the hall was completely filled.

The opera class had a costume rehearsal at the Institute on the 21st ult., when the opening scene from 'Aïda' and the Garden scene from 'Faust' were performed. Four functions in eight days constituted a record here. Such commendable achievements show what the Midland Institute School of Music is capable of accomplishing.

London Concerts.

CORONATION CONCERTS.

The recent interest of the nation brought forth two concerts, both of which took place at the Royal Albert Hall, and fully deserve to be recorded. At the first, on the 13th ult., Mrs. Needham's prize march-song, 'The seventh English Edward,' was sung, in addition to similar (second prize) productions by Mr. Myles B. Foster, Mr. H. M. Higgs, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, and Dr. Charles Vincent. Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and Mr. Percy Godfrey conducted their respective Coronation Marches, and Sir Frederick Bridge wielded his baton over the Royal Choral Society and massed bands, which in strenuous performances delighted a huge audience, whereby King Edward's Hospital Fund must have greatly benefited.

The grand Coronation concert given by Madame Albani, on the 21st ult., included the first performance of a Coronation march by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, suggested by Walt Whitman's 'Ethiopia saluting the colours,' composed expressly for the occasion. Madame Clara Butt sang, for the first time, 'Land of Hope and Glory,' by Dr. Edward Elgar, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford interpreted the capital Coronation Hymn 'Great and still greater,' composed by Mr. A. Randegger, Junr. Mr. George Riseley brought his Riseley Male-Voice Choir from Bristol. His merry men were particularly successful in their excellent rendering of Grieg's 'Landerkennung.'

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The concert at the Queen's Hall, given on May 29, acquired distinction by the first performance in England of M. Rachmaninoff's second pianoforte concerto in C minor (Op. 18), and by the production of a 'Coronation March,' composed by Dr. Frederic H. Cowen. The concerto is an estimable composition, albeit unequal in merit. If the most satisfactory of its three movements is the first, which possesses strength and dignity, the second and third sections are somewhat loosely knit, but are poetical and significant. The work was very finely rendered by M. Sapellnikoff, who was manifestly in sympathy with his countryman's music, and the orchestral portion was most effectively played under Dr. Cowen's direction. The Coronation March is festive in character and delightfully gay and inspiriting. Its trio is one of those song-like melodies which seem to wait on Dr. Cowen's pen, and the scoring is masterly. Although placed at the end of the concert it roused enthusiastic applause.

The succeeding concert on the 12th ult. was devoted to Wagner and Beethoven, the latter composer being represented by his E flat Pianoforte Concerto, the solo part of which received a masculine reading from Mr. Harold Bauer.

ARTHUR NIKISCH.

Mr. Nikisch's reading of Tschaïkowsky's Fourth Symphony at the London Musical Festival was so highly praised, that Mr. Robert Newman engaged the Hungarian conductor for two orchestral concerts, which took place on the 16th and 20th ult. at Queen's Hall. On the former occasion the programme included Beethoven's 'Leonora No. 3' Overture and Seventh Symphony, but Mr. Nikisch was most successful in his interpretation of the first four movements from Tschaïkowsky's First Suite in D (Op. 43), which, if we mistake not, has only once been heard in London since its first production in England, under the composer's direction, at the Philharmonic concert on April 11, 1889. On the 20th ult., Mr. Nikisch again showed himself most able as a conductor of music of romantic character, and introduced an arrangement by Herr Bachrich for stringed orchestra, of the Prelude and Gavotte from the sixth, and the Adagio from the third of Bach's sonatas for violin alone. The arrangements are deftly made, but Herr Bachrich's ingenuity in such directions is not to be commended.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Students' Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, on the 20th ult., brought forward two new compositions. The first, a scena for baritone and orchestra 'Grettir's Departure,' by Paul W. Corder (Goring Thomas Scholar), was good and showed much promise of future attainment; the second, two movements from a Symphony in G, by E. Yorke Bowen (Sterndale Bennett Scholar), of which the Larghetto, a graceful excerpt, proved the most attractive. Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Coronation March concluded a varied programme, which included performances by Gwendolen Mason (harp), E. Spencer Dyke (violin), Julia Higgins (pianoforte), Edith Patching and E. Margaret Llewellyn (vocalists).

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Hermann Goetz's delightful and unduly neglected opera 'The Taming of the Shrew' was given on the 2nd and 3rd ult. by the pupils of the opera class at the Guildhall School of Music under the alert conductorship of Mr. Ernest Ford. The characters of Katharine and Petruchio were capitally impersonated by Miss Carrie Tubb and Mr. Henry J. Corner, while an excellent all-round performance reflected not a little credit on the stage management of Mr. Hugh Moss, and the instruction which the students receive at the School so ably presided over by Dr. W. H. Cummings.

VARIOUS RECITALS AND CONCERTS.

Special mention, coupled with commendation, must be made of the pianoforte recitals given at St. James's Hall by Herr von Dohnányi (on the 4th ult.), and M. Sapellnikoff, on the 6th ult., at Queen's Hall. The former gave an excellent interpretation of Beethoven's early sonata in C (Op. 2, No. 3), dedicated to Haydn, and the latter was equally successful in Tschaïkowsky's sonata in G. Both these artistically-equipped pianists were aided in their performances by the steel 'barless' grand pianofortes which Messrs. Broadwood supplied for their use.

Richard Strauss's expressive and appropriate 'Enoch Arden' music was heard again at Mr. Bispham's recital, on the 16th ult., at St. James's Hall. It was played with much discretion and unobtrusiveness by Mr. H. R. Bird. This time the late Laureate's pathetic poem was heard to much greater advantage in its own language. It had been judiciously abridged to about an hour's performance by Mr. Bispham, to whom nothing but the highest praise can be given for his admirable elocution and powerfully pathetic, although properly restrained, delivery of the text.

M. Kubelik and his Bohemian orchestra gave concerts at St. James's Hall on May 28, and the 3rd, 11th, and 18th ult., on each occasion attracting large audiences. Herr Oscar Nedbal, the conductor, is to be commended for confining the orchestral works to those by his countrymen, in which his instrumentalists were heard at their best.

Other pianoforte recitals worthy of record were given on May 30, and the 7th and 23rd ult., by Herr Josef Hofmann, who has developed from the prodigy into an artist of delicate perception and an interpreter par excellence of music of romantic character. The three recitals, the last with orchestra conducted by M. Colonne, given at Queen's Hall on the 3rd, 10th, and 13th ult. by M. Raoul Pugno, should also be noted, for his readings proved singularly vivacious and interesting.

Herr Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist who made so favourable an impression by his playing at the recent Richter concerts, gave a most enjoyable recital on the 13th ult. at St. James's Hall.

On the 9th ult., M. Földsey, a Hungarian violoncellist, made his début in England at Queen's Hall, and interpreted a well-varied programme with a beauty of tone and executive ease that proved him to be a fascinating and exceptionally gifted artist.

Of the surfeit of chamber concerts which have been set before the public during the month of June, those by Mr. Charles Williams, on the 7th and 10th ult. at St. James's Hall, were made specially memorable by the engagement of Herr Richard Mühlfeld, whose finished clarinet playing in several masterpieces was again most enjoyable.

The Richard Strauss-Ernst von Possart concerts are noticed on p. 481.

COMPETITIONS.

WENSLEYDALE.

This Tournament of Song took place at Leyburn on May the 14th and 15th, when a very satisfactory advance on previous competitions was made In the juvenile choir section the Roman Catholic School, Leyburn, won the first prize, Middleton being second; throughout all the junior classes there was marked indication of good training Among the soloists, Madge Jones was specially worthy of mention as having not only won the first prize among the junior violinists, but the same among the senior pianists. The Bedale Choir obtained the first prize for its excellent singing of Stanford's part-song 'Sweet love for me,' and was also successful in the sight-reading test. The programme of the evening concert with which the Tournament terminated included Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion,' excellently performed under the direction of the Hon. Lucien Orde-Powlett. The orchestra, consisting of strings and pianoforte, was of more than ordinary efficiency, which it proved in the Andante from Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, and in other pieces. A highly interesting feature of the concert was a MS. composition, by a Wensleydale musician, Dr. Kitson, a setting of the Psalm 'Out of the depth' for baritone solo and orchestra, a work that possesses genuine feeling and reflective charm. It was sympathetically sung by Mr. John Browning, and produced a marked impression.

The Swaledale Tournament was held at Richmond (Yorkshire) on the 4th and 5th ult. The junior sections met on the first day, and the second day was devoted to the seniors. Instrumental, pianoforte and violin classes brought some very satisfactory performances. In the choral classes the Richmond Choral Society carried off a first prize, the Northallerton Choir coming close behind. The adjudicator, Dr. Turpin, stated that he considered there was plenty of musical talent in the district. It was only necessary to provide the encouragement which was afforded by the organisers of that tournament. An evening concert programme included Mendelssohn's 'Christus,' the second movement of Schubert's Symphony in B minor, and the overture to 'Prometheus.' The Hon. Orde-Powlett and Mr. W. Ellis conducted.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, May 26, 1902.

The United States are echoing with the music of choral festivals. It is a vast territory, and so-called festival associations have a habit in it of springing up in one night like mushrooms and of dying almost as suddenly. It is therefore next to impossible to keep a record of all such doings, most of which depend for their existence on the annual perigrinations of the Boston Festival Orchestra, managed by Mr. Stewart and directed by Mr. Mollenhauer. This orchestra swings round a wide circuit in the South and West every spring, and wherever it rests there springs up a music festival. When financial success attends the first venture another festival is sure to follow; but financial failure generally cuts short the life of the enterprise. The influence of the festivals is, therefore, transient and insignificant as a rule, and the affairs themselves scarcely worthy of discussion. Of a vastly different kind are the Cincinnati biennial festivals, concerning which I have reported to the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES for so many years that I feel almost as if age might give me the privilege of being garrulous about the fifteenth, which took place on the 14th—17th of this month.

I attended this festival as I had all its predecessors save one, though for twenty years it has involved a journey of some 700 miles. The festivals were established by Theodore Thomas—who has been their artistic director ever since—in 1873. Apprehension touching the extent of popular interest, or a laudable desire to curtail some of the less serious and dignified features of the meetings, led to a considerable change of plan this year. Heretofore the festival has endured five days, from Tuesday till Saturday inclusive, within which period there were given seven concerts—five in the evenings of all the days and two in the afternoons of Thursday and Saturday. This year the festival occupied four days and five concerts, and the chorus took part in all the meetings but one.

Theodore Thomas had decided to try an experiment with Bach's Mass in B minor. At the festival of 1886 he had brought forward the eleven numbers which make up the first two grand divisions of the work—the 'Kyrie' and the 'Gloria.' He now determined to give the mass in its integrity, and also to adjust the vocal and instrumental complements in the spirit of Bach's time. To that end he used Professor Kretschmar's score, prepared for the Riedel Society in Leipzig, and published three years ago. Kretschmar's procedure was unlike that of Franz and other musicians who have filled out the lacunæ in the scores of Bach and Handel by adding orchestral parts and modern instruments. He left Bach's score absolutely as it has come down to us, but suggested an augmentation of the wind parts in the manner customary before the time of Haydn, and wrote out the continuo for the organ in Bach's style. Mr. Thomas's band contained 76 violins, violas, violoncellos, and basses. With these he consorted twelve oboes, twelve flutes, eight bassoons, and eighteen trumpets (high D and A). He had two oboi d'amore for the obbligati written for that archaic instrument, and he doubled the high trumpet passages with clarinets. This was the only anachronism in the experiment, which, thanks to the admirable organ part (played by Mr. Middelschulte, of Chicago, under the eye of Mr. J. Fred Wolle, conductor of the memorable Bach festival given at Bethlehem, Pa., a year ago), proved to be a delightful and surprising success. The old preponderance of instruments over singers was not attained, but the solidity, muscularity, and flexibility of the body of tone given out by the band was inspiriting and uplifting. Unhappily, the choir (numbering 466) was not letter perfect, and Mr. Thomas's tempi were occasionally inexplicably and recklessly rapid, so that the performance as a whole fell short of that given by the smaller choir and band at Bethlehem, concerning which I wrote in May of last year. [See THE MUSICAL TIMES of July, 1901, p. 463.] The solos were sung by Mrs. Kunkil-Zimmermann, Mrs. Gertrude May Stein, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Andrew Black, and on the whole were the most satisfactory feature of the performance, though our visitors from England were compelled to put aside some of their Bach traditions in deference to the autocratic wishes of Mr. Thomas, who, for instance, turned all shakes into mordents. Mr. Black was specially engaged for the festival, but Mr. Davies, who is a great favourite in Cincinnati, sang for the fifth time at these meetings. Both gentlemen did honour to England and the English art of song throughout the work. The other solo singers were Ellison van Hoose (tenor) and Gwilym Miles (baritone). The Bach mass was performed on Friday evening; the other choral numbers were César Franck's 'Beatitudes,' excerpts from Gluck's 'Orpheus,' and Berlioz's 'Requiem.' The festival resulted in a financial loss.

Minor festivals have been given within the past few weeks in Kansas City, Louisville, Lebanon, Pa., Ann Arbor, Grand Rapids, Saginaw, and other cities in the Southern and Western States. In Kansas City there was a gathering of sixteen singing societies, and the distinguishing features of the meeting were a choir competition and the performance of Gounod's 'Faust' in concert form—a foolish notion which has been carried out this season by the Cecilia Society of Detroit, and the Arion of Providence, as well as by the Kansas singers. As opposed to such claptrap devices to catch the ears of the groundlings, it is pleasant to note two performances of Bach's great mass in Boston this season by the Cecilia Society, under the direction of Mr. B. J. Lang; one of the same work by the Choral Society of Philadelphia, under the direction of Henry Gordon Thunder; of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' by the People's Choral Union of New York (1,000 voices), under the direction of Mr. Frank Damrosch; of Liszt's 'St. Elizabeth,' by the Oratorio Society of Brooklyn, under the direction of Walter Henry Hall; of Berlioz's 'Damnation of Faust,' by the Apollo Club of Chicago; of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' by the Arion Club and the Cecilia Choir of Milwaukee; and of Parry's 'Judith,' by the Mount Vernon (N.Y.) Musical Society, under the direction of Alfred Hallam. This last performance took place on April 25, and was the first given of Dr. Parry's work in America. Unfortunately Mount Vernon is a small suburban town near New York, whose population is not large enough to warrant the engagement of an orchestra. The oratorio was well sung, but an organ had to do service for the very essential band.

I have room only for a note on the annual general meeting of the American Guild of Organists, which took place in New York on April 10. Officers were elected and reports read. From the latter it appears that the membership of the guild is now 280, and that the question which has occupied the attention of its members most during the past year is whether or not the guild shall advocate a uniform pedal board. The publication committee has also been collecting the opinions of American organists as to the organ console, which the guild hopes to see uniform throughout the country sooner or later.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Harcourt, the Norwich Orchestral Union gave a performance of Weber's 'Preciosa' on the 5th ult. The spoken recitative was entrusted to Miss Mabel White, who made a very favourable impression, the only vocal solo occurring in the work being sung by Miss Nellie Cockrill. The band, led by Miss Glendenning, gave a fairly good account of the accompaniments, the wood-wind being particularly good. In the second part of the programme a new patriotic song by the conductor was heard for the first time, and received with unstinted applause.

The Lowestoft Harmonic and Orchestral Society gave a concert at the Public Hall, on the 5th ult. The chief item in the programme was Stanford's 'The Revenge,' in which both chorus and orchestra did excellent work, reflecting great credit on their conductor, Mr. R. C. Luxton. Sullivan's 'O gladsome light' was also well rendered, while Massenet's 'Scenes Pittoresques' received a good interpretation by the band, led by Mr. C. U. Warren. Some songs, contributed by Mr. Harold Wilde, were much appreciated.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A most interesting concert was given by lady pupils of Mr. J. A. Moonie before the Incorporated Society of Musicians on May 24. The works selected were Pergolesi's beautiful 'Stabat Mater,' for female voices, and Hofmann's stirring cantata 'The Song of the Norns.' The choral singing in these works was very fine, and in the solo numbers Misses Gallon and Lotta, and Mrs. Rae in the 'Stabat Mater,' and Miss Lily Johnston in the 'Song of the Norns,' sang with great distinction. In the accompaniments Mr. Arthur W. Dace and Mr. James Winram particularly excelled. The concert was repeated on June 17 before a large gathering of musicians, among whom was Dr. Arthur Somervell.

Mr. Alfred Hollins gave a most successful pianoforte recital on May 24, and repeated it on the 14th ult. before the Edinburgh Society of Musicians. Mr. Hollins's readings were conspicuous for insight, vigour, and lucidity, and gave great pleasure to his hearers.

A very interesting joint recital was given on the 6th ult. by three rising young musicians, Messrs. R. Buchan, violinist, Arthur Nalborough, pianist, and Robert Burnett, baritone. A Grieg Sonata played by the two former artists, and a suite of Irish songs arranged by Signor Esposito and finely sung by Mr. Burnett, were the outstanding features of a very agreeable concert.

On the same evening the violin and pianoforte pupils of Herr Reinhold Tramm gave their annual concert, assisted by Madame Agnes Janson and Mr. John Johnstone, vocalists. A varied programme of classical music, ancient and modern, was most creditably presented to a large audience.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The last concert of the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society, held on May 28, was designed to mark the Coronation. The special pieces selected were Meyerbeer's 'Prophet' March; Handel's anthem 'Zadok the Priest'; Recit. and Air 'Thrice happy the Monarch' ('Alexander Balus,' of Handel); Godfrey's Coronation Prize-March; 'The King shall rejoice' (Handel); and a patriotic chorus, by Mr. E. H. Dicks, entitled 'The King's Song.' The soloists were Miss Aimée Rolda, and Mr H. Lane Wilson; and Mr. C. J. Phillips conducted an excellent band.

On the occasion of the annual Festival of the Gloucester Diocesan Choral Union, held in Gloucester Cathedral on the 10th ult., the choristers reached the largest number since the Festivals were commenced, now over ten years ago. Thirty-three choirs of churches in the diocese were represented, and the number of voices taking part was within one or two of a thousand. The organ was augmented by brass instruments (two trumpets and two trombones). Mr. S. Underwood was at the organ, and Messrs. A. Herbert Brewer and T. W. G. Cook were the conductors. The setting of the canticles was specially written for the Festival by Dr. C. Harford Lloyd; as was the anthem 'The King shall rejoice,' by Mr. C. Lee Williams; and at the end of the service there was sung an effective Te Deum by Mr. A. H. Brewer, also composed for the Festival. Mr. John E. West contributed a spirited tune to the processional hymn 'With gladsome feet we press.'

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the present term took place on April 30, at the Town Hall, when Dr. Joachim and his Berlin Quartet gave excellent performances of Beethoven's String Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1), Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 12), and Haydn's merry Quartet in D (Op. 76, No. 5). The concert proved to be most enjoyable, and Dr. Joachim was very warmly received.

Next in order came Sir Hubert Parry's lecture, on May 21, in the Sheldonian, the subject, 'The Differentiation of Style in Music,' being in fact a continuation of his former discourses.

The first concert of the so-called 'Eights Week' was given at Balliol College on Sunday evening, May 25, when Mendelssohn's Octet in E flat for strings was given by Mr. Alfred Gibson and his confrères. The second item comprised Brahms's Sextet in B flat, both being well played.

Next followed Exeter College with a concert on May 27, A full orchestra was employed, and Mr. J. S. Heap, the organ scholar and conductor of the College Musical Society, must be congratulated upon excellent renderings of Beethoven's 'Coriolan' Overture and Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 2). Two of the unaccompanied part-songs, Pinsuti's 'Spring Song' and Iliffe's 'Softly the Moonlight' were very artistically given, and met with much approbation. At Keble, on May 29, the principal vocal works were Anderton's Cantata, 'The Norman Baron' and Stanford's 'The Last Post,' both of which were excellently rendered. The orchestral items were German's Coronation March from his Henry VIII. music, and Weber's 'Der Freischütz' Overture, both capitally played under the able conductorship of Dr. Basil Harwood.

The last concert of the 'Race Week,' was that given on May 30 at Queen's, a College that has maintained a high reputation for high-class concert-giving for forty years, and which has brought into existence a large quantity of music for men's voices. The present music-making included, as usual, the services of a full orchestra, and contained three new musical works written especially for the occasion: firstly, a cantata, 'Eudora' ('The Bride of the Greek Isle'), poem by Mrs. Hemans, very effectively set by Mr. Myles B. Foster; secondly, a dainty little part-song by Miss Moseley to a poem by Goldsmith, 'Gently touch the warbling lyre'; and lastly, a short cantata, 'The Power of Song' (a translation of Schiller's poem), by Dr. Iliffe, the conductor of the Society. Mr. Myles B. Foster, who conducted his own work, was most warmly welcomed, while the enthusiasm accorded to 'The Power of Song' was so marked that in response to continued applause the final chorus had to be repeated.

Miscellaneous.

Mrs. Curwen concluded on May 29 two lectures on Method in Music Teaching, delivered to the students of the Royal Academy of Music, at the invitation of the Committee. By the help of children from the Forest Gate School of Music she showed her plans for gradually unfolding the subject, teaching practice before theory, and appealing at every point to the ear and the sense of tune and rhythm. The children, on hearing tunes played, said what measure they were in, and wrote them down on the blackboard in staff notation. Some of the rhythms thus written were quite difficult in character. A large audience of students followed the lectures with much interest, and loudly applauded the readiness of the children in working their tests.

The Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto offers a prize of twelve guineas for the best original unaccompanied motet or anthem in six or eight parts, after the style of Gounod's 'Come unto Him,' Mendelssohn's 'Judge me, O God,' or Tschaïkowsky's 'Cherubim Song,' No. 3, the competition to be open to all British and Colonial musicians. Compositions should reach the honorary secretary of the society, Mr. George H. D. Lee, Dominion Bank Chambers, on or before November 15. The adjudicators are Dr. Albert Ham, organist and choir director, St. James's Cathedral, Toronto; Mr. A. S. Vogt, conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir, and Sir Frederick Bridge.

Good reports of musical doings in South Somerset tell of the commendable work of Miss Trask, and the courage and zeal she has shown in training a choir of some 200 voices to perform the oratorio of 'Elijah,' excellent renderings of which took place at the fine old Parish Church at Marlock on the afternoon and evening of May 29, and at the Congregational Church at Yeovil on the following evening, with Mr. F. A. Sewell at the organ. Previous achievements of Miss Trask's choir have included performances of Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' May increasing success attend the efforts of these South Somerset singers and their enthusiastic conductress.

The annual festival of the Tonic Sol-fa Association was held at the Crystal Palace on the 7th ult. with its customary success. Two concerts were given on the Handel orchestra—one in which 5,000 juvenile certified singers took part, conducted by Mr. S. Filmer Rook, and the other, under the baton of Mr. Leonard C. Venables, when a large adult choir sang Handel's 'The King shall rejoice' (with full orchestral accompaniment) and a miscellaneous selection. Mr. C. Hugh Rowcliffe and Mr. Henry W. Weston were the organists at the respective concerts.

We regret to record the death, at the age of fifty-one, of Mr. J. W. D. Pillow, a well-known musician of Portsmouth, who expired at his residence in that town on the 1st ult. Mr. Pillow, who founded the Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society in 1880, and of which he held the honorary conductorship for twelve years, was organist successively of All Saints' Church (for twenty years) and of St. Mary, Portsea, from 1889 to 1901, when ill-health compelled him to resign the latter appointment.

The munificent gift of £5,000 from the Trinity College of Music to the University of London, from the funds which are assigned by the Trust Deed to the purposes of musical education, is a matter for hearty congratulation. The generosity of the College will thus enable the Senate to take some steps towards founding a Chair of Music in the University.

Mr. Granville Bantock has been appointed conductor of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society, in succession to Mr. Henry J. Wood.

Mr. C. Bechstein has supplied the German Emperor's yacht 'Meteor III.' with an upright pianoforte in satinwood, with inlay and painting in 'Adams' style.

Foreign and Colonial Notes.

ADELAIDE (AUSTRALIA).—The first chamber concert given by the staff of the Elder Conservatorium took place on April 28, in the Elder Hall. The programme included the following compositions, all of which were given for the first time in Adelaide: Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 32), Saint-Saëns; Quintet for pianoforte and strings (Op. 5), Christian Sinding; Sonata for pianoforte and violin (op. 18), Richard Strauss. The artists who took part were Herr H. Heinicke and Mrs. Ennis (violin), Mr. Eugene Alderman, Elder scholar (viola), Herr H. Kugelberg (violoncello), and Mr. Bryceson Treharne (pianoforte). Miss Guli Hack was the vocalist.

BUENOS AIRES.—Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was performed, on May 7, by the Buenos Aires Choral Union, in Prince George's Hall. The chorus consisted of some 90 or 100 voices. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Lloyd-Davies, Mrs. T. Kemp Mace, Mr. Wilfred C. Deacon, and Mr. J. W. Colquhoun. The orchestra, known as the 'Opera orchestra,' numbered fifty performers. The second part of the concert included the Allegretto con grazia, from Tschaïkowsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony. It was performed for the first time in Buenos Aires, and its rendering reflected great credit on Mr. J. Hampden Wall, organist of St. John's, who proved to be a very able conductor. Vocal music would appear to be in a flourishing condition in Buenos Aires as, in addition to the English Society above-named, there exist the Deutschen Männer Gesang Verein, the Deutschen Männer Chor, and the Schweizer Männer Chor, among others.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The first subscription concert of the season by the Christchurch Musical Union took place in the Canterbury Hall, on April 29, when Haydn's 'Creation' was performed. The choruses were extremely well rendered by the Society, and the orchestra was fully efficient. The solo vocalists were Mdlle. Antonia Dolores, who sang with great distinction, Mr. Prouse, who was also excellent, and Mr. Cellier. Mr. F. M. Wallace conducted.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.—The eminent violoncellist and teacher at the Hoch'sche Conservatorium, Bernhard Cossmann, has just celebrated his eightieth birthday. He was a member of the first Joachim Quartet Party, formed in 1847, and of the Weimar Orchestra, while under the conductorship of Franz Liszt.

GRAZ.—An enthusiastically received first performance of Hugo Wolf's opera 'Der Corregidor' has just taken place at the Municipal Theatre, under Capellmeister Weissleder's direction. Amongst Wolf's papers there has recently been found a number of unpublished compositions, including a symphonic poem, 'Penthesilea,' and an important choral work entitled 'Christ-Nacht.'

GUMBINNEN.—At the Third Lithuanian Musical Festival, held in this city in the last week of May, the performances included August Klughardt's oratorio 'The Fall of Jerusalem,' and an important new sacred choral work entitled 'Krönungs Cantata,' by Constanz Bernecker, the organist of the cathedral at Königsberg.

LAIBACH.—The venerable but still flourishing Laibach Philharmonic Society, the oldest institution of its kind in Austria, recently celebrated the two-hundredth anniversary of its foundation by a three days' musical festival. Amongst the principal works produced on the occasion were Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' Anton Bruckner's Symphony in E flat, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and a number of chamber compositions. The performances of both the orchestra and the well-trained choir were most highly appreciated by an audience which included many musicians from different parts of the empire. Herr Zöhrer, the musical director of the Society, conducted this interesting festival.

LEIPZIG.—The interesting historical programme of the fourth subscription concert of the Riedel Verein included a prelude and fugue for organ by J. Fischer, a 'sacred concerto,' for soprano solo and organ, by Ahle, a cavatina for five-part chorus by Kronach, and three of the posthumous choral preludes by Brahms.

LUDWIGSHAFEN.—A very successful first performance was given recently, by the Cecilien Verein, of a new choral work entitled 'Jos Fritz,' by A. Adam. The poem, by Frl. Maidykoch, deals with an episode in the peasant revolt during the Reformation period in Germany.

MADRID.—At the new Teatro Lirico, where national opera is to be specially cultivated, a new three-act music-drama, 'Circe,' the music by A. Chapi, has been brought out with much success.

MILAN.—An opera, 'Alessandra,' by the young composer Pacini, who is totally blind, was brought out last month at the Theatre Dal Verme with great success.

MUNICH.—Schillings's music-drama 'Ingwelde,' with Frau Senger-Bettaque in the title-part, has been revived at the Royal Opera with considerable success.——On the occasion of the unveiling of the Liszt monument at Weimar a special performance was given in this city of the pianist-composer's oratorio 'St. Elizabeth,' under Herr Stavenhagen's direction. The proceeds of the performance are to be devoted to the foundation of a Liszt scholarship at the Akademie der Tonkunst.

ST. PETERSBURG.—A new orchestral society, founded and maintained by the liberality of Count Alexander Scheremetzeff, is giving a series of Popular Concerts in this city at a nominal charge for admission, which are invariably crowded. On a recent occasion an excellent interpretation was given of Bruckner's Mass in D, while the programme also included the first performance of an orchestral suite by Tanajeff, which was received with much favour. At the Imperial Theatre a performance has been given of Schumann's 'Carneval,' arranged (with questionable taste) as a ballet, and orchestrated by several leading Russian composers, including Glazounow, Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Liadow!

ZWICKAU.—At the last concert of the season of the 'A Capella' Verein much enthusiasm was created by the appearance of Frl. Marie Wieck, the well-known pianist, and half-sister of the late Clara Schumann, who gave an admirable interpretation of the Three Romances (Op. 28) by Robert Schumann.

Answers to Correspondents.

S.M.—We have not a copy of Mr. Haweis's 'Music and Morals' at hand, either an English or American edition; but if, as you say, he states that 'For He shall give His angels' (Mendelssohn's 'Elijah') is 'managed with six trebles and two basses,' he has managed to give some erroneous information; moreover, that movement is not a 'choral quartet,' but a double quartet. There is only one printed version of the oratorio.

BATON.—You are quite right. It is a very prevalent shortcoming. You must 'rub it in' by constant and careful patterning. A great deal depends upon the way in which these things are put before choirs by conductors. Well intentioned, but futile was the remark of a well-known foreign-born musician, now deceased, who once said to a chorus: 'Vy do you not speak your vords more blane?—'O for de vings, de vings of a dove.'

T. P.—The Litany is variously sung in English Cathedrals. At Lincoln—the instance to which you refer—it is sung by two lay vicars singing in unison; at Lichfield and Exeter by a priest and lay vicar; but in all cases a priest performs the latter part, which begins at the Lord's Prayer. At St. Paul's Cathedral and elsewhere it is sung by a minor canon, and at a Coronation by two Bishops.

A. J. S.—A copy of the Clarke-Whitfeld edition of Handel's 'Messiah' is of no particular pecuniary value, although it was issued 'nearly one hundred years ago'—to be exact, 'October 20, 1809,' according to the date of the dedication in the first edition, of which a copy is now before us.

LICHFIELD.—We are sorry that we can give you no information as to the setting of Rudyard Kipling's 'Recessional,' said to have been sung at Pretoria on June 8, and, according to your account, to have been published in Australia.

H. J. B.—The biographical articles may be reprinted in book form some day; meanwhile, we regret that the numbers containing the three particular sketches you require are out of print. Thanks for your suggestion in regard to the other matter.

F. L. B.—For information on the Ecclesiastical Modes, see Helmore's 'Plain Song Primer.' (2) We gave the specification of the organ in the concert room of the Royal Academy of Music in our issue of February, 1900.

A COUNTRY ORGANIST.—We think your Vicar is wrong. The harmonies of the Litany responses you send us are inaccurate; you had far better keep to the Barnby edition.

SCHOOL.—We are afraid that we can only suggest advertising, and the placing of your name on the register of some reliable school agency for teachers.

G. E. B.—According to Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' the gentleman you mention was born on January 21, 1840.

F. C. S. and W. H.—A portrait of Henri Wieniawski, and a copy of Meyerbeer's 'Margherita d'Anjou' can be obtained of Messrs. Novello.

A. B.—You are quite right—'grace, not violence'; speed accordingly, notwithstanding disputations among musicians and 'unpleasantness at times' (or even tempi).

WESLEY.—Dĭana, not Deeana. Certainly not an Italian pronunciation of the lady's name.

R. H. S.—For the reply to your question, see the Church and Organ Music section of the present issue.

BYCHAN.—Herr Carl Frau is a composer of whom we have no knowledge whatsoever.

DOTTED QUAVER.—There is no published list of music that is entered at Stationers' Hall, and it is not at all likely that such information would be given, as the authorities charge a fee of one shilling for each search.

SONGS

COMPOSED BY

Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.

TRANSLATED BY

LADY MACFARREN

AND

WILLIAM BARTHOLOMEW.

TRANSPOSED EDITION:
Price, in paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"The present (transposed) edition contains not only all the songs composed by Mendelssohn—in addition to an air originally written for 'St. Paul'—but five by his sister, Fanny Hensel. The latter (see pages 3, 6, 64, 68, and 72, of this volume) were originally published under her brother's name, and were included in his Op. 8 and 9, as she did not wish to court publicity as a composer.

"The translations have been made to agree with the Novello edition of the songs in their original keys; moreover, this reprint has furnished the opportunity for thoroughly revising the songs, and for so laying out the accompaniments that the notes assigned to each hand are now placed in their proper staves. This improvement, in the carrying out of which not a single note of the composer's has been altered, conduces to clearness and will greatly facilitate the important work of the accompanist."

The editions of the Songs in their original keys are still published at the same prices.

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK

A COLLECTION OF POPULAR ANTHEMS

FOR

FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

Each book of this series contains twelve anthems: some for Festival occasions—e.g., Christmas, Easter, Harvest—and others which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections, in order that suitable variety may be secured and practical needs supplied.

It is therefore anticipated that in churches where an elaborate musical service is not possible, this publication will find acceptance. In such cases the advantage of having, in one book, twelve standard anthems which more than cover the requirements of the Church's year is obvious.

Book 1.

ADVENT	O King and Desire of all Nations	Stainer.
CHRISTMAS	Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Elvey.
LENT	Lord, for thy tender mercies' sake	Farrant.
,,	Enter not into judgment	Attwood.
,,	O ye that love the Lord	Coleridge-Taylor.
EASTER	O give thanks	Goss.
WHITSUN	Come, Holy Ghost	Attwood.
HARVEST	The Lord is loving unto every man	Garrett.
GENERAL	O love the Lord	Sullivan.
,,	The day Thou gavest, Lord	Woodward.
,,	Blessed are they that dwell	Tours.
,,	Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace	Lee Williams.

Book 2.

ADVENT	Hosanna in the Highest	Stainer.
CHRISTMAS	Sing and rejoice	Barnby.
LENT	O Saviour of the world	Goss.
,,	Teach me, O Lord	Attwood.
,,	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate	Gounod.
EASTER	Christ is risen	Elvey.
HARVEST	Great is the Lord	Steane.
GENERAL	What are these?	Stainer.
,,	O how amiable	West.
,,	O taste and see	Sullivan.
,,	The Lord is my Shepherd	Macfarren.
,,	God that madest earth and heaven	Fisher.

Book 3.

ADVENT	Far from their home	Woodward.
CHRISTMAS	Four Christmas Carols	Various.
LENT	Turn Thy Face from my sins	Sullivan.
,,	O Lord, my God	Wesley.
,,	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate	Mozart.
EASTER	Break forth into joy	Barnby.
HARVEST	O Lord, how manifold	Barnby.
GENERAL	Seek ye the Lord	Roberts.
,,	I was glad	Elvey.
,,	The radiant morn	Woodward.
,,	O praise God in His holiness	Weldon.
,,	Doth not wisdom cry	Haking.

Book 4.

ADVENT	Arise, O Jerusalem	King.
CHRISTMAS	Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	Hopkins.
LENT	In Thee, O Lord	Tours.
,,	Comfort, O Lord, the soul of Thy servant	Crotch, arr. by Goss.
,,	God so loved the world	Stainer.
EASTER	Christ our Passover	Goss.
WHITSUN	Praised be the Lord daily	Calkin.
HARVEST	Ye shall dwell in the land	Stainer.
GENERAL	O how amiable are Thy dwellings	Barnby.
,,	O taste and see how gracious the Lord is	Goss.
,,	Thine, O Lord, is the greatness	Kent.
,,	O give thanks unto the Lord	Elvey.

Book 5.

ADVENT	The Great Day of the Lord	Martin.
CHRISTMAS	It came upon the midnight clear	Stainer.
LENT	Incline Thine ear	Himmel.

THE MUSIC STUDENT'S MANUSCRIPT NOTE BOOK

AND

PRACTICE REGISTER

ARRANGED BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

This book is intended to meet the convenience of Teachers who wish to record clearly for a pupil's guidance the work to be prepared for each lesson or a series. The column headed "Time" is added for the purpose of indicating the number of minutes to be given to the daily practice of each separate subject. (This column is for the Teacher to fill up.)

A few pages of music paper have been inserted for the purpose of writing out turns, trills, &c., and blank pages have been left at the end on which it is suggested that a list of pieces studied should be kept, or other memoranda made. The book will be found suitable for students of any instrument.

Price Sixpence.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

A THANKSGIVING FOR VICTORY

FOR

CHORUS, STRINGS, BRASS, AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

FULL SCORE, 7s. 6d. (In the Press).

Vocal Score, 8vo, Paper Cover, 1s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.; String Parts, 2s. 6d.; Brass and Organ Parts, 7s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

The work begins with a short instrumental introduction, in which the composer makes use of the opening seven notes of his hymn tune, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The Te Deum then opens with a unison passage for the voices, and proceeds with broad choral effects, mostly diatonic. Perhaps the most notable feature occurs at the words "Holy, Holy, Holy," which are sung in unison at the same pitch, the basses and tenors being on the highest and the trebles on the lowest register of their voices. As it reaches the words "The glorious company of the Apostles" the music becomes more animated. There is a soft middle part beginning with the words "When Thou tookest upon Thee to deliver man," while the passage beginning "Thou sittest at the right hand of God" is introduced by the trebles, the music becoming slightly animated, and ending with a figure which is employed through two or three pages of the work. At the passage beginning "Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin," the air of "Onward, Christian Soldiers" is again introduced, the tune being ultimately played through twice by the band.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The composer's own tune, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," forms the dominant musical thought. Its leading phrase occurs in the opening bars, and, as the work proceeds, becomes conspicuous till, in the closing number, the orchestra has the complete tune, given out with energy and effect, while the voice parts pursue their own independent course. Apart from what is incidental, the "Te Deum" honours the traditions of English church music. It is grave, restrained, solid, with enough of sentiment to satisfy modern taste. Its prevailing diatonic harmony and an occasional touch of scholasticism are kindred features, while the work is everywhere pervaded by the refinement and distinction never absent from the composer's productions.

STANDARD.

Several of the passages of the great Eastern Hymn of Praise are set in a remarkable manner. The reiterated cry of the Cherubin and Seraphin, "Holy, holy, holy," is given by the choir in unison on middle C piano; a crescendo with a rise of a semitone is made at the words "Lord God," after which a diminuendo takes place as the voices sink back to middle C, the suggestion of the mysterious being heightened by the soft trumpet notes in the accompaniment. This passage ends in the key of C, and a very fine contrast is effected by a transition to the key of A flat through the chord of F minor at the words "The glorious company," the rhythm changing from duple to triple measure, and the tempo from allegro maestoso to allegro energico. The section beginning with "When Thou tookest" is opened softly by the tenors and basses in unison in the key of C minor, written over an effective "figure" in the bass of the accompaniment. The most beautiful section of the setting commences with the words "O Lord, save Thy people." In this the voices are expanded into eight parts, and only occasionally sustained by light chords from the organ. The verse beginning "Day by Day" is worked up to a fine climax, rising to fortissimo, and subsequently subsiding to piano. The initial phrase of the hymn tune is heard in the accompaniment, and the voices give out the principal vocal theme at the words "Vouchsafe, O Lord," but this time andante expressivo. The vocal parts are again but very lightly accompanied, until the horns begin softly the hymn tune, which is continued until the close is reached, with fine effect.

MORNING POST.

The Te Deum is simple in style. . . . The opening portion for chorus in four parts is highly effective. The basses in unison usher in the words "To Thee all angels cry aloud," the tenors and sopranos successively joining in. The composer has realised an effect in contrast by making the voices whisper the word "Holy" in unison. The succeeding Allegro energico "The glorious company of the Apostles praise Thee," is very striking. The words "When Thou tookest" are set in C minor and allotted to tenors and basses in unison, accompanied by a "ground bass" slightly suggestive of Meyerbeer. At "When Thou hadst overcome" the sopranos and altos enter. The section beginning at the passage "Lord, save Thy people" is most impressive, and the "Te Deum" works up to a fine triumphal climax at the close.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

This second contribution of the departed composer to the thanksgiving of a nation preserves the very best traditions of Anglican church music, and is a distinct advance on the first. While restrained, it is majestic in conception. Opening in E flat with a trumpet fanfare resting on a well-harmonised diatonic theme, the work changes into A flat, when the Praises of the Celestial Hosts are reached, and returns to the original key at the Incarnation. Following is an eight-part choral in B flat, succeeded by a return to the original theme, the finale lacking nothing in distinction, and completing a pæan everywhere bearing the impress of a musicianly hand.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The grandiose opening is of the simplest and broadest nature possible, introducing two bars from the hymn which we had just been singing, "Onward, Christian Soldiers"; then the full chorus opened with a grandly and sweepingly simple and brief introduction. The opening bars again make their appearance, and the parts are taken up separately by the Chorus, which lead to a beautiful and mysterious passage "Holy, Holy," full of originality and yet never tortuous or purely academic. Then the Chorus break away into a brilliant allegro movement, "The glorious company of the Apostles"; this continues for long in a vein of ecstatic high spirits and triumph, until a mysterious change, played with the utmost softness, brings us to what is possibly the loveliest section of the whole work—mysterious, highly original, and wonderfully reverent, "When Thou tookest upon Thee," which opens out into a short movement of triumphant choral expression, and which again slowly shades down through the mysterious opening to something less intangible on the words, "The Kingdom of Heaven to all believers." Then once again there is a triumphant outburst, culminating in a splendid eight-part chorus "Lord, save thy people," a mingling of many varying emotions, reaching its most magnificent development in an extremely original passage, where part enters after part "Day by day we magnify Thee." Then comes a hint again of the "Onward, Christian Soldiers," followed by the tender prayer "Vouchsafe, O Lord," developing into a fugal movement in which the mutterings of the same hymn are more and more distinctly heard, until the whole choir is merged into a grand fortissimo passage beneath which the band thunders out in most ingenious combination the full strains of the hymn (for skill in this sort of combination Sir Arthur was almost unrivalled) and the composition is brought to a triumphant conclusion. The work, I take it, will rank among the finest of Sir Arthur Sullivan's ecclesiastical compositions; it is full of intense fervour, and its musicianship is not short of splendid.

SKETCH.

It was Sir Arthur Sullivan's last finished work, and is distinguished by the singular vitality and the emotional vivacity which inspired all his best work when he was profoundly moved.

YORKSHIRE DAILY POST.

In the music, which is eminently diatonic, vocal, and broad, it is easy to recognise the influence on the composer of his early grounding in Anglican Church music at the Chapel Royal—an influence which was ever present with him, and leavened even the Savoy operettas. The sub-title of the work is "A Thanksgiving for Victory," and in the trumpet fanfare of the introduction there is an obvious suggestion of the motive underlying the composition. It is festal and grandiose in effect, but thoroughly practical, and there are no solo parts—which many will regard as a distinct recommendation—nor is there any formal division into distinct movements. At the words, "O Lord, save Thy people," the music is divided into eight-part harmony, and here the flowing, vocal counterpoint should produce a fine effect. Breadth and simplicity are aimed at throughout, and the Te Deum, sung in a large church by a great body of singers, should prove thoroughly effective.

BRISTOL TIMES.

Simplicity, directness, and effectiveness characterise this pure piece of devotional music. A most beautiful section is that which commences with the words "O Lord, save Thy people," where the voices are expanded into eight parts, only occasionally sustained by light chords on the organ.

MANUAL OF THE ORCHESTRAL LITERATURE OF ALL COUNTRIES

COMPILED AND EDITED BY

A. ROSENKRANZ.

IN CLOTH, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

The Manual contains an almost complete list of the orchestral compositions written by composers of all countries, from Lully and Rameau (1651) up to the present time—Edward Elgar, Camille Saint-Saëns, and Richard Strauss (1902)—a period covering 250 years.

The 5012 separate works for Orchestra scheduled in the Manual are written by 1337 different composers, and are classified as follows:—

Overtures	1272	Miscellaneous Pieces ...	434
Symphonies	588	Marches	467
Various Concert Pieces...	1542	Music for String Orchestra	709

A special table, showing the degree in which the different nationalities of the various composers are represented, is given in the preface.

An alphabetical list of the names of the composers is placed at the end of the Manual, and whenever it was obtainable, the year in which each composer was born is stated.

In order to keep "The Manual of Orchestral Literature" up to date, and make it absolutely reliable as a Handbook of reference, supplementary lists will be issued at regular intervals.

EARLY BODLEIAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

SIR JOHN STAINER.

The First Volume contains 110 Facsimiles of Manuscript Music—chiefly secular—preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, ranging from 1185 to 1505 A.D., with a description of the MSS. by E. W. B. Nicholson, M.A., Bodley's Librarian.

The Second Volume contains Transcriptions into Modern Notation by J. F. R. Stainer, B.C.L., M.A., and Cecie Stainer, with an Introduction by the late Sir John Stainer.

This important work has been many years in preparation. It affords a survey of the history of Musical Notation and Expression, and illustrates the development of the art of music over a period of more than three Centuries (1185 to 1505).

The Volumes include English and French Songs of earlier date than any hitherto known to exist, besides many examples of early Part-writing that no future historian of music can afford to ignore.

The late Sir John Stainer devoted much time in the latter years of his busy life to the preparation and supervision of this work, which may be regarded as the crowning achievement of his varied musical activity.

The competition to be open to all British musicians, including those of the Colonies. A PRIZE of FIFTY DOLLARS is also offered by the same Society for the best SECULAR UNACCOMPANIED PART-SONG; the competition to be open only to Composers resident in Canada. The Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto will hold all rights in the successful compositions as to publication, performance, and otherwise, until after the first public performance of the successful works by the chorus of the Society, when said rights will be surrendered to the successful competitors. No composition previously performed or published will be eligible, and no award will be made if, in the opinion of the judges, the compositions submitted are not deemed to be of sufficient merit. Each composition should bear a motto, and along with it an envelope bearing the same motto outside, containing the name and address of the Composer. Compositions should reach the Honorary Secretary of the Society, Mr. Geo. H. D. Lee, Dominion Bank Chambers, Toronto, on or before November 15 next. The Adjudicators are Dr. Albert Ham, Organist and Choir Director of St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, and Mr. A. S. Vogt, Conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir, of Toronto, who will have associated with them Sir J. Frederick Bridge, Organist of Westminster Abbey, with whom the final decision will be left.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL
(BARITONE).
(Assistant Lay Clerk Westminster Abbey)
Mr. Henry J. Wood (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—
"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.
"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.
"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.
"Henry J. Wood."
"Elijah."—Bromley.—"The title part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionalism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.
AND
MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD
(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).
Address, 56, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.

AUGUST 1, 1902.

A VISIT TO CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD.

Antiquity, architecture, great traditions, distinguished alumni, and church music form a combination of characteristics which invest with peculiar interest the great College of Christ Church in the University of Oxford. In regard to antiquity, a Saxon church which formed part of the monastery of St. Frideswide, circa 727, stood on the site of the present Cathedral. Commenced in 1120, and consecrated sixty years afterwards, the buildings forming the Chapel of Christ Church, otherwise the Cathedral of the diocese of Oxford, are rich in architectural development — the Norman of the main sanctuary, the Early English of the Chapter House, and the Perpendicular of the Refectory, now broken up with rooms, but preserving the exterior windows on one side. Its spire, though appearing somewhat dumpy in this 'sweet city of her dreaming spires,' is one of the earliest—if not actually the first—built in England. The fact that Christ Church is one of the smallest of our cathedrals is partly due to Cardinal Wolsey, who chopped off, so to speak, three of the westernmost bays of the Nave in order to make way for the celebrated Tom Quad, of which more anon.

In recent years the Cathedral has been lengthened by a new western bay forming an ante-chapel. The interior has several features of interest. The Lady Chapel and the Latin Chapel,—a church within a church—both situated at the north-east of the choir, give the Cathedral a peculiar shape. Moreover, the Choir and the Nave are not separated. At the east end are three extremely rough arches, leading to three semicircular apses, of which the foundations still exist, discovered in 1888, and which remain as relics of the first stone church of St. Frideswide, one of the earliest stone churches in England. The thirteenth-century shrine of St. Frideswide attracts attention no less by its beauty than for its historical associations. In the choir may be seen traces of Ethelred's work in the large round pillars and the weathered columns above, that once formed part of the clear-story. One of the older members of the House, Mr. T. Vere Bayne, has lately resolved to replace the curious corner turrets of the west end at his own private cost. The pulpit, surmounted by a pelican, and the organ case, are of the Jacobean period.

The reverent restoration of the Cathedral, first instigated in 1856 by Dean Liddell, included the successful rebuilding of the east end, said to be a reproduction of the original twelfth-century design, and is a testimony to the labour of the late Sir Gilbert Scott. As showing the utter lack of reverence in the 'good old days,' as they are so often misnamed, it may be mentioned that previous to 1870 one bay of the south transept served as the residence of the Dean's verger. This functionary, a Mr. Keys, kept his beer barrel in a cupboard just below the pew in which the Deanery ladies sat! Moreover, Verger Keys used to station himself at the entrance to the Choir armed with a stout dog-whip with which to belabour any of the canine tribe that not infrequently followed their undergraduate masters into Chapel. If the chapter books are not profuse in references to the Cathedral, they furnish evidence of the rich ornaments that even survived the confiscation (temp Henry VIII.) of 'monuments tending to idolatrie and popish or devill's service, crosses, censars, and such lyke fylthie stuffe.' Among the furniture then catalogued were:—

Item. A great sacring bell.
Item. 4 high latten candlesticks.
Item. A canopy with a pix of copper.
Item. A canopy over the Dean's head of old silk.
Item. 15 antiphoners and 9 grayells.
Item. A pair of organs, with a turned chair to the same.

One of the earliest Chapter orders enjoins that 'the Orgaines in the Quire of this Church be taken downe.' Father Smith built an organ of The organ has occupied various positions at different times. In 1806 the organ-loft was 'fitted up so as that the singing boys and singing men may be removed thither for the future.' The present organ—located at the west end of the nave, its key-boards approached by an iron spiral staircase—is a four-manual instrument, rebuilt in 1884 by Father Willis. In any scheme of reconstruction, now necessary after the wear and tear of eighteen years, the choir organ should be restored to its original 'in front' position, where it remained for nearly two centuries, in order that its stops may form a better support to the voices than is possible under the present arrangement.

Let us now turn to the College of Christ Church, which, notwithstanding its joint-life with the Cathedral, is four hundred years younger than the sacred edifice. In the year 1525, Cardinal Wolsey obtained a Patent for the Oxford foundation, styled 'Collegium Thomæ Wolsey Cardinalis Eboracensis,' or 'Cardinal College.' The original statutes provided forty-two persons for the services of the church—thirteen chaplains, twelve lay clerks, sixteen choristers, and a teacher of music. The first stone was laid July 16, 1525, and Wolsey set to work on the buildings with enthusiastic zeal. In constructing the famous Tom Quad, he, as already mentioned, pulled down the three westernmost bays of the Nave; but he intended to build a college chapel on the north side of the Quad, which might have proved a rival to King's College, Cambridge. The great Cardinal was not oblivious to the claims of the 'inner man,' one of the earliest completed buildings being the famous kitchen, 'a magnificent apartment, with vast open ranges at the sides, and a central fire with louvre above.'* The kitchen has scarcely been altered since its completion, nearly four hundred years ago, except in regard to the addition of modern appliances; Wolsey's gridiron may still be seen hanging on the wall, as shown in our illustration.

Equally magnificent is the noble Hall (1529), perhaps the finest apartment of its kind in England, with its splendid collection of portraits. The fine portrait of Cardinal Wolsey, by Holbein, which we give, is one of them. It is reproduced by special permission of the Dean. The Hall is approached by a vaulted-roof staircase of remarkable beauty, the delicate fan tracery, supported by a single shaft, fascinating all beholders. The acoustic properties of this staircase are very remarkable. The present writer recalls a story told to him on these very stairs by the late Sir John Stainer, to the effect that the late Sir Frederick Ouseley used to delight his friends by singing the common chord in arpeggio and very quickly through three octaves, and the resultant effect was as if the notes had all been sounded together. 'I can't do it,' said Sir John, 'as I have a voice like an old crow.'

The famous Tom Tower grew by degrees. Its lower story is due to Wolsey (as shown in our illustration from Loggan's 'Oxonia Illustrata,' 1675), but the upper part is from the design of

* 'Christ Church.' By the Rev. Henry L. Thompson, M.A. This book is one of the interesting and valuable series of 'College Histories,' published by Messrs. F. E. Robinson and Co.

Sir Christopher Wren, and was completed in 1682. 'As soon as the Tower was ready for its new tenant,' to quote from Mr. Thompson's history, 'great Tom was hoisted up and hung in its new home, and from thence it rang out for the first time on the anniversary of the Restoration, May 29, 1684.' The name and sex of the great bell, which weighs upwards of seven tons and came from Oseney Abbey, was temporarily changed from Tom to Mary, in honour of the second Queen of that name. It is, however, cracked and needs re-casting, its proper note, D flat, being rather out of tune. Peckwater Quad—so named after an old Inn—was begun in 1716, during the reign of the musical Dean Aldrich.

Christ Church Cathedral is peculiar in that it serves as the College Chapel. Its Dean and Canons are designated 'of Christ Church'; thus there is no Chapter of Oxford, as in other English cathedrals. And here, in order to make the history of this famous Cathedral and College more complete, it is necessary to say that after the deposition of Wolsey, Henry VIII. initiated, in 1546, the existing foundation with the title of 'Ecclesia Christi Cathedralis Oxon: ex fundatione Regis Henrici Octavi.' 'The word "Cathedralis" was inserted,' says Mr. Thompson, 'because the Episcopal See of Oxford, which had been erected in 1542, was now [1546] transferred from Oseney Abbey to Christ Church.' Thus Christ Church, Oxford, is an unique instance of a cathedral and a collegiate foundation. Its proper title is Ædes Christi (not Collegium), hence it is always spoken of by its members as 'The House.'

From the same source of information we obtain some amusing glimpses of student life in bygone days, as recorded in the College archives. In the earliest times the Dean and Chapter met every Sunday afternoon to transact business, and a list of 'What everie Scholler ought to have before he enter into the House' included—

Honeste apparell and cumblye for a scholler.
His catechisme sett forthe in the Kyng's booke by harte.

Another list mentions as a requirement—

Bedding sufficient and meet for one man.

Matters sartorial seem to have occupied the powers-that-be, as Dean Tobie Matthews decreed, about the year 1576—

That every scholar and student shall wear and go in fytt and decent apparell according to their severall degrees, according to the lawes and statutes of this realme and the ordinances and statutes of this Universitie. And that they shall not weare any whyte and pricked doublets, no galligaskins or cutt hose, no weltyed nor lacyd gownes, upon the severall paynes nexte before rehersyd.

The Chapter ordered that—no student, scholar, chaplain nor servant or any belonging to the House shall lodge any dogg except the porter to dryve out cattell and hogges out of the House.

A premium upon piety is recorded in the fact that the Censor of Moral Philosophy was paid the sum of £14 15s. 4d. for two quarters 'for his paines in prayinge in the Chappell in the morning,' and another sum was soon afterwards added 'for his further encouragement in prayinge' after the death of his brother Censor.

The porters had to see that—no seamstress, stocking menders, and applewomen, or any suspicious persons of any kind be admitted into the College.

An entry in the records on Christmas Eve, 1711, reads :—

Ds. Roberts having neglected to appear and do his duty of burying the Censor . . . is ordered to appear . . . next Term to answer for his neglect.

This custom of 'burying the Censor' seems to have been an undertaking of a mysterious nature.

Somewhere about 1770 a student committed a grave offence which in the present day would result in expulsion; but he had to pay the penalty of his misdeeds in an imposition of extraordinary length. He was ordered—

(1) to abridge the whole of Herodotus;
(2) to draw out schemes and enunciations and to master Euclid, books 5, 6, 11, 12;
(3) to write down and work all the examples in McLaurin's Algebra, part 1;
(4) to make notes on all St. Paul's Epistles, and a careful diary of the hundred last Psalms in Hebrew;
(5) to translate into Latin both parts of the ninth discourse of the second volume of Sherlock's sermons.

Moreover, this offender was further directed to the stool of repentance by being rusticated for a period of six months.

The Deans of Christ Church, thirty-six in number, have included some remarkable men.

In 1650 a student named Devoy (probably Devaux) was rusticated in these terms :—

It is ordered by the Dean and Chapter that Devoye for divers gross and scandalous acts shall be publicly whipped in the House, and afterwards sent home to his Father for a twelve months, and not to return then without a testimonial of his civil and orderly carriage during the time of his absence.

The use of bad language by the students instigated the following severe edict :—

that some order be taken to punish the abuse of swearing —viz., that for the first and second time he that sweareth be fined 12d. for every oath; and when convicted the third time shall be proceeded against as a scandalous person.

Richard Corbet (1620-29), for instance, was noted for his jocosity. We are told that—after he was Doctor of Divinity, he sang ballads at the Cross at Abingdon. On a market day he and some of his comrades were at the tavern by the Cross. A ballad singer complained he had no custom; he could not put off his ballads. The jolly Doctor puts off his gown and puts on the ballad singer's leathern jacket, and being a handsome man, and a rare full voice, he presently vended a great many and had a great audience.

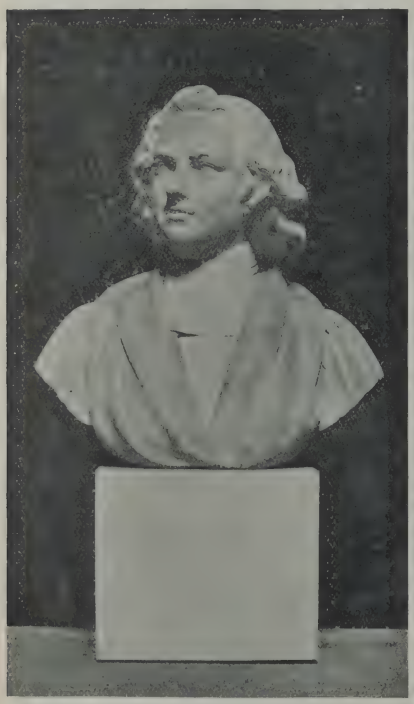
The name of John Fell, another Dean, is associated with the familiar lines—

I do not like thee, Doctor Fell,
The reason why I cannot tell.



DR. HENRY ALDRICH,
DEAN OF CHRIST CHURCH, 1689 TO 1710.
(From a bust in the College Library. Reproduced by kind permission of the Librarian, Professor York Powell, M.A.)

One of the greatest, certainly one of the most musical of Deans, was Dr. Henry Aldrich, who held sway from 1689 to 1710—'polite, though not profound scholar, and jovial hospitable gentleman,' according to Macaulay. A man of many parts—great theologian, skilful architect, and excellent musician—Dean Aldrich left his permanent mark on the buildings of the College in Peckwater Quad, which he designed. The well-known Round, 'Hark, the bonny Christ Church bells,' composed by him is, as the late Sir John Stainer observed, 'still the joy of school children and the admiration of musicians, on account of the sweetness of its melody and the excellence of its construction. No better example of this class of composition has ever been produced.' The words of this ditty, which first appeared in Playford's Musical Companion, read thus, though 'beerers' has now become 'bearers':—

Hark the bonny Christ Church bells,
One, two, three, four, five, six they sound
So woundy great, so wondrous sweet,
And they troul so merrily, merrily.

Hark the first and second bell
That every day at four and ten cries
Come, come, come, come, come to prayers
And the verger troups before the dean.

Tingle, tingle, ting goes the small bell
At nine to call the beerers home;
But the de'il a man will leave his can Till he hears the mighty Tom.

The fine collection of music which Dean Aldrich formed will be referred to later. Of the ten catches composed by him, that on 'Tobacco' is highly diverting. It is directed to be sung 'by four men smoking their pipes: not more difficult to sing than diverting to hear.' Aldrich was a most inveterate smoker, being seldom without a pipe in his mouth. On one occasion a student made a bet with a college chum that if they went to the Dean they would find him enjoying the fragrant weed. An audience was sought and the pair explained the intrusion. 'You have lost your bet, sir,' said the Dean; 'I am not smoking, I am only filling my pipe!'

The splendid régime, lasting thirty-six years, of Henry George Liddell — known to every schoolboy in connection with his invaluable 'Liddell and Scott'—was one of the most beneficent in the history of Christ Church. He being dead yet speaketh in the magnificent restoration of the College buildings, including the Chapel (Cathedral). His well-lived life closed on January 18, 1898; his body rests outside the southern wall of the sanctuary of his old cathedral church and in the precincts of the College he had served and loved so well and with a whole-souled devotion to its interests. The present Dean, the Very Reverend T. B. Strong, who succeeded Dean Paget (now Bishop of Oxford) in 1901, has the rare distinction, so far as Deans are concerned, of being musical. As an undergraduate of the College he used to deputise at the organ in the occasional absence of Dr. Corfe the organist. In this connection the Dean writes, in answer to a request for some information on the subject, as follows:—

My arrangement with Dr. Corfe was that I undertook to be in the organ-loft on Thursdays and play until he came. He always arrived, I think, before the anthem.

I think it should always be remembered about Dr. Corfe that, though he was capable, in his later days, of producing effects that were more unexpected than attractive, he was a real musician, of no mean order. In his time the Cathedral music was not, as might have been expected, restricted in its range to the straitest following of Cathedral tradition. He would not have anything to do with florid modern services: but in the matter of anthems he used to put down certain numbers from Brahms' Requiem—a work which he highly appreciated, but which many of the congregation detested. I must admit that Brahms' music did not suit his style. Also in the matter of the tempo of certain numbers in the Elijah, he preserved the tradition which came from Mendelssohn.

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL, OXFORD.
(Photograph by Messrs. Hills and Saunders, Oxford.)

Christ Church, of all the colleges in Oxford, has been famous for its royal visitors, beginning with Ethelred, who rebuilt the church, fired during the massacre of St. Brice; Henry III., who, with his brother Richard, King of the Romans, built the chapter house; Henry VII.'s eldest son, Arthur; and, after the College replaced the Priory, continuing with Queen Elizabeth, who witnessed one at least of Shakespeare's plays in the Hall; James I., who held high pedantic revel after his kind; Charles I., who held his parliament in Oxford and sat with the Lords in the same Hall; Charles II. and James II.; and extending to our present King Edward VII., who, by-the-way, matriculated as a member of the College in 1859 and kept his terms for two years. In 1814, the Prince Regent (afterwards George IV.) visited Oxford in company with the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia. Among the guests on that occasion was Marshal Blücher, who, during his residence in College, slept in his boots with a bottle of brandy under his pillow!

And then as to distinguished alumni of the College—to mention all would be impossible within the limits of space. Here are a few names of former Christ Church men:—

King Edward VII. (already referred to) and his artistic brother, the late Duke of Albany (Prince Leopold). William Penn (the founder of Pennsylvania), Robert Burton (author of 'The anatomy of melancholy'), John Locke, and Sir Philip Sidney; among divines, John Wesley (ordained deacon in the Cathedral in 1725) and his brother Charles ('the sweet singer of Methodism'), Stanley, Pusey (buried in the Cathedral) and Liddon; the philanthropic Earl of Shaftesbury, the great Marquess Wellesley; twelve Prime Ministers, among them Canning, Peel, Gladstone, the Marquess of Salisbury, and the Earl of Rosebery; great scholars like Gaisford and Liddell; and representative authors in John Ruskin and C. L. Dodgson (Lewis Carroll)—truly a goodly company.

We may now turn to matters more strictly musical. First, a peep at the library, rendered specially interesting in the company of so qualified a cicerone as the librarian of the College, Professor York Powell. The building, situated in Peckwater Quad and completed in 1761, is one of the sights of Oxford. The upper room—142 feet long, 30 feet broad, and 37 feet high—is lined with finely-carved Norwegian oak, and the ceiling and walls are enriched with fine mouldings. An open gallery running the whole length of one side of the room adds to the architectural distinction of this noble apartment. Professor York Powell points with pardonable pride to some case books—e.g.:—a Lectionary of Wolsey's, with fine illuminated initials and borders; a French thirteenth-century translation of the New Testament with beautiful miniatures, De Officiis Regum written for Edward II. and presented to Edward III., with many heraldic miniatures and drawings of military subjects; a hand-written Psalter with a binding of velvet embroidered with seed pearls; pamphlets with Izaak Walton's autograph, &c.

In a room upstairs, leading from the gallery, is the valuable collection of music made for the most part by Dean Aldrich, and bequeathed by him to the College. Here, admirably arranged and cared for, are some 8,000 pieces of early English and foreign music. The manuscripts include thirty anthems by Dr. Aldrich; several anthems, motets and services, and a masque ('Venus and Adonis') by Dr. Blow; many compositions (including a curious specimen of programme music, 'Mr. Bird's battle') by W. Byrd; compositions by R. Deering, T. Ford, Orlando Gibbons, John Jenkins, Henry Purcell, Carissimi, Palestrina, and others, in addition to a large number of anonymous compositions, including 239 motets, 162 cantatas, &c., to English words, and 408 cantatas to Italian words. The printed collections of motets, madrigals, &c., include some of the rarest and best of sixteenth-century Italian music. The librarian works with the simple and practical system of a consecutive numbering of the volumes, in preference to shelf marks. There is a good MS. catalogue by a late chaplain, Mr. Havergal, in two volumes, beautifully written and illuminated! It is greatly to be hoped that this catalogue will be printed in the near future. Some of the bindings put the tenth commandment to the test when the volumes are handled by a book lover. The thread and case system adopted for the part-books is excellent—in fact, too much praise cannot be given to Professor York Powell for the reverent care he bestows on the precious books placed under his watchful protection.

Finally, as to the church music and the organists of the Cathedral—or Chapel, in deference to Christ Church men. Nearly 300 years ago the Chapter ordered—> the singing with the organ the Venite exultemus, the Te Deum, the Benedictus, or some such like hymn every Sunday and Holyday throughout the year.

and, furthermore—> that the old and laudable custom of singing Grace in the Hall shall presently after dinners and suppers be still continued by the chaplain, and for the more solemn performance thereof that some new songs be made by the organist.

The choirmen had to assemble once a month 'to see who have been careful and who negligent, and so to encourage and correct them as there shall be cause.'

In the list of organists of the Cathedral, the first recorded name is that of John Taverner (? 1530). Hawkins tells us that he (Taverner) and others being accused of heresy, were imprisoned in a deep cave [cellar] under the College used for the keeping of salt-fish, 'the stench whereof occasioned the death of some of them.' The next notable holder of the office was Edward Lowe (from 1630?—1682), who is known as the author of

> A Short Direction for the Performance of Cathedrall Service. Published for the Information of such Persons, as are Ignorant of it, And shall be call'd to officiate in Cathedrall or Collegiate Churches, where it hath formerly been in use.

> Oxford: Printed by William Hall for Richard Davis. 1661.

The successors of Lowe were, curiously enough, two Husbands and two Goodsons!

Thomas Norris, composer of the well-known chant bearing his name, held the chief musicianship from 1776 to 1790. He was also a Lay Clerk of Magdalen College. Concerning his duties in the latter sanctuary, Bloxam, in his 'Magdalen Registers,' informs us that—

Unfortunately the Quire of Magdalen College had not often the opportunity of admiring his excellence. When admitted as a Clerk, he was mildly desired by the President, Dr. Horne, to attend at the chapel occasionally. This he understood so literally, as to make his appearance only once a quarter, on the days that the Clerks received their salary. On these rare occasions a servant in livery preceded him with his surplice and hood.

The next man of mark was Dr. Crotch, who could write as easily with his left hand as with his right; moreover, it is said that he would often write down the notes of two separate staves of music simultaneously! An old MS. book now in the organ loft contains many curious chants written (with figured basses) by Dr. Crotch during his organistship, which lasted from 1790 to 1807 (or 8). He was also Professor of Music in the University of Oxford from 1797 to his death in 1847, and the first Principal of the Royal Academy of Music. Some interesting materials for Dr. Crotch's biography, as well as five volumes of his printed works, have been recently presented to the Library by Mr. T. W. Taphouse, the well-known music collector of Oxford. Dr. Crotch was a water-colour painter of skill and sympathy, and has his own place in the catalogue of Oxford artists.

With just a mention of William Cross and Dr. William Marshall (joint-editor with Alfred Bennett of a collection of Chants and a book of Words of Anthems), we pass on to the celebrated Dr. Corfe—noted for his long walks. In connection with that pedestrian hobby, the late Sir John Stainer used to tell the following story; it formed one of his reminiscences of Sir Frederick Ouseley while the latter was an undergraduate at Christ Church:—

Being a musician of the old type, Dr. Corfe rarely changed his stops during the Psalms; Ouseley and his young friends got so accustomed to one particular quality of tone that they named it the Corfe-mixture. Ouseley knew that Dr. Corfe always at the close of one service prepared his stops for the giving out of the chant at the next; moreover, Dr. Corfe was fond of long walks, and made a point of rushing into the organ loft just in time to place his hands on the keys. This offered a temptation to the undergraduates which was irresistible. Watching Corfe safely out of the Cathedral one morning, Ouseley put in all the pre-arranged stops, and then drew on each manual the most horrible and startling combination he could think of. When evening service commenced, Ouseley and his friends stood behind a pillar to hear the effect. Sure enough, just as the Psalms approached, Dr. Corfe hurried in and placed his hands on the keys. Everybody in the church gave a start, except Dr. Corfe himself, who placidly held down the chord while he one by one put in the objectionable registers, and gradually drawing his usual stops, once more reverted to the inevitable 'Corfe-mixture.'

Another 'Corfe' story is thus related by the Rev. Henry L. Thompson in his interesting 'Memoir' of Dean Liddell:—

Dr. Corfe was sorely plagued by one of the choirmen, whose alto singing was miserably bad. He came to the Dean: 'Mr. Dean, I really cannot have that man singing any longer; he spoils the whole choir. If only he sang bass it would not so much marter, but such an alto is intolerable.' 'Very well, Dr. Corfe,' said the Dean, 'I will deal with the matter.' So the choirman was sent for. 'Dr. Corfe complains of your singing, and says he cannot have you sing alto any longer; but that it would not be so bad if you sang bass. For the future, therefore, be good enough to sing bass.' 'But, Mr. Dean,' rejoined the man, 'I cannot sing bass.' 'Well,' answered Liddell, 'I am no musician; but sing bass you must. Good morning.'

DOORWAY OF THE CHAPTER HOUSE.

(From the 'College Histories' Series. By permission of Messrs. F. E. Robinson and Co.)

Dr. Corfe presented a very beautiful stained-glass window to the Cathedral. It is in the North Choir Aisle, and was designed by Sir Edward Burne-Jones in 1874-5, the subject being the appropriate one of St. Cecilia.

Upon the resignation of Dr. Corfe in 1882, Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd, the successor of Dr. S. S. Wesley at Gloucester Cathedral, reigned in his (Corfe's) stead, and worthily held the office for ten years. When Dr. Lloyd became Precentor of Eton (in 1892), the Dean and Chapter were fortunate in securing the services of Dr. Basil Harwood, then organist of Ely Cathedral. An Oxford man,—he was organist of Trinity College in his undergraduate days—Dr. Harwood fills the position as if to the manner born. He is also Choragus to the University and Precentor of Keble College. His melodious Evening Service in A flat, his Dithyramb for the organ, and songs, are well known and admired. He has a leaning to the meditative style of the old church music. On the occasion of our visit, the 'bill' contained Farrant's short Evening Service in D minor, and for the anthem Weldon's 'In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust.' The rendering of the service bore testimony to his skill as a choir trainer and accompanist; for the concluding voluntary he gave a fine rendering of both the Prelude and Fugue of Bach in E flat, known as 'St. Anns.' It may safely be said that all the best traditions of Christ Church Music are safe in the hands of the present organist.

Finally, best thanks are due and are herewith tendered to Professor York Powell and to Dr. Basil Harwood for so readily affording pleasant facilities in the preparation of this article on Christ Church, Oxford.

CONCERNING AUDIENCES.

I suppose there can be no doubt that Ludwig II. of Bavaria is rightly styled the "Mad King." So far, however, as one particular phase of his aberration is concerned, I am often inclined to doubt if it might not be interpreted as an indication of exceptional sense—or, at any rate, of method underlying the madness. It is not everyone who can emulate a monarch by procuring for himself special private performances of opera, as did Ludwig II., but there are not a few occasions when the behaviour of audiences is such that one wishes one could copy his example.

The necessity of educating audiences—of making good listeners—has often been the subject of comment, but the first requirement of all, though elementary, seems to be hopelessly impossible. This is to make people understand that the primary object of concert-going is to listen to the music. I do not see much prospect of this being accepted as anything more than an academic theory, but it might be possible to make it more generally realised that the minority in any given audience who desire to give an undivided attention to the music deserve some consideration. Just consider what they habitually suffer. Parenthetically, it may be remarked that the frequenter of the cheaper seats has much less reason for complaint than the pampered occupant of the stalls, for the former finds himself surrounded by the keenest of concert-goers, who go to hear music, and who brook no interference with their enjoyment, which they have purchased at a small price in actual coin, but at considerable cost in the inconvenience of waiting half-an-hour or more on cold, stone steps, or in draughty corridors before the doors open

It is rather in quarters where fashion operates as an important inducement to the concert-goer that one longs for at least sympathy, if not for solitude. First, there are the late-comers. Supposing the concert opens with the Euryanthe overture—a not uncommon choice—you will have just settled down to its enjoyment when, in the middle of the mysterious far-away episode of muted strings, a party of belated ones crowd into their places in the same row, treading on your feet as they pass, interrupting the thread of the music, and rousing angry passions in your breast, which their subsequent conduct does not tend to quell. For, instead of being abashed into silence, they must needs spend the first five minutes in murmured conversation with friends in neighbouring places, or, which is even worse, indulge in an elaborate whisper, as disturbing to those within earshot—and a whisper has remarkable carrying power—as Mrs. Nickleby's exasperating precautions in the sick-room. You could find some excuse for them if the conversation had some bearing, however remote, upon the music, but if a word or two catch your ear, it will probably have reference to Lady Blanque's diamonds, or Maud's engagement, or some other equally fascinating but remote topic. Not that these pretty prattlers are always inattentive to the music. It is only fair to acknowledge that they will sit as still as mice when a famous soprano gives intense expression to 'Home, sweet home,' or a languishing tenor warbles some sentimental ditty. These, be it noted, are just the occasions when the musician feels at liberty to relax his attention, though it is to be hoped he will not retaliate by making audible demonstrations of his indifference.

In regard to applause, these people are not as a rule conspicuously demonstrative. The men are perhaps too bored, and doubtful whether it may be considered 'bad form'; the ladies, I suppose, don't care to run any risk of spoiling their gloves. But sometimes their enthusiasm is aroused, as, for instance, when a tenor finishes an air with a top note, which the composer somehow neglected to put into his score, and then they will even drown the instrumental ritornel with which the composer foolishly burdened it. This trick of premature applause is the cause of another grievance I cherish. Applause, even in the right place, is apt to be rather troublesome and distracting. It is well that an audience should have some safety-valve for pent-up enthusiasm, and that the performer should have the stimulus of a little encouragement; but to one who is really impressed by noble music, and not merely astounded by brilliant feats of execution, the volley of hand-clappings that is begun the instant a performance is over, and sometimes sooner, comes like a rude awakening from a dream of pure enjoyment. This is one reason why the Three Choirs Festivals have an unique charm of their own, for in the Cathedral one can listen without disturbance or interruption.

If only the people who go to concerts went to hear the music, I make little doubt but that the methods of Bayreuth would, by common consent, be largely imitated in our concert-rooms, for they are all devised with a view to concentrating attention upon the performance. Perfect quiet so long as a composition is in progress, and an auditorium sufficiently darkened to prevent one's being distracted by the appearance and movements of one's neighbours; these are attained at Bayreuth, and in many other theatres where Bayreuth is being more or less sincerely flattered by imitation. Of course, the ideal to attain would be a carefully-selected audience of none but sympathetic souls. This would be even better than to emulate the mad king, and be a solitary listener, for however enthralling the music, the dark, empty theatre would have a depressing effect on most minds. An alternative that has sometimes occurred to me would be to copy the type of prison chapel, where, by means of a series of hutches, like the cells of a honeycomb, each prisoner can witness the whole service without obtaining a view of his fellow-prisoners. The associations would not be agreeable, I admit, but such a plan would for me have the advantage of making invisible the rest of the audience. And, as I must confess I find more annoyance than gratification in seeing my fellow-man—and woman—on these occasions, I should count the advantages as far outnumbering the disadvantages.

In most well-regulated concert-rooms, the late-comer is combated by the simple means of excluding him during the first piece in the programme. Mr. George Alexander has ventured to carry out the principle to the extent of closing the doors during the whole of the first act of a drama, which seems rather drastic, though absolutely right in principle. 'Another way,' as Mrs. Beeton would put it, is suggested by the advertisement put forth of a recent melodrama, calling attention to the fact that, as the prologue required a darkened stage, the auditorium would be thrown into complete obscurity. The late-comer attempting to find his place under these conditions would probably miss his way, bark his shins, and be greeted with a series of muttered expletives from the people he was inconveniencing, such as would give him a very wholesome lesson, and possibly make him see the error of his ways. Accident will, of course, occasionally mar the plans of the most punctual man, but in the majority of cases it is a constitutional habit of mind that makes people habitually late. Such need a gentle stimulus, and I for one should welcome any method of affording it.

Herbert Thompson.

SAMUEL WESLEY

(1766—1837).

Nearly two hundred years ago—the exact date is December 18, 1707—there was born at Epworth Rectory, Lincolnshire, a boy who received the name of Charles. He was the youngest son and eighteenth child of Samuel Wesley, rector of Epworth, and Susanna his wife; but Charles was not the last of their numerous offspring, as a girl, the nineteenth and last child, was subsequently born. John Wesley, four years older than Charles, is known the world over as the founder of 'The Society of the People called Methodists,' but better known as 'Wesleyan Methodists.' Charles, the writer of some 6,500 hymns, is honoured in all the churches as the author of such favourite lines as 'Jesu, lover of my soul,' 'Hark! the herald angels sing,' and many other sacred songs. Charles, educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, was an ordained clergyman of the Church of England, but an indefatigable lieutenant throughout his life to his brother John in his propaganda of Methodism. Charles married, in 1749, Sarah Gwynne, the possessor of a fine voice which she used in leading the singing at her husband's religious meetings. Eight children were born to them, but only three survived the period of infancy—Charles, Samuel and Sarah. Charles, eight years the senior of the two brothers, showed as a child remarkable musical ability; but, as in many similar cases, the early promise of his tender years was not fulfilled. Samuel, the second surviving son of the great hymn-writer, and a nephew of the founder of Wesleyan Methodism, forms the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

Samuel Wesley, named after his grandfather, was born at Bristol, February 24, 1766. He gave evidence, even in his earliest years, of a highly gifted musical organization, though not in such a marked degree as his brother Charles. Time, however, reversed the balance in favour of Sammy, who became the bright particular star, musically speaking, in the Wesley family. In a beautifully written and exceedingly interesting document in the hand of Charles Wesley, the poet-father thus quaintly records, with pardonable parental pride, the remarkable achievements of his genius-son:—

The seeds of harmony did not spring up in him quite so early as in his brother, for he was three years old before he aimed at a tune. His first were, 'God save great George our King,' Fischer's Minuet, and such like, mostly picked up from the street organs. He did not put a true bass to them till he had learned his notes.

While his brother was playing he used to stand by with his childish fiddle, scraping and beating time. One observing him asked me, 'And what shall this boy do?' I answered, 'Mend his brother's pens.' He did not resent the affront as deeply as Marcello; so it was not indignation which made him a musician.

Mr. Arnold was the first who, hearing him at the harpsichord, said, 'I set down Sam for one of my family.' But we did not much regard him coming after Charles. The first thing which drew our attention was the great delight he took in hearing his brother play. Whenever Mr. Kelway came to teach him, Sam constantly attended, and accompanied Charles on the chair. Undaunted by Mr. Kelway's frown, he went on; and when he did not see the harpsichord he crossed his hands on the chair as the other on the instrument without ever missing a time.

He was so excessively fond of Scarlatti, that if Charles ever began playing his lesson before Sam was called, he would cry and roar as if he had been beaten. Mr. Madan, his godfather, finding him one day so belabouring the chair, told him he should have a better instrument by-and-bye.

As his brother Charles employed the evenings in Handel's Oratorios, Sam was always at his elbow, listening and joining with his voice. Nay, he would sometimes presume to find fault with his playing, when we thought he could know nothing of the matter.

He was between four and five years old when he got hold of the Oratorio of 'Samson'; and by that alone taught himself to read words; soon after he taught himself to write. From this time he sprung up like a mushroom; and when turned of five could read perfectly well; and had all the airs, recitatives, and choruses of 'Samson' and the 'Messiah,' both words and notes, by heart.

Whenever he heard his brother begin to play he would tell us whose music it was (whether Handel, Corelli, Scarlatti, or any other), and what part of what lesson, sonata, or overture.

Before he could write he composed much music. His custom was to lay the words of an oratorio before him and sing them all over. Thus he set them (extempore for the most part), 'Ruth,' 'Gideon,' 'Manasses,' and the 'Death of Abel.' We observed, when he repeated the same words, it was always to the same tunes. The airs of 'Ruth,' in particular, he made before he was six years old, laid them up in his memory till he was eight, and then wrote them down.

I have seen him open his Prayer Book and sing the Te Deum, or an anthem from some Psalm, to his own music, accompanying it with the harpsichord. This he often did, after he had learned to play by note, which Mr. Williams, a young organist of Bristol, taught him between six and seven.

How and when he learned counterpoint I can hardly tell, but without being ever taught it he soon wrote in parts.

He was full eight years old when Dr. Boyce came to see us, and accosted me with, 'Sir, I hear you have got an English Mozart in your house. Young Linley tells me wonderful things of him.' I called Sam to answer for himself. He had by this time scrawled down his oratorio of 'Ruth.' The doctor looked over it very carefully, and seemed highly pleased with the performance. Some of his words were, 'These airs are some of the prettiest I have seen. This boy writes by nature as true a bass as I can by rule and study. There is no man in England has two such sons.' He bade us let him run on ad libitum, without any check of rules or masters.

After this, whenever the Doctor visited us, Sam ran to him with his song, sonata, or anthem; and the Doctor examined them with astonishing patience and delight.

As soon as Sam had quite finished his oratorio he sent it as a present to the Doctor, who immediately honoured him with the following note:—

> 'Dr. Boyce's compliments, and thanks his very ingenious brother composer, Mr. Samuel Wesley; and is very much pleased and obliged by the possession of the oratorio of 'Ruth,' which he shall preserve with the utmost care, as the most curious product of his musical library.'

For the year that Sam continued under Mr. Williams it was hard to say which was the master and which was the scholar. Sam chose what music he would learn, and often broke out into extemporary playing, his master wisely letting him do as he pleased.

During this time he taught himself the violin. A soldier assisted him about six weeks, and some time after Mr. Kingsbury gave him twenty lessons. His favourite instrument was the organ.

He spent a month at Bath while we were in Wales, served the Abbey on Sundays, gave them several voluntaries, and played the first fiddle in many private concerts.

He returned with us to London greatly improved in his playing. There I allowed him a month for learning all Handel's Overtures. He played them over to me in three days. Handel's Concertos he learned with equal ease, and some of his lessons, and Scarlatti's. Like Charles, he mastered the hardest music without any pains or difficulty.

The autograph manuscript of the eight-year-old young gentleman's oratorio of 'Ruth' is now in the Library of the British Museum (Add. MS. 34,997). It bears the following endorsement in the handwriting of Charles Wesley, the child-composer's father :—

> This Oratorio was composed by Samuel Wesley when eight years of age, never having been taught music or composition, and many of ye airs completed when only six years old.

The child must have worked rapidly, as the first folio is dated 'Sept. 8, 1774,' and 'the whole finish'd, Oct. 26th, 1774.'

The Hon. Daines Barrington, in his Miscellanies, 1781, p. 291, gives a full account of the remarkable attainments of the two Wesley boys. Two extracts relating to Sammy may serve as specimens of Daines Barrington's observations :—

> He was able to sing at sight from the time of his first knowing his notes. The delicacy of his ear was likewise very remarkable, of which I shall give an instance or two. Having been at Bach's Concert (John Christian Bach, Queen Charlotte's favourite master) he was much satisfied both with the composition and performers, but said: 'The musical pieces were ill-arranged, as four were played successively which were all in the same key!'
> He was desired to compose a March for the regiments of Guards, which he did, to the approbation of all that heard it. As I thought the boy would like to hear the March performed, I carried him to the parade at the proper time, when it had the honour of beginning the Military Concert. The piece being finished I asked him whether it was executed to his satisfaction, to which he replied: 'By no means.' I then immediately introduced him to the band, which consisted of very tall and stout musicians, that he might set them right. On this Sam said to them, 'You have not done justice to my composition'; to which they answered the urchin with astonishment and contempt, 'your composition?' Sam replied with serenity, 'Yes, my composition,' which I confirmed. Then they stared, and severally made their excuses by protesting they had copied accurately from the manuscript which had been put into their hands. This he most readily allowed to the hautboys and bassoons, but said that it was the French horns that were in fault; on their making the same defence, he insisted on the original score being produced, and, showing them their mistake, ordered the March to be played again, which they submitted to with as much deference as they would have shown to Handel.

Master Sammy became a harpsichord pupil of David Williams, organist of St. James's Church, Bath, where at the age of seven the boy played a psalm-tune at one of the services. He studied the violin under Bean, Kingsbury, and the celebrated Wilhelm Cramer. Like many of the most successful musicians, he was, however, largely self-taught. Throughout the whole of his life he showed a marked predilection for the organ. The general education of the children was carefully superintended by their father, who taught them Latin, Greek, and Hebrew; in the two former languages the children were said to have been really proficient.

A great change came into the family life upon their removal to London in 1770. A certain Mrs. Grumley had presented Charles Wesley with the unexpired lease (twenty years) of her house, No. 1, Chesterfield (now Great Chesterfield) Street, Marylebone. The parish rate-book of 1770 gives the name of the householder as 'Charles Westley,' and the rateable value of the house as £30. Those were halcyon days in the matter of parish rates in London—one shilling in the pound! The Wesley associations with Chesterfield Street are commemorated in an intersecting thoroughfare re-named in recent years 'Wesley Street.' In Samuel Wesley's youth, north of the Marylebone Road (then called New Road) was open country with the rural felicity of farms and fields.

No. 1, Chesterfield Street was not only large and well furnished, but it contained a spacious music room, which mirabile dictu contained two organs! It was in this room that the young Wesleys gave during eight or nine years, from 1779, a series of subscription concerts. A manuscript book in the handwriting of Charles Wesley, the father, giving full particulars of these homely music-makings was fortunately rescued from an old bookstall in London about ten years ago; it is now in the possession of the Wesley family.

Seven fortnightly concerts were given every season, beginning about the end of January, the subscription being three guineas. The number of subscribers rapidly increased from twenty-four in the first season (1779) to thirty-eight in the second, and to forty-eight (an historic number) in the third. A record was kept of the attendance of all the subscribers, who included such persons of 'quality' as bishops, peers and peeresses, and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress. Moreover, the book contains the programmes of several of the concerts. Here is a specimen one, given on Thursday, March 6, 1783:—

Part I.

Overture .. .. Charles Wesley.
Song (Handel) 'Return, O God of hosts' Battishil.
Concerto .. .. .. Geminiani-Corelli.
Organ Voluntary .. .. .. Samuel Wesley.
Trio, Violin, Violoncello, and Pentachord, composed by Hugh Reinagle, performed by Hugh and Alexander Reinagle and Samuel Wesley.

Part II.

Organ Voluntary .. .. .. Charles Wesley.
Violin Solo .. .. .. Samuel Wesley.
Song, 'The soldier tired' (Arne) .. Battishil.
Duet for two Organs, 'Dead March.'
Overture, 'Atalanta.'

The performers on this occasion and the fees paid to them were:—

Singer—Battishil.

Some of these names are very interesting. Battishil (spelt with one 'l'), the composer of the beautiful anthem 'Call to remembrance,' appeared as a vocalist. 'His singing,' recorded Samuel Wesley many years later, 'was very engaging, energetic, and commanding; and it was a high treat to hear him take part in a duet of Handel's, or a canzonet of Travers's, or sing any one of Purcell's songs or anthems.' Alex. Reinagle was the father of the composer of the familiar hymn-tune 'St. Peter,' and Atwood (with one 't') bore the same paternal relation to 'dear old Attwood,' the revered organist of St. Paul's Cathedral. Reinagle and Attwood seem to have played 'for love.'

Refreshments formed a not inconsiderable feature of these fortnightly functions. Charles Wesley's manuscript book gives us some interesting information in regard to the creature-comfort part of the proceedings. Here is a list of expenses for the first concert in 1782:—

Sugar		3	2
Tea-pot			8
Lemons		1	6
Cakes		6	6
Maid		2	0
Mats		3	6

Candles		14	6
Wine		3	10
Porter		2	8
Ojet*		3	0
Tea		12	6
	£3	19	6

* In the MS. this beverage is sometimes written 'Ojitt' and once 'orgeat.' The latter is more correct. According to Hunter's 'Encyclopædic Dictionary' it is thus defined: 'Orgeat (ge as zh). Fr. from orge = barley. A liquor of syrup extracted from barley and sweet almonds, and used as a flavour for beverages and edibles, or medicinally as a mild demulcent.'

The item of a guinea to Sally may have been in the nature of a garment expenditure, as there is a reference elsewhere to a new dress for the sister of the youthful concert-givers. Tea was an expensive luxury in those days, and no further expenditure under that head appears until the fourth concert; on the other hand, teapots were evidently cheap.

In the seventh season thirty-four subscriptions brought in the sum of £105; the expenditure account stands thus:—

	£	s.	d.
Before it (i.e., the season)	6	13	6
Performers	20	2	6
Their suppers	3	7	0
Rehearsals	0	9	0
The Company (Refreshments) .. .	10	4	0
	£40	16	0
Expenses of concerts	42	16	0
Family	11	9	6
Housekeeping	50	14	6

This is not the sort of book-keeping that would satisfy a chartered accountant seated in his auditorium, as there is a discrepancy of £2 between the details of the expenditure account and the summary. However, this by no means detracts from the interest of the concerts given by Samuel Wesley, in conjunction with his brother Charles, during the youthful period of his career.

A curious phase in the life of Samuel Wesley began in about the year 1784, at the impressionable age of eighteen. Notwithstanding his upbringing in a somewhat strict school of theology, the young man, to the grief and consternation of his father and uncle, joined the Roman Catholic Church. The Duchess of Norfolk was requested, out of respect to the Rev. Charles Wesley, 'as a gentleman and scholar,' to communicate the 'going over' to the father of the youth. He received her in his full canonicals, and subsequently wrote some 'verses on his son Samuel on being made acquainted he had embraced the Roman Catholic Religion.' With all the zeal of a proselyte Samuel Wesley wrote much music to Latin words, including a Mass bearing the following dedication:—

hæc missa humilitate maximâ dicatur (primitiæ ecclesiæ) suo indignissimo filio et obsequentissimo servo.

Sept. 1, 1784. Samuel Wesley.

The Latin is shaky, but it evidently means that the Mass was the first-fruits of his conversion. The original manuscript of this Mass is now in the British Museum (Add. MS. 35,000). The last folio is dated 'May 22, 1784.' A copy of the Mass was sent to Pope Pius VI., to whom the work was inscribed. The Pope was so much gratified at its receipt that he sent a letter of acknowledgment to Dr. Talbot, the titular Bishop of the London diocese. The following is a translation from the original Latin of the Pope's letter:—

We send thee, venerable Brother, our Greeting and apostolical Benediction. We have received with great Pleasure a Book neatly and elegantly bound, presented by your Fraternity in the Name of Samuel Wesley: but more gratifying was the Intelligence contained in your Letter, which gave us to understand that the Sacred Harmonies which dignify the Work were composed with a Mind returning Thanks to a benevolent God for the Author's Entrance into the Catholic Faith, from which his Ancestors were excluded. We by no Means discountenance the Study of Church Musick, since, through the Allurements of the Senses, a weak Mind may be elevated into Piety; but what most pleases us and excites our greater Affection for the young man, is his skill in religious Controversy, in which you say, he excels, and the very good Hopes you yourself entertain of him. You will make known to him in our Name, and in paternal Language, the Gratitude we feel for his Gift, and if at any Time Occasion shall offer, we will prove it by Deed. We wish to acquaint your Fraternity (of well-approved Virtue) that we are by no Means deficient in the Desire of cherishing that Solicitude which you feel for the Salvation of the Flock intrusted to your Care. With Respect to the Anglo-Roman College, which ranks highly in our Affection, you will confer with the Roman Cardinal Antonelli, who is Superintendent of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith. Finally, accept the surest Pledge of our Love, our apostolical Benediction, which we impart to thee and all thy People with the innermos Affection of our Heart.

Given at Rome A.D. 1785, in the eleventh year of our Pontificate.

SAMUEL WESLEY, AGED 11.
(From an oil painting by John Russell, R.A.)

It is probable that Wesley's religious convictions were not very deep rooted. He is said to have repudiated in the later years of his life the Roman Catholicism of his youth, and to have returned to, and died in, the 'faith of his father.' He characteristically said: 'The crackers of the Vatican are no longer taken for the thunderbolts of heaven: for excommunication I care not three straws.'

The creative output of Wesley's youth was quite remarkable. Not all his compositions are dated; but among those that are so inscribed we find five violin concertos (two in one year), four symphonies (two composed in the same year as the Mass), two overtures and a quartet—all composed before he was twenty years of age. To a song, entitled 'The world, my dear Mira, is full of deceit,' Wesley affixes the following note: 'This song was composed in 1784 at the desire of the Duchess of Norfolk. I should not otherwise have set words so full of trite and worn-out expressions, and so totally destitute of poetical elegance.' To another song he appended an equally sensible remark: 'It is manifest from the effect of the first, fourth, and fifth bars in this last line of the composition, that by conforming to the rule of avoiding two eighths in succession, a good melody both in the bass and treble would have been totally destroyed—no further apology is therefore necessary for having broken it. S. Wesley.'

In the year 1787, at the age of twenty-one, Wesley was passing along Snow Hill one evening when he fell into a deep excavation. This accident was of so serious a nature that its consequences affected his brain more or less for the remainder of his life. He refused to undergo the operation of trepanning, and for the next seven years suffered great despondency and nervous irritability. His favourite occupation of music had to be relinquished; and there is little doubt that the effects of this accident were largely responsible for that eccentricity and erratic behaviour which stamped Samuel Wesley as one of the most original and remarkable men of his time.

We may now pass on to the year 1800, a memorable one, not only in the life of Wesley but in the history of the art in this country. About that time, Samuel Wesley began his zealous propaganda of the music of John Sebastian Bach in England. The opposition thereto of the Handelians only served to fire him with fresh zeal. He simply boiled over with enthusiasm in the cause of his idol. For instance, here are some of the titles he bestowed upon the composer of 'the 48':—

A Cyclopædia of Harmony.
The Musical Leviathan.
The Jupiter of Harmonists.
Sacred Musician.
Great Musical High Priest.
Grand Hero.
Demi-God.

But he casts aside all these 'weak epithets,' as he is pleased to call them, in favour of

THE MAN.

There we may leave John Sebastian and Samuel, his great disciple, till next month.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH:
PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

By Professor Prout.

No. 8.—Recit.—'Behold a virgin shall conceive.' The treatment of the recitativo secco in this and following numbers has been already spoken of.

No. 9.—Air and Chorus.—'O Thou that tellest.' In Mozart's score this number furnishes one of the worst examples in the oratorio of the meaningless alternation of p and f of which many others are to be found in the course of the work. In the opening symphony a p is twice indicated without the least justification either in the character of the music or in Handel's score. At bar 18 an f is marked where Handel expressly writes piano; in several other places are seen nuances which are without any authority; these I have had no hesitation in removing. At bars 28 and 29 Handel wrote—the ♯ to the G being put under the note, as the composer had not allowed himself room to put it before it. Walsh omits the ♯ to G, and Mozart, naturally enough, follows him, but takes the trouble to mark the ♮ before G, the music at the time being in the key of A. But he further changes the last crotchet (E) to—for which he has not the authority of Walsh. I have, of course, restored Handel's original reading. In other respects this number contains but few alterations. In two places (bars 17, 18, and bars 93 to 97) I have added a few notes for the wind, to fill up the harmony which Mozart had left very thin; and at bars 85 to 87 I have removed some superfluous and rather obtrusive additions. In the chorus there were a few corrections to make. At bar 114 Mozart and, after him, Franz give the tenor thus:—

The fifth quaver should be B, not A, and is correct in Walsh's score. Novello's edition of the full score has it wrong; but it is right in both their folio and octavo editions of the vocal score. In bars 123 and 124 there are two mistakes in the printed full scores. Handel wrote the violin parts thus:—

In Walsh's score the first of these two bars is correctly given, but in the second, C is given instead of E as the fifth quaver in the first violin. Mozart (or perhaps Hiller) has changed the second group of semiquavers in the first bar (introducing a sequential repetition of the preceding) to—regardless of the fact that this makes bad consecutive fifths with the first violin. In the second bar Mozart doubtless noticed the unisons made by Walsh's A, C between the first and second violins, and, not having the autograph to refer to, corrected it conjecturally by altering the notes to C, E. These two readings are retained in all the published editions of the score. There is no excuse for Franz, who has left the passage uncorrected, though, having the facsimile of the score to refer to, he could easily have restored the true reading. The startling consecutive octaves between soprano and bass in bar 121 are so distinctly written in Handel's autograph that I have not felt justified in altering them. My only addition to the score of this number consists of a fully written out organ part; I have also restored Handel's chord of the sixth in several places where Mozart had changed it to a $\frac{4}{3}$.

No. 10.—Recit.—'For behold, darkness shall cover the earth.' At the fifth quaver of bar 9 Walsh places a sharp before E in the viola, and all later editors have followed him. Handel does not introduce the key of F sharp minor until the first quaver of the following bar.

No. 11.—Air.—'The people that walked in darkness.' Of the alternative versions of this number—with and without Mozart's chromatic harmonies—I have already spoken. Conductors who wish to give the movement with Handel's unison effects can do so by directing the wind players to omit the small notes in their parts. The harmonies for the wind are, however, retained in the cadences, as there can be no doubt that Handel here filled them up on the harpsichord.

No. 12.—Chorus.—'For unto us.' Here I have added flutes, clarinets, trombones, and organ to Mozart's score; I have also added some notes for the drums in the last part of the chorus. Mozart has here used them very sparingly. He has them here in C, G; the tuning of the drums in G, D was very infrequent in his time, and is very seldom met with in his scores. As it is now very common, I have directed the instruments to be tuned in this way, which furnishes drum notes for many additional chords. Mozart has left a considerable part of this chorus with no accompaniment except the bass. As in many similar passages, I have filled up the harmony on the wind.

At bar 18 the figure of quavers in the bass is written by Handel—

Every edition that I have seen, whether of the full or vocal score, has D instead of E for the second quaver. The mistake, as usual, is Walsh's in the first instance, and has been repeated by all succeeding editors. At bar 82 is a passage, the reading of which is more doubtful. The first note of the alto is given in most editions as F; Mozart and, after him, Franz have A—musically a decidedly preferable reading, as the F gives a very bad doubled leading note. A reference to the autograph leaves the question undecided; for here we find both notes, and it is difficult to say with certainty which of the two Handel intended to cancel. I have taken A, not only because the musical effect is distinctly better, but because the second violins, which in this passage are doubling the alto, either in the unison or octave, have A, and not F. The question cannot be decided by musical considerations alone; for Handel is often very careless as to doubling a leading note.

No. 13.—Pastoral Symphony.—This movement, which in the autograph and in Walsh's score bears simply the title 'Pifa,' is scored by Handel for three violins, viola, and basses; the third violin doubles the first and the viola doubles the second—both in the octave below. As the division of the violins into three parts would involve practical difficulties, I have adopted Mozart's arrangement, and have divided the violas. But, inasmuch as Handel evidently intended the music to be very soft (as shown by his senza Rip. in the Dublin score), I have taken out all Mozart's additional wind parts, and given the piece, as Handel wrote it, for a few strings only, strengthening the basses by the soft pedal notes of the organ. With regard to the text of this number, it is rather curious, considering how frequently we find shakes added for which there is no warrant, that here, while taking out several which are not in the autograph, I have also had to insert some which Handel wrote, but which have been omitted in the printed copies. In the first bar of his edition Mozart has unwarrantably altered Handel's harmony from——an incorrect reading, in which, though it makes consecutive fifths with the bass, he has been followed by Mozart and most other editors. Here again Franz has not taken the trouble to verify the passage by referring to the facsimile, in which E, as the sixth quaver of the bar, is unmistakable.

I have restored the original text. In bar 9 Walsh gives in the first violin the following:—

As is generally known, this symphony at first contained only eleven bars; the second part is an afterthought, and was written on a separate slip of paper. The bass of bar 11 ended with a minim, which Handel, when he made the new continuation, changed into the scale progression from C up to the G of the next bar. But, with his usual economy of paper, he had not left himself sufficient room to write his D, E, F clearly, and they are so squeezed in as to be difficult to decipher. Over (and not before) the F Handel has placed a sharp, which is so small that it may be very readily overlooked; it is nevertheless quite plain, if the page be examined through a magnifying glass. It is hardly surprising that it should have been overlooked by all editors; even Smith appears not to have always noticed it, as it is not in the Dublin score, though it is in Smith's score belonging to Mr. Otto Goldschmidt. I have felt no hesitation in introducing it, as it leads naturally into the dominant key.

Nos. 14 to 16.—Recit.—The only thing to note here is that No. 16, 'And suddenly,' is marked Allegro in the autograph; nearly all the editions have Andante, or Andante con moto.

No. 17.—Chorus.—'Glory to God.' At the beginning of this chorus Handel has written in the autograph against the trumpet parts 'da lontano e un poco piano'—that is, 'from a distance, and rather soft.' It is not quite clear whether he means this to refer only to the trumpets, or to the whole chorus and orchestra; and the Dublin score throws no light on the point, as Smith has not copied the indication. From the fact that the gradual decrease in force in the final symphony seems evidently intended to depict the departure of the heavenly host, I am inclined to believe that the commencement of the chorus is similarly designed to paint their arrival. I have therefore marked all the parts mp at the beginning, and reserved the first forte for bar 10, where Handel has himself marked it. I have also restored Handel's brilliant trumpet parts, which Mozart has either cut out altogether or so far altered as to destroy their character, and have merely changed a few difficult and uncertain high notes. I have also deleted some superfluous additions in the wind at bars 5 to 9, 14 to 17, and 31 to 33.

No. 18.—Air.—'Rejoice greatly.' The autograph at Buckingham Palace contains only the earlier, and far inferior, version of this air in $\frac{12}{8}$ time; the latter setting is found in the Dublin score, in which the bass part is in the handwriting of Smith, the voice and violin parts being added by Handel. This is one of the least satisfactory numbers of Mozart's score, a considerable part of the movement being left in two-part harmony only; I have therefore felt it necessary to modify a great deal of the accompaniment, and, in fact, virtually to re-score most of the song. There are a few mistakes to be noted in the text. At bar 63 all editions, copying Walsh, give the bar thus:— and an examination of the passage proves clearly that this was what he meant. In the earlier version the melody stands thus:—

When the composer rewrote the movement he transposed the last notes an octave higher; but his harmony shows that he evidently looked on the A as a passing note, though the following G is now raised an octave. The harmonic progression intended is evidently that which I have given in the clarinet and bassoon parts. In bar 68 Handel writes in the voice part—as wrongly given by Mozart and Franz, who in this case cannot plead the excuse of being misled by Walsh, for the latter gives the passage correctly. At bar 76 the last two notes in the voice should be Every edition that I have examined, with the solitary exception of that by Sir Henry Bishop, gives Here, as usual, Walsh is the first offender.

A curious and interesting variation of text is seen at bars 34 and 35 of this air. In Handel's autograph we find—and the same reading is given in Smith's transposed copy of the air in G, in the MS. volume belonging to Dr. Cummings, of which I have already spoken. The version now always sung—is in Walsh's, and all subsequent editions that I have seen; and as it is much smoother than the curious syncopated passage written by Handel, I have retained it in the text, but have printed the composer's original setting above it in small notes, both in the full and the vocal score.

No. 19.—Recit.—'Then shall the eyes of the blind'; No. 20.—Air.—'He shall feed his flock.' Handel originally wrote this air throughout for soprano, in B flat. In the Dublin score the number, which is in Smith's handwriting, is found also in the form in which it is now almost invariably sung—the first part being transposed to F, and given to a contralto voice. I have followed this later version. Mozart has here added nothing to Handel's score, which, indeed, requires no addition, being quite complete as it stands; but he marked the violin and viola parts con sordini. This direction I have cancelled, for Handel was perfectly acquainted with the employment of the mutes, which are found (to name only two examples) in 'Partenope' and 'Alexander Balus,' and if he had wished for them here, would have indicated them.

At two places in this air (bars 40 and 48) the bass is marked by Mozart (or Hiller) to be played by the violoncelli only. I am convinced that this was not Handel's intention, for two or three reasons. The violoncelli are indicated in Mozart's score wherever the bass is written in the tenor clef. But the use of the C clef was far more common in Handel's time than at the present day; and he frequently writes a few notes of the bass part in the tenor clef to save leger lines. This, of course, is in itself no argument here; but a strong one is found in the irregular way in which the tenor clef is introduced. In Handel's autograph the whole song is in B flat, the second part ('Come unto Him') being a repetition of the first. In the former, Handel writes the bass from bar 19, thus:—

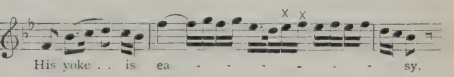
but on the repetition of the passage (bar 40) he writes—

Now, in the first place, if Handel had intended the passages in the tenor clef for the violoncelli alone, he would certainly not have done so inartistic a thing as to make his double-basses stop after an unaccented quaver; secondly, as the second passage is an exact repetition of the first, he would not have introduced the violoncelli alone a bar earlier than before. Besides this, when Handel wants the violoncelli without the double-basses it is his custom to write 'Vcelli' in the score. The autograph shows this clearly; it is seen in 'Comfort ye' (bar 14), 'Ev'ry valley' (bar 54), 'And lo! the angel' (bar 1), and in other places also. Lastly, in the transposed version of the first part the tenor clef is not used at all in the bass staff. For all these reasons I have had no hesitation whatever in cancelling the indication, and, to prevent any doubt, I have used the bass clef only throughout the air. In this number Handel has forgotten to mark senza Rip. in the Dublin score; as there can be hardly a doubt as to his intentions, I have added the words in brackets.

Handel's treatment of the words in this air is awkward, because of the strong accent thrown upon the 'shall' and 'unto.' Various suggestions have been made for improving the setting of the opening subject; perhaps the best, as it certainly is the simplest, is to tie the first note of the opening phrase over the following bar, thus:—

and—

No. 21.—Chorus.—'His yoke is easy.' The revision of this number has been a task of more than usual difficulty. In the first place, Handel has figured his bass much more fully than is his custom; and Mozart's accompaniments are not in all cases in accordance with the composer's indications. I have therefore thought it advisable entirely to re-write the wind parts. Much trouble was also caused by the fact that the figure of the opening subject is incorrectly given in most of the passages in which it occurs. Handel wrote—



Every edition that I have examined follows Walsh, and gives—the subsequent appearances of the subject being mostly wrong, but occasionally in the latter part of the chorus right, as if by accident. Handel consistently preserves the same form, with only one dotted semiquaver throughout, except in two passages in the bass (bars 25, 26, and 32), in which he has written even semiquavers. But, on collating the movement with the Italian Duet 'Quel fior che all' alba ride,' from which it was adapted (German Handel Society, Part xxxii., pp. 116 to 118), I find that the corresponding passage (p. 117, bars 9 to 11) has the figure  in every case. I have therefore no doubt that Handel's omission of the dot after the first semiquaver was accidental, in the hurry of writing, and I have consequently made the figure here correspond to that which Handel wrote on every other appearance of the subject. I have given the accompaniment in the opening of this chorus, as Handel himself did, to the organ, adding small notes in the wind, as in Nos. 4 and 7. The unusually large number of pianos and fortes are taken from the autograph.

THE PRIME MINISTER AS A MUSICIAN.

That Politics be strictly avoided in a journal devoted to music is a salutary rule that should never be broken. But that is no reason why reference should not be made to the artistic personality of a great statesman to whatever party he belongs, especially if he be the Prime Minister of this country. We have little hesitation in saying that the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, M.P., the newly-appointed head of the Government, is the first musical Premier of Great Britain. Sufficient for our purpose and satisfaction that he has a real love, nay, an enthusiasm, for music, and takes a very practical interest in the art and its progress. While he would not claim to be an executant, he has some knowledge of harmony. At the pianoforte he can pick out an air or add a bass to a melody. If he shows, to use his own words, 'a loving devotion' to Handel, he greatly admires Bach, and, with limitations, he evidently likes Wagner, as, notwithstanding his strong dislike of foreign travel, he has been more than once to Bayreuth, and he is well known to Madame Wagner. He has been a subscriber to the Richter Concerts from their commencement, but he deplores the small chances he now has of attending the concert-room.

It is not surprising to learn that Mr. Balfour has a great admiration for Sir Hubert Parry, who was his contemporary at Eton. He organized, at his house in Carlton Gardens, a concert, of which the programme consisted entirely of Sir Hubert's compositions. Through the kindness of Mr. Edward Dannreuther we are enabled to give the programme of this interesting music-making.

PIANOFORTE: MR. C. H. H PARRY, MR. DANNREUTHER.

As we have already stated, Mr. Balfour is a great Handelian, and never loses a chance of hearing a lesser-known work of that master. About thirty years ago he contributed a not inconsiderable sum towards a performance in London of 'Belshazzar.' On one occasion he made a special journey from Whittingehame to Glasgow, in order to attend a performance of 'Athaliah,' and he possesses a fine collection of Handel's works. As one of the committee of the Handel Society during the first ten years (from 1882) of its existence, he took much interest in its operations. The early rehearsals of the Society (then under the conductorship of Mr. F. A. W. Docker) were held at his house in Carlton Gardens, and he suggested the revival of some of the practically unknown oratorios concerning which he is so enthusiastic.

The Prime Minister contributed a very thoughtful and carefully reasoned article on Handel to the Edinburgh Review of January, 1887, which subsequently reappeared in a volume of essays. The article was, however, privately reprinted, of which a copy, kindly sent by the author, and containing his corrections, lies before us. In an interesting passage following a comparison between Handel and Bach, the Premier says:—

'Side by side the two great names will live, as marking, in different ways, but with equal lustre, the culminating point of one phase of musical development. The history of art, and assuredly the history of musical art, does not repeat itself. As one kind of tree succeeds another with inevitable sequence in the virgin forests of America, so has each generation its peculiar artistic growth, which after-ages may admire, but which they cannot reproduce without a conscious and but half-effectual effort of imitation. The years that have elapsed since "Israel," the "Messiah," and the "Mass in B" were first given to the world have been fruitful in musical revolutions, which make it impossible that we should ever see anything like them again. Handel and Bach themselves, if they returned to earth, neither could nor would produce works in any way resembling, possibly none equalling, their former masterpieces. Yet though (as musical chronology goes) these masterpieces are old, they are not yet antiquated. In some respects we are probably more capable of appreciating them than the audiences for whom they were in the first instance written, and Time, which has raised them up no rivals in their own kind, has not as yet materially dulled their charm.'

The concluding words of this interesting essay by the leading statesman of this country on one of the greatest composers are these:—

'That for us "Israel" and the "Messiah" are still 'immortal,' because they live in our affections, not because they lie honourably embalmed in the dusty recesses of our museums.'

Occasional Notes.

August is the great holiday month of the year, and not a few musicians will be forsaking the scene of their daily round and common task in order to obtain change and rest, though it is quite possible that the waiters may get all the change and the hotel-keepers the rest. With all the facilities and cheapness of present-day travel compared with former times, few will experience such an eventful holiday as that enjoyed by Sir George Smart three-quarters-of-a-century ago. If we turn to the Morning Post of October 8, 1825, we shall discover the following information:—

Sir George Smart, who is making the tour of Germany, has visited Weber, who is at the Baths at Ems for the recovery of his health. At Munich he dined with the veteran Winter on his natal day, who then completed his 71st year. At Baden, near Vienna, he was also kindly entertained by Beethoven, at his country house; and we are gratified to learn that this highly respectable [!] gentleman has been received by the whole of his professional brethren on the Continent with the respect and kind attention he so justly merits.

Smart had conducted (at the pianoforte, not with a baton) the first performance of the 'Choral Symphony' in England, given by the Philharmonic Society on March 21, 1825. His experience of the difficulties attending its interpretation under the then existing conditions of 'conducting' induced him to go to Vienna in order to obtain the right tempos from Beethoven himself. On September 6, Smart dined with Beethoven, and after the repast he seems to have particularly asked his host to play him the recitative passages which connect the last movements with their predecessors. Smart not only received this lesson from the great composer, but also a Canon, the autograph of which is dated 'September 16, 1825, Baden, near Vienna.' In addition to Weber and Beethoven, Sir George Smart called upon the Mendelssohns, at Berlin, and Spohr, at Cassel, during his recreative peregrinations—as we have said, truly an eventful holiday.

'Sir Smart,' as Beethoven called him, was not the only English visitor that the author of the 'Choral Symphony' received at Baden in the year 1825. The Harmonicon contains a little known but exceedingly interesting letter written by an English lady from Vienna in October of that year. The name of the writer is not given, but there seems no reason to doubt its genuineness. In reply to the note of introduction she sent to him, he wrote:—

Avec le plus grand plaisir, je recevrai une fille de——
BEETHOVEN.

For the rest it will be sufficient to let the fortunate young lady speak for herself:—

When we arrived, Beethoven had just returned home through a shower of rain, and was changing his coat. I almost began to be alarmed—after all that I had heard of his brusquerie—lest he should not receive us very cordially: when he came forth from his sanctum, with a hurried step and apparently very nervous; but he addressed us in so gentle, so courteous, so sweet a manner, and with such a truth in his sweetness, that I only know Mr. ——— with whom he can be compared; whom he much resembles, in features, person, address, and also in opinions.

Beethoven is very short, extremely thin, and sufficiently attentive to personal appearance. He observed, that ——— was very fond of Handel; that he himself also loved him; and proceeded for some time in eulogizing that great composer. I conversed with him in writing, for I found it impossible to render myself audible; and though this was a very clumsy mode of communicating, it did not much signify, as he talked on freely and willingly, and did not wait for questions, or seem to expect long replies. I ventured to express my admiration of his compositions, and, amongst others, praised his Adelaide, in terms by no means too strong for my sense of its beauties. He very modestly remarked, that the poetry was beautiful.

Beethoven speaks good French—at least by comparison with most other Germans—and conversed a little with ——— in Latin. He told us that he should have spoken English, but that his deafness had prevented his acquiring more of our language than the power of reading it. He said that he preferred English to French writers, because 'ils sont plus vrai.' Thomson is his favourite author, but his admiration of Shakspeare is very great indeed.

When we were about to retire, he desired us to stop—'Je veux vous donner un souvenir de moi.' He then went to a table in an adjoining room, and wrote two lines of music—a little fugue for the pianoforte—and presented it to me in a most amiable manner. He afterwards desired that I would spell my name to him, that he might inscribe his impromptu to me correctly. He now took my arm and led me into the room where he had written, that I might see the whole of his apartment, which was quite that of an author, but perfectly clean; and though indicating nothing like superfluity of wealth, did not shew any want of either useful furniture or neatness in arrangement. It must be recollected, however, that this is his country residence, and that the Viennese are not so costly or particular in their domestic details as we English. I led him back very gently to a room on the other side, in which was placed his grand pianoforte, presented to him by Messrs Broadwood: but he looked, I thought, melancholy at the sight of it, and said that it was very much out of order, for the country tuner was exceedingly bad. He struck some notes to convince me; nevertheless I placed on the desk the page of MS. music which he had just given to me, and he played it through quite simply; but prefaced it by three or four chords—such handfuls of notes!—that would have gone to Mr. ———'s heart. He then stopped; and I would not on any account ask for more, as I found that he played without any satisfaction to himself.

We took leave of each other in a tone of, what in France would be called, confirmed friendship; and he said, quite voluntarily, that if he came to England, he would certainly pay us a visit.

Unfortunately, Beethoven never set his foot on British soil. What a welcome we should give him now!

The death of Mr. Thomas P. Chappell—which called forth many expressions of regret to his personal worth and influence and which was referred to in our last issue—has again drawn attention to the introduction of Gounod's 'Faust' into England. We believe we are correct in stating that some forty or more years ago Mr. Thomas Chappell, the head of the well-known Bond Street firm, had submitted to him by the French publishers a work by Berlioz and the Gounod opera. Both were passed on to the late Josiah Pittman, then musical adviser to Messrs. Chappell, who said that he did not care very much for the Berlioz, but gave a favourable verdict in regard to the Gounod production. Acting on this opinion, Mr. Chappell secured the English copyright in 'Faust' for a small sum, but owing to some accident the performing rights were forfeited.

The great musical critic of the day, Mr. J. W. Davison of The Times, had by no means a favourable opinion of 'Faust.' The first note of adverse criticism may be found in the Musical World (Davison's paper), in an account of the production of the work—Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, March 19, 1859—from the special correspondent in the French capital (probably Davison himself), who wrote: 'But not only is the story of Faust hackneyed, it is, in my opinion, ill adapted to operatic purposes,' and, in the final sentence, 'I cannot argue (sic) a prosperous career for the new opera.' In a leading article (also in the Musical World), written two years later, 'J. W. D.' said: 'With regard to M. Gounod's Faust, we really cannot consider it anything more than respectable. Notwithstanding the encomiums perpetually lavished from certain quarters (even upon M. Gounod's additions to John Sebastian Bach), his compositions have yet to obtain the unanimous acceptance that was prophesied.'

It was, however, after the initial performances in England of the complete work, at Her Majesty's Theatre, during the opera season of 1863, that Mr. Davison gave full vent to his feelings in regard to 'Faust.' In one of his trenchant leaders in the Musical World he refers to the non-fulfilment of the promise to produce Verdi's opera 'La Forza del Destino.' We give the concluding paragraph as a choice specimen of Davisonesque. The article is signed 'Rippington Pipe':—

> Certainly M. Gounod is deeply indebted to Mr. Mapleson [Her Majesty's Theatre] for bringing out his opera, and Mr. Mapleson is deeply indebted to Mr. T. Chappell, the publisher, for urging him to bring it out, which otherwise he would not have done; and Mr. Gye [Covent Garden] is deeply indebted to Mr. T. Chappell for inducing Mr. Mapleson to bring it out; and the public is deeply indebted to Mr. Gye. Above all, Mr. T. Chappell is deeply indebted to the composer for having originated—without being original—music which seizes and fascinates the public so as to bring multitudinous purchasers—ready money and credit—to the grand palatial Magazin in Bond Street. Only I pity Verdi, who has been victimized, and look for the time when, with the swoop of an eagle, he will pounce upon this ger-falcon and put him to flight—to a flight that knows no return. This indeed, in a sense of poetical justice, would be the 'Force of Destiny.'

It should be added that a selection from Gounod's 'Faust' was performed at the Canterbury Music Hall, Westminster Bridge Road, three years before the initial representation at Her Majesty's Theatre, and only a year after the Paris production. The (now) veteran Mr. Charles Morton was then manager of 'The Royal Academy over the water,' and Mr. Chorley, in the Athenæum, was as enthusiastic about the music as Davison was antagonistic to it. For some details in regard to these music-hall performances of 'C. P. Gounod's opera "Faust,"' as the advertisements ran, we may refer our readers to the Musical Times of April, 1897.

Many former pupils of the late Dr. James Higgs, in addition to the larger circle of students who have derived benefit from his invaluable primer on Fugue, and our readers generally, will be glad to possess a portrait of the genial musician — a man of singular modesty, high attainment, and exceedingly kind-hearted disposition.

THE LATE DR. JAMES HIGGS.
(Photograph by Messrs. Alfred Ellis and Walery.)

The daughter of a Peer appears to have peered a little too far into the future. In the columns of The Lady's Realm, this lady misinforms us that—

> The Coronation was a wonderful sight—for those inside the Abbey, at all events. The magnificent display of jewels and orders, the richness of colour of the mass of beautiful crimson robes of the peers and peeresses, the glitter of the hundreds of coronets, and the kaleidoscope of brilliant tints worn by the many other spectators, formed a never-to-be-forgotten picture. Then the procession next day, not a little increased in impressiveness by the millions and millions in the streets, on the stands, and filling every window.

Prodigious! Prodigious! And as we all well know, neither the Coronation nor 'the procession next day' took place!

The fair scribe goes on to describe the gala-night at the opera, which shared the same cancelled fate as the Coronation ceremonies. The titled-one says:—

> The gala-night at the opera was a disappointment to many (!) no doubt, but certainly not to all (!!). Seldom have we heard a worse chorus (!!!), and even stars of song must shine less brilliantly as years go on. The unrivalled Jean has not the wonderful power he had once, and if Melba is as delicious as ever she is no better. As for Caruso he is a distinct disappointment. Gala-night can mean nothing more than fine music, a great show of diamonds, beautiful floral decorations, and a full house.

What have the Sheffield chorus to say to this? And the great Jean? It is a risky business, criticising—adversely or otherwise, yet stupidly—events that never took place.

It is, however, an old story. A remarkable instance occurred forty-five years ago. Verdi's 'La Traviata' was announced to be performed for the first time at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden,—though it was not its initial representation in England—on Thursday, May 14, 1857. The Morning Herald of the next day contained the following notice of the performance, which, however, had not taken place!:—

> The announcement of the first performance of La Traviata at the Royal Italian Opera last night attracted the most crowded audience of the season. Many causes conduced to this. . . . The Piccolominites were abundant, but the Bosioites were not few. . . . It is not surprising, therefore, that the first representation of La Traviata should have achieved one of the most remarkable successes of the season.
> Perhaps Madame Bosio never sang so admirably as she did last night. Her first air, 'Ah! fors è lui,' was sung to perfection, the last movement being as brilliant a display as we have heard for a long time. Nothing could be more exquisite than the florid passages at the end — especially the ascending scale—and Mario's expressive singing of the andante outside. . . . He almost surpassed himself in the air 'Di miei bollenti' in the second act, and in the second scene.
> The recalls for Madame Bosio and Signor Mario were numerous during the performance, and at the fall of the curtain the usual ovation was paid to the lady and gentleman.

The next day appeared the following editorial comment:—

> Royal Italian Opera.—The report of the performance of La Traviata, which appeared in a portion of our impression yesterday, as some of our readers are probably aware, was altogether incorrect, the Traviata having been postponed in consequence of the illness of Signor Graziani. We are compelled to confide in the honour of our reporter in all such matters, and, therefore, we have felt it our duty to at once dispense with the further services of the writer of the pretended critique.

It would seem that the writer of 'the pretended critique' was a new hand at the business, one whose zeal was on a higher plane than his accuracy, as there soon appeared a letter addressed to the Editor of the Morning Herald in these terms:—

> Sir,—Having been, until recently, for many years connected with the musical and theatrical departments of the Morning Herald, I shall feel obliged by your permitting me to state that I am not the writer of the pretended critique to which you referred on Saturday.
> I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
> May 17, 1857. D. H. Hastings.

In those days the musical critic of a London daily journal was referred to as a 'reporter.' Perchance he 'did' the police courts, coroners' inquests, and the hangings at Newgate in the morning, the opera coming within the range of his operations as a means of filling up his time after sunset. It is only fair to add that the critic may have attended a full-dress rehearsal of the opera in question, and formed his judgment of the work and its interpretation thereupon.

Professor Niecks has been presented with an address by the professional and non-professional musicians of Edinburgh in acknowledgment of the part he has taken in establishing a Scottish School of Music, to which we referred in our issue of November, 1901. Nil desperandum was the key-note of the Professor's reply to this gratifying token of appreciation, and all who are interested in the progress of the art north of the Tweed will re-echo the concluding words of the unwearying Professor's remarks: 'that the patriotism and the love of music of the wealthy men and women of Scotland would before long give them a national school of music at least equal to the best of other countries.' The function took place at the Royal Hotel, Edinburgh, on the 17th ult., Dr. James and Mr. Walter Hately taking a prominent part in the presentation of the address to Dr. Niecks.

The programme of the Scarborough Musical Festival, to be held at that favourite sea-side resort on September 17, 18, and 19, includes the following works:—

'Elijah' (Mendelssohn), 'Revenge' (Stanford), 'Symphonie Pathétique' (Tschaïkowsky), 'Faust' (Berlioz), Miscellaneous Selection (Wagner), Symphony No. 7 (Beethoven), and 'Messiah' (Handel).

Dr. Thomas Ely and Mr. Patman have undertaken the duties of chorus master, and the band and chorus, consisting of 300 performers, will be under the experienced direction of Dr. Frederic Cowen.

The Coronation honours included the conferring of a Baronetcy upon Sir Charles Hubert Hastings Parry, and a Knighthood upon Professor Charles Villiers Stanford.

The September issue of The Musical Times will contain a special account of the Coronation in Westminster Abbey, announced to take place on the 9th inst. Professor Dr. Horatio W. Parker, of Yale University, will form the subject of the Biographical Sketch.

Church and Organ Music.

THE LITANY SUNG IN PROCESSION.

Impressive solemnity characterised the special service held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday, June 26. It took place at the very hour originally fixed for the Coronation of King Edward VII. in Westminster Abbey; but by reason of the King's serious illness which caused the postponement of that ceremony, the service in the Metropolitan Cathedral took the form of intercession for the recovery of His Majesty. Perhaps the most beautiful feature of the service was the rendering by the choir (under the direction of Sir George Martin) of the anthem, 'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake,' sung unaccompanied, with a reverent interpretation of the words that touched the hearts of the worshippers.

On this intercessory occasion the Litany was sung in procession for the first time in the present Cathedral—that is to say, since the year 1697. This event may therefore furnish the opportunity of giving some information—not by any means of an exhaustive nature—concerning the singing of the Litany in the English church.

The Litany—from the Greek word Litaneia, meaning Prayer or Supplication—can be traced to the fourth century as a vehicle for devotions either private or public. It soon, however, came to be regarded as a form of supplication applied to solemn acts of processional prayer. In the fifth century it became common among the Gallic churches, as in the East, to invoke the Divine mercy in time of excessive rain or drought by means of Rogations or processional supplications. Such prayers were, indeed, offered by the community while going to and fro in procession, fasting and clothed in sackcloth.

In the mediæval church in England the Litany was nearly always sung in procession. The form varied: sometimes the clergy and choir would sing the whole within the church, at others, going into the churchyard, or on particular occasions, as on Rogations, extending their perambulations along the streets and roads, and into the fields.

The first form of our present English Litany, probably by Cranmer, dates from 1544: it was imposed on the church by Henry VIII. to be used 'in the time of processions.' It is curious and interesting to note that in the language of Cranmer (1489-1556) a 'Procession' meant the actual supplication, and in 1558 there were sold at Cambridge, for twopence each, 'Processioners,' being the name given to the English Litany. An Injunction of Edward VI., on coming to the throne in 1547, forbade processions about the church or churchyard, and ordered the priests and choir to kneel in the midst of the church, immediately before High Mass, and sing or say the Litany. On September 18, 1547, we find that 'the Litany was sung in the English tongue in St. Paul's Cathedral [i.e., the former, not the present sanctuary] between the Quire and the High Altar, the singers kneeling half on one side and half on the other.'

The Injunction of Queen Elizabeth was to the effect that while the Litany and prayers were to be said in church every Wednesday and Friday, the Litany of the Procession in Rogation week was to be continued; and the custom of beating the bounds on Ascension Day still in a very remote way represents the processional act of bygone years. Two interesting references to the use of the Litany in Procession at the Court of Queen Elizabeth at Windsor are given by Ashmole. He tells us that on St. George's Day, 1560 and 1561, it was sung 'in copes to the nombur of xxx,' and that on May 28, 1561:—

> After matens done, they whent a processyon rond about the cherche, so done the mydes and so ront a-bowt . . . the clarkes and prestes a xxiiii syngyng the Englys prossessyon in chopes xxxiii, and sum of them in gray ames and in calabur.

The non-processional Injunctions of Edward VI. and Elizabeth have remained in 'use' in the English church to the present time. The place—'the midst of the church'—caused the introduction of the faldstool—faldistory, a folding stool; but in regard to the wider application of the term, Bishop Cosin, in his first series of notes on the Common Prayer (1627), says:—'the priest goeth from out his seat into the body of the church, and at a low desk before the chancel door, called the faldstool, kneels and says or sings the Litany.'

The manner of singing the Litany varies in different Cathedrals. At St. Paul's, on June 26, it was intoned by four Minor Canons (including the Succentor). At Lichfield and Exeter, a Priest and a Lay Vicar, and at Lincoln two Lay Clerks sing it in unison, though in all cases a Priest intones from the Lord's Prayer to the end. The matter of the music of the Litany—Tallis and other settings—opens up a large question, which, however, may to some extent be dealt with in this column at a future time.

The Te Deum in B flat by Sir Charles V. Stanford is one that so admirably lends itself to orchestral treatment in the accompaniment thereof, that the publication of the work in a full-score form, prepared, of course, by the composer, will be welcomed for Festival use. There are one or two points in the instrumentation which may be noticed—points which testify to a practised hand in the art of skilful orchestral colouring. For instance, the strings are withheld till the words 'Father everlasting,' when they enter, in detached chords (ff), with fine effect, soon, however, to form a triplet figure at 'To Thee, all angels cry aloud.' Reiterated triplets, in the wood-wind, are introduced at 'the Holy Church,' and a new melody, assigned to the first violins, forms an accompaniment to 'When Thou tookest upon Thee.' Instead of the phrase 'whom' Thou hast redeemed' being entirely unaccompanied (as in the octavo edition), Sir Charles Stanford has given a scale passage à la canon to the violoncellos, and an arpeggio figure in the strings is added at the invocation, 'O Lord, save Thy people.' These are a few of the embellishments that have been introduced in the process of orchestrating the original accompaniment. The score is laid out for strings, wood-wind, four horns, trumpets, three trombones, drums, and organ.

Sir Walter Parratt is in the habit of inviting the Eton boys once a year to an organ recital in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. This 'treat' took place on Sunday evening, the 20th ult., when the Nave of the beautiful building was, as on previous occasions, filled with the youthful listeners from the great School. Sir Walter's programme comprised:—

Overture ..	Ptolemy ..	Handel.
Choral ..	O wie selig ..	Brahms.
Prelude and fugue in G major ..		Bach.
March for the Coronation of King Edward VII. ..		Saint-Saëns.

The vocal solos were 'By the waters of Babylon,' (Dvorák) and 'Litanei' (Schubert). The Etonians exchanged the attitude of auditors for that of interpreters in their vociferation of the Loyal Ode—the words by Mr. A. C. Benson, the music by Dr. Harford Lloyd—which was to have been performed in the presence of the King before the deferred Coronation ceremony. It was an interesting occasion.

Mr. William Prendergast, organist of Winchester Cathedral, writes from The Close, Winchester:—

Dear Sir,—It is proposed to commemorate the thirty-four years' work of the late Dr. G. B. Arnold as organist of Winchester by the erection of an inscribed tablet in the Cathedral. As is well known, Dr. Arnold's connection with Winchester began with Dr. Chard, and he subsequently became pupil and assistant to Dr. S. S. Wesley. It is thought that many of his old pupils as well as those who know him by his compositions may wish to contribute towards such a memorial. Moreover, as there is no tablet to the memory of Dr. Wesley himself, it has been suggested that the two masters should be commemorated together. I should be glad to hear from anyone interested, and to submit any proposals to the Dean and Chapter, and I should be pleased also to receive any subscriptions towards either or both objects.

Commendation of this proposal is unnecessary. Is it not high time that a memorial of Samuel Sebastian Wesley should be placed in Winchester Cathedral?

The special Service of Praise at the Dedication Festival at Boston Parish Church on Midsummer Day included Ouseley's stately anthem 'It came even to pass,' and selections from Richard Wüerst's Russian Suite for string orchestra, with violin obbligato. Mr. G. H. Gregory, organist of the church, conducted a small orchestra of strings and brass, and Mr. L. W. Hemmens was at the organ.

A NEW CATHEDRAL ORGAN.

Lord Iveagh, K.P., has presented a fine new organ to St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. The instrument was dedicated on June 18 in the presence of the Archbishop of Dublin, several bishops, and an enormous congregation. After the service the organist of the Cathedral, Mr. Charles G. Marchant, gave a short recital. We give the specification of the organ, which has been built by Messrs. Henry Willis and Sons.

The Instrument consists of FIVE Claviers. The Compass of the FOUR Manual Claviers extends from CC to C (61 notes—five complete octaves), and Concave and Radiating Pedals from CCC to G (32 notes).

The key fittings are of selected oak with angular draw-stop jambs, and have solid ivory draw-stop knobs. The keys are made of very thick ivory.

The twenty-seven Patent Adjustable Pistons appear immediately below and in front of each Clavier, concentrated, so as to be at all times within the reach of the performer. They are gold-plated and engine-turned.

The wind is supplied by five hydraulic motors which are placed up in the Triforium. Pressures vary from 21 inches to 2½ inches.

The action is tubular pneumatic throughout. There is an interchangeable switch-board by which the Combinations can be changed at will.

The Te Deum, its structure and meaning, and its musical setting and rendering (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge) is a little booklet by the Bishop of Salisbury which should be in the hands of every choirmaster. Anything that will help towards an intelligent rendering of church music deserves commendation, and the Bishop's interesting and learned information on the structure and meaning, the musical setting and rendering of the great Ambrosian Hymn merits a hearty welcome. The Latin text and an English version by the Bishop add to the value of these informing pages.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS.

Praised be the Lord daily. By C. H. Lloyd.
Thou, O God, art praised in Zion. By W. Wolstenholme.
The Glory of Lebanon. By Herbert W. Wareing.
Is it not wheat-harvest to-day? By Thomas Adams.
Be glad and rejoice. By Myles B. Foster.
(Novello's Octavo Anthems.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The attention of choirmasters may safely be drawn to the above five anthems recently composed for Harvest Festivals, as they provide music of various styles for the approaching services of praise and thanksgiving. The two most important in design are 'Praised be the Lord daily,' by Dr. Harford Lloyd, and 'Thou, O God, art praised in Zion,' by Mr. W. Wolstenholme. The former is suitable for general use, and is very bright and flowing in style. It opens and closes with a jubilant chorus distinguished by considerable independence in the part-writing, to which effective contrast is supplied by a middle section commenced by a brief soprano solo. The soprano soloist also supplements the four voice parts in the final chorus, and a singer with a somewhat powerful voice is required to do the music justice. Mr. Wolstenholme begins his anthem in a manner which commands attention, the choir giving out the words fortissimo in unison, accompanied by the organ in detached chords on a pedal bass. The next section, led off by the tenors, is more tranquil in character. A return to unison at the words 'Thou shalt show us wonderful things,' leads to a fine climax towards the end of the first part of the anthem. With a change of key and rhythm the music becomes more suave and imbued with considerable melodic grace, and this is a section admirably suited for a quartet of voices. The anthem concludes with a quotation of its opening phrases.

Choirmasters who have some reliable soloists in their choirs may be recommended 'The Glory of Lebanon,' by Dr. Wareing. In this anthem the tenors and basses lead off in unison, and are lightly but effectively accompanied by the organ. An expressive solo for tenor or soprano follows, the interest of which is increased by the organ accompaniment. Subsequently the choir enters in four parts (allegretto) with a chorus of flowing character containing a section which 'may be sung as an unaccompanied quartet if preferred.'

Two anthems remain to be noticed—'Is it not wheat-harvest to-day?' by Mr. Thomas Adams, and 'Be glad and rejoice,' by Mr. Myles B. Foster. The former is concise and could be prepared at short notice by an ordinary choir having a tenor soloist. Melodious and well varied, the music contains a touch of the dramatic element which adds to its effectiveness. The composition by Mr. Foster is described 'as a Thanksgiving for Peace and Plenty,' and the exhortations to praise and be thankful contained in the words are admirably reflected in the music, which presents few difficulties to average choirs. The interest of the anthem is enhanced by a baritone solo, thus an effective contrast is provided to the choral context.

The Opera. By R. A. Streatfeild. With an Introduction by J. A. Fuller-Maitland.
[John C. Nimmo.]

This is a new, revised and enlarged edition of Mr. Streatfeild's capital handbook to matters operatic. It includes a sketch of the development of opera and full descriptions of all works in the modern repertory. The author has a pleasant style, and, as Mr. Fuller-Maitland says in his thoughtful introduction, 'Mr. Streatfeild has hit upon the happy idea of combining the mere story-telling part of his task with a survey of the history of the opera from its beginning, early in the seventeenth century, to the present day.' While Mr. Streatfeild does not attempt to exhaust the subject by making mention of operas that are as dead as Queen Anne, he has furnished both the student and the general reader with a book that is not only useful for reference, but is in every way acceptable, satisfactory, and praiseworthy.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Postlude, Romance, and Spring Song. By W. H. Bell.

First movement from Spohr's G minor quartet. Arranged by A. B. Plant.

Twelve short voluntaries. By Max Oesten.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Sonate (No. 2 in D dur) für Orgel, componirt von Percy C. Buck. [Breitkopf und Härtel.]

The first of Mr. Bell's trio of pieces is a bright movement in F, melodious and void of difficulty. It furnishes a good outgoing voluntary of the alla marcia type without, however, a touch of vulgarity. The Romance, in G, is in the nature of an attractive soft movement, and the Spring song has all the bright touches of that welcome period of the year, with just a suggestion of the east wind, without which no Spring in this our beloved land would be seasonable.

Dr. Plant has made an excellent arrangement of the initial movement of Spohr's quartet in G minor. It will afford organists a very good study in playing three notes against two.

The 'twelve short voluntaries' by Max Oesten form the third set of similar short pieces by that melodious composer. While they are primarily written for the harmonium, some of the numbers may be used as effective voluntaries of a simple and pleasing nature in church, especially by village organists of limited executive capacities.

Dr. Percy Buck is one of those earnest-minded musicians whose compositions command respect. In this, his second sonata for the organ, he gives fresh proof of the artistic feeling that is in him. The sonata opens with a Fantasie, which is treated in a manner fully justifying its designation. To this succeeds a well-developed allegro in D minor, ending tranquilly in the tonic key. The second movement, a Cantilene in F, is one of great charm, and will doubtless prove the most attractive section of the sonata. The modulation into D flat, with the change of rhythm and the moving semi-quavers, provides that contrast which intensifies the welcome meted out to the return of the main subject. The Finale, quasi Rondo concludes a composition which will repay careful study on the part of executants with a good technique. The work is dedicated to Dr. Harford Lloyd, Precentor of Eton.

The University Song Book. [Grant Richards.]

'Undergraduates in particular and University men in general' are the folk for which this rather portly volume of some 400 pages is primarily intended, and, secondly, there is claimed for it 'a link between the 'Varsity men at home and their comrades in the Britains beyond the seas.' All sorts of songs are provided for all conditions of student life, and the subjects include national, sport, love, convivial, sailor and soldier, folk-songs, and frivola. A specimen verse from the last-named section may be quoted :—

An up-to-date musician was touring by the Nile,
O tempora ! O mores !
When suddenly there faced him a hungry crocodile,
O tempora ! O mores !
It showed desire to eat him—who knows why such things are ?
O tempo-tempora ! A good joke, aha !
All praise be thine for evermore, Dame Musica !

The music, which has been gathered from various sources, is of the usual student type of easy-going strains, and the editorial supervision appears to answer all reasonable requirements.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Novello's School of Pianoforte Music. Edited by Karl Klindworth. Nos. 1—14.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The name of Professor Karl Klindworth is a household word, not only in England, but on the Continent and in America, as a careful and artistic editor of pianoforte music. His edition of Chopin is known everywhere as a most painstaking piece of work, in which thoroughness and a seeking after the truth are paramount. The same features characterise the series of pieces—fourteen in number—which form the basis of Novello's School of Pianoforte Music. That the foundation is a good one, it is only necessary to mention the names of Beethoven, Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Hummel, Mendelssohn, Schubert, and Weber. Some of the best known gems of the creative output of these masters have been provided by Professor Klindworth with minuteness of phrasing indications—a most important desideratum—and careful fingering. Moreover, special attention has been given to accuracy of text. In passing a judgment of commendation upon this addition to practical pianoforte music, we cannot do better than conclude with a quotation from the Preface to the series : 'With these fundamental principles of good editing has been combined the important, though often neglected essential of the artistic presentment of the music to the eye. Special attention has accordingly been paid to clearness, especially in the direction of ample spacing of the notes, legibility, and, as far as possible, in providing convenient turning-over places—important matters which will materially assist the player in the study of the pieces contained in this series. The annotations of the Editor, the use of which will greatly aid the students in a proper interpretation of these works, speak for themselves.'

The Butterfly's Ball. Concert Overture By Frederic H. Cowen. Arranged for the pianoforte by H. M. Higgs.
Coronation March. By Frederic H. Cowen. Arranged for the pianoforte by the composer.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Dr. F. H. Cowen's Concert Overture, 'The Butterfly's Ball,' has proved one of the most successful orchestral compositions of recent times. The composer has long been accepted as peculiarly happy in his musical illustrations of Fairyland, to which it was commonly felt Butterflies can claim kinship, and the anticipations thus excited were so pleasurably realised when the work was first performed, that its acceptance was immediate. Much of the charm of the composition lies in the delicate suggestiveness of the orchestration, but Mr. H. M. Higgs has done his work so well, avoiding ineffective complexities, that a pianist with a light touch and poetic temperament will be able to reflect in great measure on the household instrument the orchestral effects.

The Coronation March may claim to be the brightest and most engaging of the many compositions of its class, called forth by the accession of King Edward. Dr. Cowen is an accomplished pianist, and therefore his arrangement of the score, it need hardly be said, is exceedingly effective; moreover, he is well acquainted with the abilities of the average amateur.

THE ROYAL OPERA.

TWO NEW WORKS.

In recording the events of the past month at Covent Garden, one début of special interest must first be chronicled. Miss Mary Garden, a Scotch-American lady who is one of the prime donne of the Paris Opera Comique, made her first appearance on the 4th ult. as Manon, in Massenet's opera, and immediately established herself as a great favourite. It is not so much her voice as her dramatic talent that makes her an acquisition. Her voice is not too sympathetic, but she has the art of making it subtly expressive of various emotions, and she has vocal agility and dexterity. But as an actress she deserves a very high place among contemporary artists. The vivacity, charm and power of her embodiment of Manon can scarcely be over praised.

Before discussing the novelties, it is necessary only to record that Madame Calvé sang as Santuzza in 'Cavalleria Rusticana' (with Signor Caruso as Turiddu), and her acting was as impressive as ever, in spite of her growing restlessness on the stage; that Madame Melba as Violetta in 'La Traviata' sang as brilliantly as always; that Signor Caruso as Alfredo brought the house down several times; that in 'Pagliacci' Mdlle. Amelie Revy appeared at very short notice in place of Fräulein Scheff and was successful; that we have heard the third act of 'Il Barbiere,' with Signor Scotti as the Barber, Mdlle. Pacini as Rosina, M. Gilibert as Don Bartolo, and Signor Pini Corsi as Basilio. It was a deliciously spirited performance, which made one regret that the whole opera was not given. Madame Litvinne and Miss Susan Strong have also appeared, the former as Isolde and Aida, the latter as Aida.

MR. HERBERT BUNNING'S 'LA PRINCESSE OSRA.'

The first of the novelties was Mr. Herbert Bunning's 'La Princesse Osra,' the libretto of which, by M. Maurice Bérenger, is founded on the episode 'The Happiness of Stephen the Smith,' in Mr. Anthony Hope's work 'The Heart of Princess Osra.' Mr. Bunning has written music which would probably make more effect in a smaller house, and which relies very largely on a crisp performance with delicate observance of light and shade, and brisk action on the stage, none of which things was vouchsafed him. That his gifts are lyric rather than dramatic is certainly the impression left by the first two acts; but then, in the dramatic scenes of the last act, his music has more strength and sincerity than the earlier acts lead one to expect. The probable reason is that Mr. Bunning in the earlier acts follows too closely in the footsteps of M. Massenet, but unfortunately he seems frequently to miscalculate vocal effects in the sense that the voices are obscured by the orchestra. The best thing in the opera is a laughing chorus of courtiers after Stephen has announced that he loves Osra. The airs sung by Stephen and the Princess have a dainty vein of melody and sentiment, and were much applauded. M. Messager conducted, and the production on the 14th ult. resulted in cordial first-night demonstrations. The chief soloists were one and all good. Miss Garden as the Princess looked very charming, and sang her airs very beautifully. M. Maréchal well sustained the part of the Smith, both as actor and singer. M. Plançon as the King sang splendidly; while M. Gilibert acted and sang admirably in the small part of the Fool.

MISS ETHEL SMYTH'S 'DER WALD.'

Miss Ethel Smyth's 'Der Wald' was produced on the night of the 18th ult., with very great success. It came to London via Berlin, where it was first produced. Whereas 'La Princesse Osra' was sung in French, 'Der Wald' was sung in German!

Miss Smyth is her own librettist, and has invented a story of a forest lover who prefers his humble bride to a lady of the Court who is attracted by him and bids him follow her, even though his refusal to obey means instant death. He was condemned for deer-stealing, but the lady would have saved him. We are asked to look on it all as an illusion. The Spirits of the Forest tell us in the Prologue and also in the Epilogue that mortals' grief and pleasure pass away, while they last for ever. Apart from a tendency to diffuseness, it is a good libretto, It is dramatic, the climaxes are well led up to, and the story holds the attention.

The music of the opera revealed unexpected powers. Miss Smyth has an undoubted dramatic instinct and a remarkable sense of orchestral colour. The forest atmosphere is most poetically suggested, and the use of leit-motives is not only mechanically clever, but dramatically significant. Though the voice-parts are on the whole too declamatory, there is expressive melody in a duet between the two lovers, which ends with an invocation to the Powers of Nature in the Forest. The mere mention of a metaphysical love duet shows who is Miss Smyth's chief model. Indeed, the ultra-Wagnerian methods are the chief characteristics of her style, except that occasionally she takes colour from the Brahmsian palette, as in the mystic choruses of the Spirits. And in doing so she shows much discretion, for the meditative calm is much more Brahmsian than Wagnerian. But, imitative or not, it is an opera to which one listens with interest from first to last, which has the note of sincerity, and is remarkably able. Miss Smyth was called before the curtain several times at the conclusion amid considerable enthusiam. It is hard to see why Berlin was so apathetic. The mounting and stage management were exceedingly creditable to Covent Garden, and the performance which Herr Lohse conducted, and in which Frau Lohse, Fräulein Fremstadt, Herr Pennarini and Mr. Bispham took the chief share, was very spirited and enjoyable.

Mozart's masterpiece 'Don Giovanni' received an excellent interpretation on the evening of the 19th ult. It took 'Don Giovanni' thirty years to make its way to London, after its production in Prague in 1787, and the beautiful work was relegated to the fag end of the season just concluded; but better late than never!

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The concluding concert of the ninetieth season, which took place on the 2nd ult. at Queen's Hall, was made memorable by the performance of no less than four new works, only one a quasi novelty.

Taking the compositions in the order in which they were presented, we have first to notice 'Five Poems,' for baritone and orchestra, by Mr. Percy Pitt. The composer, who has selected his text from the writings of Lenau, Peter Cornelius, Felix Dahn, and Tasso, is essentially a musician of intention, and the full significance of his music is rarely to be gathered at a first hearing. We would therefore postpone appraising these songs, and content ourselves by saying that they were sung by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, that they are instinct with poetic feeling, and remarkable for the cleverness and suggestiveness of the orchestral accompaniment. To the songs succeeded a Violin Concerto in D minor, by Mr. Alberto Randegger, Junior, who had the advantage of having M. Kubelik as the exponent of the solo part. It need scarcely be said that the young composer could hardly have set himself a more exacting task, or one more likely to excite comparisons with familiar masterpieces in the same form. That Mr. Randegger under these conditions has done so well testifies to his creative ability. Of the three movements the most important is the first, which shows considerable constructive skill combined with adept use of the orchestra. The other numbers are less ambitious. If the music is never commanding in utterance, it has the genial air of the sunny south, and is always pleasing and musicianly. Madame Clara Butt gave a most effective interpretation of Mr. Herbert Bedford's song for contralto and orchestra, 'Summer dawn,' a dramatically conceived if not very original composition.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's overture to 'The Cricket on the Hearth,' played for the first time at the recent Lincoln Festival, had an immediate success, and left a lively desire to hear the opera itself. As a concert-room piece the overture will probably rank side by side with its composer's breezy 'Britannia,' being equally characterised by humour and spontaneity. Sir Alexander, who conducted, has seldom received more hearty applause. It should be added that the concert was opened with an impressive performance of Brahms's 'Tragic' overture, conducted by Dr. Cowen, to whom hearty congratulations are due for the artistic success of the past season.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A musical and dramatic performance of more than usual importance was given by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, on the 22nd ult., at St. George's Hall. The programme began with an operetta in one act, entitled 'A gentleman of the road,' respectively written and composed by Miss Eleanor Farjeon and Mr. Harry Farjeon. The story deals in humorous fashion with an incident in the career of a highwayman of the Dick Turpin type, and exhibits considerable constructive skill. The music is extremely melodious, shows no little sense of humour, and is deftly written, these qualities being particularly noticeable in a duet written in canon in the octave, a trio, and an unaccompanied quartet. The amusing trifle was brightly played by Kate Moss, Lizzie Davies, and Charles Earldon, Gale Gardner, Henry E. Butcher, and Walter P. Lewis.

It was succeeded by a terpsichorean fantasy entitled 'The Moon Slave,' founded on Barry Pain's story of the Princess who, fascinated by the beauty of the moon's rays, vows she will be the slave of the orb if it will give her music to dance in its light. The boon is granted, but having once begun to dance she is unable to stop, and as she falls exhausted she is whisked off by the moon spirit. The address to the moon and the subsequent dance are the work of Paul Corder, and decidedly show talent and ability. Miss Rica de Bitton spoke her lines with commendable distinctness and danced gracefully, and Ernest Torrence's embodiment of the moon spirit was excellent. Great praise is due to Mr. B. Soutten for the arrangement of the scene and the dances.

The afternoon concluded with Maeterlinck's tragedy, 'The Death of Tintagiles,' with incidental music by A. von Ahn Carse. The tragedy concerns the murder of a child by his queen grandmother, and is chiefly remarkable for poverty of language and hopeless gloom. Mr. Carse, however, has evidently been fascinated by his subject, and his music shows lively imagination, sense of contrast, and ability to weave his themes into a musical pattern of dramatic appropriateness in a manner that increases the force of the situations; but it is to be regretted that his efforts should have been bestowed on so lugubrious a play. The most important character is that of Ygraine, and this was embodied with notable dramatic power by Mabel Moore. Mention is also due of Isabel Peck and Sybil St. Clair Hutton.

The first two pieces were conducted by Mr. Frederick Corder, and the third by Mr. Ahn Carse.

The following prizes have been awarded:—The Charlotte Walters Prizes (dramatic elocution) to Noël Neville Griffiths and Mabel C. Moore; the Julia Leney Prize (harp playing) to Violet Grace Garton (of London); the Frederick Westlake Prize (pianoforte playing) to Winifred Christie (of Stirling); the Walter Macfarren Gold Medals (pianoforte playing) to Florence Reeves and Felix G. Swinstead.

London Concerts.

A concert of exceptional interest was given by Mdlle. Marie de la Rouvière, on the 8th ult., at Bechstein Hall. This lady is the soprano of the vocal quartet of La Scola Cantorum de Paris, an institution chiefly devoted to the practice and performance of music of past centuries. The other members of the quartet are Mdme. J. de la Mare, M. Jean David, and M. Gébelin, and the interpretations given of a 'Dialogus per la Pascua,' a fine example by Schütz of seventeenth-century church music, and of Beethoven's noble 'Chant Elégiaque,' testified to painstaking and intelligent rehearsal. Mdlle. Rouvière has a powerful soprano voice and an excellent style. She gave a dramatic rendering of Gluck's 'Songe d'Iphigénie,' and introduced three attractive songs under the collective title of 'Le Berger Fidèle,' by J. Rameau.

Miss Alice Hollander, the possessor of a genuine contralto voice, and also gifted with manifest artistic sensibility, made so successful a début in this country at her first concert on the 2nd ult. at St. James's Hall, that she was induced to give a second in the same place on the 8th ult., when her sympathetic singing confirmed the good opinions previously expressed.

Record is due of the first appearance in London, on the 10th ult., at Steinway Hall, of M. Alcibiade Anemoyanni, a Greek violinist of great ability, and, judging by some pleasing pieces from his pen, an accomplished and imaginative musician.

M. Ferencz Hegedüs, another Hungarian violinist, played with great skill and taste at his recital on the 11th ult., at Bechstein Hall.

Madame Adelina Patti (Baroness Cederström), at her concert (given at the Albert Hall on the 14th ult.), again delighted a large audience with her wonderful vocal resources and versatility of style. She was equally successful in Mozart's 'Deh! vieni,' and Wagner's 'Elisabeth's Prayer,' in addition to other favourites of the vox populi in the singing of which she is quite at home.

The summer concert season may be said to have terminated on the 19th ult., when M. Kubelik gave the second of two violin recitals at St. James's Hall. The gifted violinist was in his best form, and gave interpretations of Bach's 'Chaconne' and pieces by Ries and Paganini with his wonted brilliancy and remarkable technical ease. M. Kubelik was assisted by Miss Katherine Goodson, a talented young pianist.

The Edinburgh Musical Education Society held its last meeting for the session on the 2nd ult., when about seventy members and guests were present, and Professor Niecks, the president, occupied the chair. An informal address was given by Professor Dr. S. S. Laurie, Professor of Education in the University of Edinburgh. Among other interesting topics referred to in his remarks, Professor Laurie pointed out the unsuitability of much of the music that is sung in schools, and urged the crying need for reform in this respect. He suggested as most congenial to young people the 'heroic,' the 'religious,' and the 'convivial,' and that songs expressive of these sentiments are more suitable than the 'sentimental rubbish' which can be sung with such fatal facility.

Miscellaneous.

La Scola Cantorum de Paris (Société de Musique religieuse et classique) announces a Festival to be held at Bruges from August 7 to 10 inclusive. The well-drawn-up programmes, which are of special interest, include a performance, in the Cathedral of Saint-Sauveur, of M. Edgar Tinel's 'Messe de Nôtre Dâme de Londres' (à 5 voix), under the composer's direction. Historical concerts of sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth century music will also be given, and papers on old church music are to be read. The Secretary of the Festival is M. Joseph de Brouwer, 24, Rue des Baudets, Bruges.

The splendid new Whitworth Hall of Owens College, Manchester, was, on the 3rd ult., gay with the robes of professors and students of the Victoria University, who met together for the conferring and reception of the degrees won during the past session. Among the graduates were three aspirants for the degree of Bachelor of Music, and Dr. Hiles presented Joseph Leopold Smith, accomplished as a violoncellist, Richard Cecil Hazlehurst (Hargreaves Scholar), an excellent pianoforte student, and Hayward Argyll Scott, already well known in Liverpool and in Lincolnshire as an organist and choirmaster.

Two interesting performances of the 'Alcestis' of Euripides were given on July 11 and 12, in the School of Art at the Crystal Palace, under the capable direction of Miss Elsie Fogerty. The incidental music, written by Mr. Henry Gadsby in 1876, was performed by a choir of ladies and an orchestra (led by Mr. Charles Aves), under the able conductorship of Mr. Alfred J. Eyre. A special stage was erected, the decorations and accessories of which were carried out by Mr. Matthew Webb's Design Class, at the Crystal Palace School of Art.

Miss Sybil Keymer (aged 9 years), the favourite pupil of Herr August Wilhelmj, had the honour of playing the violin at Kensington Palace, on the 18th ult., before T.R.H. Princess Louise, the Duke of Connaught, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and other members of the Royal Family.

The death, at his residence, Mount Edgerton, Huddersfield, of Mr. Allen Haigh, on June 25, removes one who for many years showed much practical interest in the music of that town, where he was highly respected. Mr. Allen Haigh was a great friend of Dr. S. S. Wesley.

Mr. W. F. Gregory (44, Winchendon Road, Fulham) has formed an orchestra of fifty-six players, with the object of enabling composers to 'try their works at a stated sum according to the time they occupy the orchestra.'

The prize of £100 offered by the proprietors of The Artist, for a Coronation March, has been gained by Mr. J. D. Davis, of Edgbaston, and the composition appears as a supplement in the June issue of our contemporary.

Foreign Notes.

Antwerp.—A highly impressive performance was given last month, in one of the public squares, of the 'Rubens' cantata of the late Peter Benoit, conducted by M. Kewels. A committee has been formed, under the presidency of M. Jan Blockx, the well-known composer, for the purpose of erecting a monument to the Flemish master.

Berlin.—The recent first performance at the Royal Theatre of Felix Weingartner's trilogy, 'Orestes,' was an unqualified success for the gifted composer, who was recalled many times. The work was performed by the personnel of the Stuttgart Hoftheater, under their very able conductor, Herr Pohlig.——The 600th performance of 'Don Giovanni' was recorded at the Royal Theatre last month. Mozart's chef d'œuvre was first produced here in December, 1790.——Richard Strauss is engaged upon a setting for chorus, soli, and orchestra of Uhland's well-known poem, 'Tailefer,' the hero of which is the redoubtable henchman of William the Conqueror.

Chemnitz.—Three highly-successful performances of Nicodé's picturesque symphony-ode, 'Das Meer,' were given recently by the Gesangverein, under the able direction of Herr Pohle.

Dresden.—A new fairy opera, 'Rübezahl,' by Alfred Stelzner, has been successfully brought out at the Royal Theatre. Dr. Stelzner is the inventor of the new intermediary stringed instruments called 'violotta' and 'cellone,' which he has most effectively employed in his score. General musik-director von Schuch conducted an excellent performance, in which Herr Scheidemantel sang the leading male part.

Florence.—A monument to Rossini was recently unveiled in the Church of Santa Croce with great solemnity. Mascagni conducted a commemorative concert, which included the performance of the overtures to 'William Tell' and 'Il Barbiere,' and by way of contrast 'Isolde's Liebestod' from Wagner's 'Tristan und Isolde.' In connection with the event, a brochure entitled 'La famiglia di Giacchino Rossini,' has been published, in which are to be found some curious details and anecdotes concerning the master.

Helsingfors.—The talented young Finnish composers, Jean Sibelius and Armas Järnefelt, have been granted a stipend of £75 and £50 respectively by the Government of Finland.

Ischl.—A monument has just been erected to Brahms, in the garden of the villa formerly belonging to Johann Strauss, where the master was a frequent visitor.

Leipzig.—The well-known Academical Choral Society, at present under the conductorship of Herr Heinrich Zoellner, celebrated the eightieth anniversary of its foundation, on the 13th ult., with a concert of sacred music.——Dr. Carl Reinecke, who has just celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday, retired on the 1st ult. from his post of director of studies at the Conservatorium. The veteran composer and teacher will be succeeded at that institution by Herr Arthur Nikisch.——Max Klinger's much discussed Beethoven statue has been secured, with the aid of an influential committee, for this city.——The death occurred here recently of Carl Piutti, for many years a highly-esteemed professor at the Conservatorium and successor of Rust as organist of St. Thomas's Church. He wrote many works for the instrument.

Milan.—Signor Sonzogno, the well-known impresario and music publisher, who, in 1890, offered the prize for a one-act opera awarded to Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' has opened an international competition for another one-act lyrical drama. The jury will be an international one.

Munich.—The first performance took place last month of the new oratorio 'St. Franciscus,' by Father Hartmann, a Franciscan friar, the executants being members of the Royal Choir, and of the Akademie der Tonkunst, the Royal Orchestra, with Frau Stavenhagen and Herr Loritz in the solo parts. The composer conducted a very good performance, which was received with every mark of appreciation.——A highly successful first performance was given recently of M. Charpentier's opera, 'Louise,' at the Hoftheater.——The Wagner performances at the Prince Regenten Theater commence on the 9th inst., and will be continued until September 12.——From August 15 to the end of the month a cycle of Mozart's operas will be given at the small Residenz Theater, including 'Figaro,' 'Cosi fan tutte,' and 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail.'

Nuremberg.—On the occasion of the recent fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the Germanic Museum, that institution was presented by the Prince Regent of Bavaria with the autograph score of Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger,'—a valuable and appropriate gift to the city of Hans Sachs—together with a most rare collection of incunabula by Nuremberg printers.

Ostend.—Visitors to this favourite resort will find a very fine band of about 120 performers at the Kursaal, and as an instance of the excellence of its programmes, it may be mentioned that, on the 18th ult., M. Saint-Saëns conducted a concert entirely of his own compositions, including his March, composed for the Coronation of King Edward.

Pampeluna.—A four-days' musical festival was held here last month with much success, Señor Sarasate, a native of Pampeluna, being the central feature of attraction in the programme, which also included the performance, by Madame Marx-Goldschmidt, of four pianoforte concertos by Mendelssohn, Weber, Liszt, and Saint-Saëns respectively.

Paris.—The complete collection of the autograph manuscripts of Hérold's compositions has been presented to the Bibliothèque Nationale by the descendants of the composer of 'Zampa' and 'Le Pré aux Clercs.' The gift includes some unpublished chamber compositions.

Pyrmont.—At a musical festival devoted entirely to Tschaïkowsky's works, and extending over two days, the performances included the Fifth Symphony, the C minor Pianoforte Concerto, the String Quartet (Op. 11), as well as the one-act opera 'Iolanthe,' and excerpts from a posthumous opera, entitled 'Mandragora.' Amongst those assisting in the proceedings were Professor Hugo Riemann, of Leipzig, who delivered an interesting discourse on the Russian composer's life and artistic importance.

St. Petersburg.—Rimsky-Korsakow has completed the score of a new four-act opera, 'Servilia,' which will be brought out at the Imperial Theatre during the coming season. The directors have also accepted for performance an opera, 'Nikita Dobriniez,' by the talented young Russian composer, F. Gretchaninow.

Vienna.—Carl Goldmark has just completed the score of his new four-act opera 'Goetz von Berlichingen,' the libretto of which closely follows Goethe's well-known early drama of that name. The opera is to be brought out at the Imperial Theatre in the coming season.——The much-coveted post of musical director of St. Stephen's Cathedral, vacated by the death of Gottfried Preyer, has been conferred upon Court-organist Rudolph Bibl, a well-known authority on church music and noted composer, who is now in his seventieth year.

Warsaw.—An enthusiastically received first performance took place recently, at the Municipal Theatre, of a new opera, 'Livina Quintilla,' by the Polish composer S. Noskowski.

Brief Summary of Country and Colonial News.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

Croydon.—An interesting programme was performed by the students of the Croydon Conservatoire of Music at their orchestral concert, on the 11th ult., under the able direction of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor. It included Hofmann's Serenade (Op. 72); Three Pieces: Allemande, Sarabande, and Cebell, by Purcell; Serenade (Op. 20), Elgar; Petite Suite for pianoforte and strings, Ole Olsen (in which the pianoforte part was played by Miss Jessie Fennings and Miss Van der Heyde), and Gade's Novelletten (Op. 53). Miss Marjorie Ferguson, who was the solo pianist, played Beethoven's Rondo a Capriccio in G major.

Exeter.—On the 17th ult. a Service of Praise was held in the Cathedral, the occasion being the annual Festival of the Exeter Diocesan Choral Society. No fewer than twenty-four choirs, numbering over 760 singers, took part, under the direction of Dr. D. J. Wood and Mr. T. Roylands Smith. The anthem was Stainer's 'Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers'—the congregation joining in the hymn 'O King of Kings' which forms the climax of the anthem—and Hopkins's Te Deum in B flat. As voluntaries before and after the service, Dr. Wood played Mendelssohn's Fourth Sonata, Sterndale Bennett's Minuet and Trio in G minor, and Salomé's March in A flat.

Grahamstown.—The Orchestral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall, on June 3, under the direction of Mr. Edgar Wood. The chief feature of the programme was Haydn's Second Symphony in D minor, which was excellently played, as was also a Suite by Borowski. Mr. B. Farrer led the orchestra, and the solo vocalists were Miss Bella Deyns and Mr. W. A. Jeanes.

Ilfracombe.—Mr. A. E. Wilshire, who has been organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church for fifteen years, has been presented on his retirement from that office with a purse of gold and an illuminated address by the clergy and congregation, and a silver tea service and kettle by the clergy and choir. The vicar made the presentation, on June 27, in the National Boys' Schoolroom, and the address expressed the appreciation of the subscribers 'of the zealous and efficient manner in which Mr. Wilshire had worked to bring the choir to its present high state of excellence.' The Braunton Choral Society, of which Mr. Wilshire has been for seven years conductor, also presented him with a handsome entrée dish, a silver photograph frame, and an illuminated address. Mr. Wilshire has been appointed organist and choirmaster of Wimborne Minster.

Kimberley (South Africa).—The Musical Association, which has begun its second season with 125 honorary members and 50 active (choral) members, gave its first concert on June 4, when the chief attraction was Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner.' The concert began with 'Rule, Britannia,' sung by Mrs. Hooper Rees and the choir. Mrs. Proudman was the principal violinist, and the conductor was Mr. J. Frank Proudman.

Luton Hoo.—A choral celebration of the Holy Communion (the first which had been held here for many years) took place in the private chapel of Luton Hoo Mansion, on the 13th ult. The music was the setting of A. J. Eyre in E flat, the Nunc dimittis being sung to music by Mr. F. Gostelow, the organist and choirmaster of the Chapel, who is also organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church of Luton.

Salisbury.—A Diocesan Choral Festival, originally arranged to commemorate the Coronation of the King, and subsequently changed to a Service of Thanksgiving for His Majesty's recovery, was held in the Cathedral on the 16th ult., under the direction of the Rev. Precentor Carpenter. The choir and orchestra (which included members of the band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry) numbered about 1600. The service included Handel's Coronation anthems, 'The King shall rejoice,' 'Zadok the Priest,' Smart's Te Deum in F, and, of course, the National Anthem. The Band played Tschaïkowsky's 'Marche Solennelle,' and the Andante from Mendelssohn's 'Italian Symphony.' Altogether the Festival was considered one of the most successful ever held under the auspices of the Salisbury Diocesan Choral Union.

Southport.—The Wintersdorp Musical Society held its last meeting this season on the 7th ult., when various competitions took place, the adjudicators being Mr. Branscombe and Mr. Hatton, both of Liverpool. A concert was held in the evening, when the programme included the overtures 'Anacreon,' Cherubini, 'Oberon,' Weber, and 'Barber of Seville,' Rossini, and vocal and instrumental solos by some of the principal competitors and others.

Wellington (N.Z.). — Mr. Maughan Barnett and Herr Max Hoppe have resumed their series of concerts, two of which were given on May 15 and 27. The programmes have included Max Bruch's Trio in C minor, Rheinberger's Trio in A, Gade's Novelletten, and Huber's Sonata for pianoforte and violin, Op. 42. Mr. Maughan Barnett's principal pianoforte solos were Rubinstein's Staccato Study in C major, Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C sharp minor, and the violin solos played by Herr Hoppe included Max Bruch's 'Swedish Dances.' Mr. A. H. Hamerton was the violoncellist, and Miss Phœbe Parsons and Mr. John Prouse were the vocalists.

Answers to Correspondents.

C. F. H.—In addition to Cummings's 'Life of Purcell' and the article in Grove's Dictionary, see (for Purcell information) the Dictionary of National Biography, also the articles in The Musical Times of November and December, 1895. For musical illustrations, see 'Twelve Songs,' 'Ten Pianoforte Pieces,' and 'Fourteen Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte,' by Purcell, published by Messrs. Novello. The Toccata and Ground, for pianoforte, are published by Messrs. Augener in their Popular Pieces by Henry Purcell.

Wagnerian.—To suggest 'something grand, really grand, that carries you away from yourself,' and that you could play on the pianoforte—a grand pianoforte, of course—is a trifle beyond us. Equally and regretfully are we unable to answer the question 'what is the grandest piece, or work, that has yet been composed?' (2) The 'grandest Requiem' is another composer poser. (3) Meyerbeer's Coronation March is from his opera 'Le Prophète'—a more profitable question.

A. R. W. D.—The following pieces would be suitable to play at an evening party of the kind you mention: Valse de Concert (Fontenailles), Valse Chromatique (Godard), Valses, Nos. 4 and 10 (Hahn), Valse Rapide and Valse Aërienne (Lack), Valse Coquette and Intermezzo (Leschetizki), Carnaval Mignon (Schütt), Polonaise, Op. 72, No. 7, and Trépak, Op. 72, No. 18 (Tschaikowsky).

J. H. P.—(1) Advertise, and answer advertisements. To be able to read well is in your favour. (2) For 'a secular cantata suitable for a country choir without any very high or low notes, occupying an hour or an hour and a quarter in performance,' see Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' Bennett's 'May Queen,' Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day,' and Gade's 'Erl King's Daughter.'

Durham.—If, as you say, 'the examiners in music at the Universities differ very much as to the rules of harmony and counterpoint,' this would make no difference in their appreciation of good work. A few lessons from a coach who knows the ins-and-outs of the different examinations might prove advantageous to you.

J. S.—In a useful little book containing hints on 'the art of taking care of a pianoforte,' Messrs. Broadwood say: 'The pianoforte should be shut when not played upon (and especially after a heavy rain when the windows are open), so that humidity in the atmosphere may less readily affect it and dust be excluded as far as possible.'

I. A. M. L.—We gladly repeat the answer to the question regarding the relative speeds of the Ihlenburg and Maelzel metronomes as exampled in Grieg's Holberg Suite:—

Prelude:	Ihlenburg (minim),	92;	Maelzel, 76.
Rigaudon:	,, ,,	144;	,, 126.

Conductor.—See answer to J. H. P., with the addition of Walthew's 'Pied piper of Hamlin,' Somerville's 'Power of Sound,' Macfarren's 'May Day,' Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' Stainer's 'St. Mary Magdalen,' and Barnby's 'Rebekah.'

L. B.—We regret that we cannot trace the tune 'Aberystwyth' set to 'Jesu, Lover of my soul.' It is probably in one of the numerous Welsh hymnals. Perhaps some of our readers can furnish the desired information.

G.—At the Bayreuth performances last year the Steersman in 'Der fliegende Holländer' was Franz Josef Petter, of Dresden, and the part of Loge in 'Das Rheingold' was sustained by Dr. Otto Briesemeister, of Breslau.

Ignotus.—(1) Use the short vowel in singing 'wind' and 'infinite.' (2) See the article on 'Programme Music,' by Mr. Frederick Corder, in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vols. iii. and iv.

A. McK.—The song by Richard Strauss which you seek is 'Dream in the twilight' (Op. 29, No. 1), and may be obtained from Messrs. Novello, price 1s. 6d. net.

S. A. S.—'The second leader of an orchestra' is not a term in general use. It may refer to the colleague of the principal violin at the first desk.

E. C.—(1) Professor Prout's new edition of the 'Messiah' will probably be ready in the autumn; (2) 'Organ Construction,' by Dr. J. W. Hinton.

I. M. F.—We are sorry that we cannot give information in regard to private 'schools of music.'

H. G. C.—Tschaïkowsky's 'Chanson Triste' is arranged for the organ by Mr. E. H. Lemare.

St. Dunstan.—Yes, Dr. Pole's 'Hundredth Psalm' is published—by Messrs. Novello, price one shilling net.

Calendar.—A notice of three calendar months given on May 16 would expire on August 16.

D. B.—For studies in sight-singing see Book 91 of Novello's School Songs Series.

A. J. H.—We do not think that the 'Four canzonets for two voices' by Samuel Webbe have been republished.

THE TIMES.

The work begins with a short instrumental introduction, in which the composer makes use of the opening seven notes of his hymn tune, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The Te Deum then opens with a unison passage for the voices, and proceeds with broad choral effects, mostly diatonic. Perhaps the most notable feature occurs at the words "Holy, Holy, Holy," which are sung in unison at the same pitch, the basses and tenors being on the highest and the trebles on the lowest register of their voices. As it reaches the words "The glorious company of the Apostles" the music becomes more animated. There is a soft middle part beginning with the words "When Thou tookest upon Thee to deliver man," while the passage beginning "Thou sittest at the right hand of God" is introduced by the trebles, the music becoming slightly animated, and ending with a figure which is employed through two or three pages of the work. At the passage beginning "Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin," the air of "Onward, Christian Soldiers" is again introduced, the tune being ultimately played through twice by the band.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The composer's own tune, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," forms the dominant musical thought. Its leading phrase occurs in the opening bars, and, as the work proceeds, becomes conspicuous till, in the closing number, the orchestra has the complete tune, given out with energy and effect, while the voice parts pursue their own independent course. Apart from what is incidental, the "Te Deum" honours the traditions of English church music. It is grave, restrained, solid, with enough of sentiment to satisfy modern taste. Its prevailing diatonic harmony and an occasional touch of scholasticism are kindred features, while the work is everywhere pervaded by the refinement and distinction never absent from the composer's productions.

STANDARD.

Several of the passages of the great Eastern Hymn of Praise are set in a remarkable manner. The reiterated cry of the Cherubin and Seraphin, "Holy, holy, holy," is given by the choir in unison on middle C piano; a crescendo with a rise of a semitone is made at the words "Lord God," after which a diminuendo takes place as the voices sink back to middle C, the suggestion of the mysterious being heightened by the soft trumpet notes in the accompaniment. This passage ends in the key of C, and a very fine contrast is effected by a transition to the key of A flat through the chord of F minor at the words "The glorious company," the rhythm changing from duple to triple measure, and the tempo from allegro maestoso to allegro energico. The section beginning with "When Thou tookest" is opened softly by the tenors and basses in unison in the key of C minor, written over an effective "figure" in the bass of the accompaniment. The most beautiful section of the setting commences with the words "O Lord, save Thy people." In this the voices are expanded into eight parts, and only occasionally sustained by light chords from the organ. The verse beginning "Day by Day" is worked up to a fine climax, rising to fortissimo, and subsequently subsiding to piano. The initial phrase of the hymn tune is heard in the accompaniment, and the voices give out the principal vocal theme at the words "Vouchsafe, O Lord," but this time andante expressivo. The vocal parts are again but very lightly accompanied, until the horns begin softly the hymn tune, which is continued until the close is reached, with fine effect.

MORNING POST.

The Te Deum is simple in style. . . . The opening portion for chorus in four parts is highly effective. The basses in unison usher in the words "To Thee all angels cry aloud," the tenors and sopranos successively joining in. The composer has realised an effect in contrast by making the voices whisper the word "Holy" in unison. The succeeding Allegro energico "The glorious company of the Apostles praise Thee," is very striking. The words "When Thou tookest" are set in C minor and allotted to tenors and basses in unison, accompanied by a "ground bass" slightly suggestive of Meyerbeer. At "When Thou hadst overcome" the sopranos and altos enter. The section beginning at the passage "Lord, save Thy people" is most impressive, and the "Te Deum" works up to a fine triumphal climax at the close.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

This second contribution of the departed composer to the thanksgiving of a nation preserves the very best traditions of Anglican church music, and is a distinct advance on the first. While restrained, it is majestic in conception. Opening in E flat with a trumpet fanfare resting on a well-harmonised diatonic theme, the work changes into A flat, when the Praises of the Celestial Hosts are reached, and returns to the original key at the Incarnation. Following is an eight-part choral in B flat, succeeded by a return to the original theme, the finale lacking nothing in distinction, and completing a pæan everywhere bearing the impress of a musicianly hand.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The grandiose opening is of the simplest and broadest nature possible, introducing two bars from the hymn which we had just been singing, "Onward, Christian Soldiers"; then the full chorus opened with a grandly and sweepingly simple and brief introduction. The opening bars again make their appearance, and the parts are taken up separately by the Chorus, which lead to a beautiful and mysterious passage "Holy, Holy," full of originality and yet never tortuous or purely academic. Then the Chorus break away into a brilliant allegro movement, "The glorious company of the Apostles"; this continues for long in a vein of ecstatic high spirits and triumph, until a mysterious change, played with the utmost softness, brings us to what is possibly the loveliest section of the whole work—mysterious, highly original, and wonderfully reverent, "When Thou tookest upon Thee," which opens out into a short movement of triumphant choral expression, and which again slowly shades down through the mysterious opening to something less intangible on the words, "The Kingdom of Heaven to all believers." Then once again there is a triumphant outburst, culminating in a splendid eight-part chorus "Lord, save thy people," a mingling of many varying emotions, reaching its most magnificent development in an extremely original passage, where part enters after part "Day by day we magnify Thee." Then comes a hint again of the "Onward, Christian Soldiers," followed by the tender prayer "Vouchsafe, O Lord," developing into a fugal movement in which the mutterings of the same hymn are more and more distinctly heard, until the whole choir is merged into a grand fortissimo passage beneath which the band thunders out in most ingenious combination the full strains of the hymn (for skill in this sort of combination Sir Arthur was almost unrivalled) and the composition is brought to a triumphant conclusion. The work, I take it, will rank among the finest of Sir Arthur Sullivan's ecclesiastical compositions; it is full of intense fervour, and its musicianship is not short of splendid.

SKETCH.

It was Sir Arthur Sullivan's last finished work, and is distinguished by the singular vitality and the emotional vivacity which inspired all his best work when he was profoundly moved.

YORKSHIRE DAILY POST.

In the music, which is eminently diatonic, vocal, and broad, it is easy to recognise the influence on the composer of his early grounding in Anglican Church music at the Chapel Royal—an influence which was ever present with him, and leavened even the Savoy operettas. The sub-title of the work is "A Thanksgiving for Victory," and in the trumpet fanfare of the introduction there is an obvious suggestion of the motive underlying the composition. It is festal and grandiose in effect, but thoroughly practical, and there are no solo parts—which many will regard as a distinct recommendation—nor is there any formal division into distinct movements. At the words, "O Lord, save Thy people," the music is divided into eight-part harmony, and here the flowing, vocal counterpoint should produce a fine effect. Breadth and simplicity are aimed at throughout, and the Te Deum, sung in a large church by a great body of singers, should prove thoroughly effective.

BRISTOL TIMES.

Simplicity, directness, and effectiveness characterise this pure piece of devotional music. A most beautiful section is that which commences with the words "O Lord, save Thy people," where the voices are expanded into eight parts, only occasionally sustained by light chords on the organ.

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventual episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

The Manual contains an almost complete list of the orchestral compositions written by composers of all countries, from Lully and Rameau (1651) up to the present time—Edward Elgar, Camille Saint-Saëns, and Richard Strauss (1902)—a period covering 250 years.

The 5012 separate works for Orchestra scheduled in the Manual are written by 1337 different composers, and are classified as follows:—

Overtures	1272	Miscellaneous Pieces ...	434
Symphonies	588	Marches	467
Various Concert Pieces...	1542	Music for String Orchestra	709

A special table, showing the degree in which the different nationalities of the various composers are represented, is given in the preface.

An alphabetical list of the names of the composers is placed at the end of the Manual, and whenever it was obtainable, the year in which each composer was born is stated.

In order to keep "The Manual of Orchestral Literature" up to date, and make it absolutely reliable as a Handbook of reference, supplementary lists will be issued at regular intervals.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).

(Assistant Lay Clerk Westminster Abbey)

Mr. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—

"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.

"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH."—BROMLEY.—"The title part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionalism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

THE CORONATION OF KING EDWARD THE SEVENTH AND QUEEN ALEXANDRA IN THE COLLEGIATE CHURCH OF ST. PETER IN WESTMINSTER, AUGUST 9, 1902.

One's thoughts wander in pleasant retrospect while seated in the Triforium of the venerable Abbey on this Coronation Day. Through the mist of the centuries one can in imagination see a whole procession of Masters of English Church Music—men who, being dead, yet speak. First, Henry Lawes, Milton's 'tuneful Harry,' who set the words 'Zadok the Priest' for the Coronation of Charles II. Here are Henry Purcell and John Blow, two honoured worthies who composed anthems for the Coronation of James II.; and William Croft, with a setting of 'The Lord is a sun and shield,' sung at the crowning of George I. What would one not give to see in the flesh the portly figure of George Frideric Handel as, well-bewigged and in full Court dress, he led his forces of 'Italian Voices, with above a Hundred of the best Musicians,' at the first performance of his noble chain of Coronation Anthems! The onlookers on that occasion—the crowning of George II. in 1727—were indeed to be envied. And are not all these five masters buried in the Abbey, or within its precincts? Moreover, when (in 1870) the grave was being prepared for Charles Dickens, the red velvet on Handel's coffin was exposed to view. Red velvet is very much in evidence in the Abbey to-day, but one cannot help giving more than a passing thought to the great master whose dust lies mingled with the illustrious dead in Poets' Corner. Let us now pass to the Coronation of George III., at which we can fancy the burly form of good old Dr. Boyce, accompanying one or more of the anthems he is said to have composed for that ceremony. And later, at the Coronations of George IV. and William IV., the kindly face of 'dear old Attwood' is beheld in imagination. If no outstanding feature of musical interest marked the crowning of the fair young Queen, revered by all her people as Victoria the Good, the practical interest she and her beloved Consort took in the art is again called to mind at this brilliant Coronation ceremony of their son Edward, our gracious King.

The reverie is soon broken, however, by the sounds, as yet in the far distance, of the fine old tune Ein feste Burg, the melody attributed to Luther, with the incomparable harmonies of John Sebastian Bach. The strains foretell the approach of the Procession of the Regalia. Those forming it are the choirs of Westminster and the Chapel Royal,—headed and conducted by Sir Frederick Bridge—a quintet of players on brass instruments, the masters and boys of Westminster School, and the Abbey clergy. They have fetched the Regalia from the Jerusalem Chamber,—where it has remained over night in the custody of the Dean and Chapter—and having passed along the Cloisters, this procession is now wending its way Eastward, the choir, supported by the two trumpet and three trombone players, singing the noble tune (Ein feste Burg) to the familiar words—

> Rejoice to-day with one accord,
> Sing out with exultation.

Having reached Edward the Confessor's Chapel, a short service is held in that ancient sanctuary, and, in addition thereto, Tallis's Litany is sung by two Bishops on the steps of Henry VII.'s Chapel, though it is inaudible to us who are assembled in the Abbey itself. And here it may be placed on record that, by reason of the King's illness, the Coronation Service had been postponed from June 26, the date originally fixed for the holding thereof, to this day, August 9; and that in order not to cause the King unnecessary fatigue, the Litany is detached from the Coronation Service and sung as indicated above.

On the return of the Regalia procession, the time-honoured hymn—

> Our God, our help in ages past,
> Our hope for years to come, by Dr. Isaac Watts, the great Nonconformist divine, is sung, also in procession, to the no less old-world strains of St. Anne's tune by Dr. Croft, a former organist of the Abbey. At the last verse the Coronation choir join their perambulating colleagues, now nearing the great West door, in singing (in unison) the familiar melody, accompanied by the organ in addition to the brass, thus producing a fine, nay thrilling effect. These two hymns are not only really beautiful in their dignified simplicity and processional rendering, but they impart a religious note to the proceedings of this eventful day.

In regard to the alterations that of necessity have been made in the Abbey for the Coronation ceremony, it is a matter for congratulation that the architectural lines of the revered fane—and how exceedingly beautiful they are as viewed from this Triforium height—have not been distorted by the inevitable erection of galleries; the scheme of decoration is above reproach in its unobtrusive effectiveness. The band is located on the organ screen. It consists of seventy-five players (including the ten fanfare trumpeters), as against 117 performers at the Coronation of Queen Victoria; but to-day they are efficient players, which seems not to have been the case on the last occasion, sixty-four years ago. Then they were 'dressed in scarlet uniforms': now they are all clad in surplices, except the fanfare trumpeters, who are resplendent in their habiliments of gold and wear black velvet peak-caps. They, with their silver trumpets, are stationed in a row at the back of the orchestra nearest the West door of the Abbey.

Unlike the Coronation choir of Queen Victoria, which contained 'women in white dresses,' that of King Edward consists entirely of boys and men, all of whom, like the band, are surpliced, except the Children of the Chapel Royal, who are arrayed in their quaint garments of praise, the scarlet and gold Court uniforms of the time of Charles II. The choir, numbering some 430 voices, are divided into two sections, Decani and Cantoris. They occupy seats in galleries specially erected in the North and South Choir aisles. As this arrangement necessitates a goodly proportion of the singers being located behind the late Mr. J. L. Pearson's majestic organ cases, two sub-conductors, Sir George Martin and Dr. Joseph Cox Bridge, assist Sir Frederick Bridge, Director of the Music at the Coronation, in securing unanimity of precision so far as the choral forces are concerned. The plan, it may be remarked, worked excellently despite the risks attendant upon second-hand beats, so to speak. The choir is rich-toned, alert, and thoroughly efficient. The purity of the boys' voices greets the ear with all the charm of exquisite sweetness.

There is not a dull or weary moment, even from the early hour of eight a.m. The eye is feasted with the sight of gorgeously arrayed notabilities arriving one after another and passing down the Nave to their respective places, the rich-hued and fur-trimmed trains of the peeresses and Oriental splendour of the Indian dignitaries adding to the picturesqueness of this brilliant and memorable scene. Sir Frederick Bridge has, however, arranged a full programme of instrumental music for our delectation—thus ear and eye are almost surfeited as we approach nearer and nearer the culminating point of this historic ceremony. Coronation Marches galore help to pass the time pleasantly enough and all too quickly. They are conducted alternately by Sir Frederick Bridge and Sir Walter Parratt, both these gentlemen being clad in the gay-coloured State robes appertaining to the degree of Doctor of Music, worn over Court dress. Here is the list of Marches, &c., in which those marked * were composed in celebration of the present Coronation. By-the-way, six of these eleven orchestral excerpts are in the key of E flat, and one is next door to it—in D!

PLAYED BEFORE THE CORONATION.

6. Marche du Sacre ('Jeanne d'Arc') .. Gounod.
(Played during the procession of the Prince and Princess of Wales.)
7. * Prize Coronation March .. .. Percy Godfrey.

PLAYED AFTER THE CORONATION.

8. Kaisermarsch (with Chorus) .. .. .. Wagner.
(Composed to celebrate the conclusion of peace after the Franco-German War.)
9. Introduction to the 3rd Act of 'Lohengrin' .. .. .. Wagner.
10. March ('La Reine de Saba') .. .. Gounod.
11. Imperial March .. .. .. Edward Elgar.
(Composed for the Jubilee of Queen Victoria, in 1897.)

The words of the choral portion of the 'Kaisermarsch,' which is sung in unison, were specially written for the occasion by Mr. A. C. Benson, of Eton College, and are as follow:—

Hail! Lord and Master, Mighty Sov'reign!
Thou art crown'd with joy, thou art crown'd with love!
God of our Father, look down from Heav'n above!
Peace, peace be with thee,
May God guard thee, guide thee;
God keep thee wise to serve the State,
God keep thee true, God keep thee great!
God, we adore Thee, we implore Thee,
Save the King, Thy grace enfold him,
God, defend him, God, uphold him!
Strong in might, Strong in right,
Grant his heart be stayed on Thee, in faith, joy, and peace!

We may now turn to the music of the Service proper. And here an important innovation upon previous occasions has with satisfaction to be recorded—the publication of the whole of the choral music in one volume. Moreover, the selection of music showed a marked improvement on that of the last Coronation, to which reference was made in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1902, p. 18. The music sung at the Coronation of King Edward has been published ('By authority') by Messrs. Novello, and edited by Sir Frederick Bridge. The volume contained the following Preface, in the nature of historical notes, which, like the book itself, appears for the first time at any English Coronation.

[The original date of the Coronation, June 26, 1902, has been retained in this reprint.]

PREFACE.

The music to be sung at the Coronation of Their Majesties King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, in the Abbey Church of St. Peter, Westminster, on June 26, 1902, embraces a period of five centuries of English Church Music, from sixteenth-century Tallis to composers of the present day. The seventeenth century is represented by the honoured names of Orlando Gibbons and Henry Purcell, the eighteenth by Handel—with the most imposing of his masterly Coronation Anthems—and the nineteenth by Samuel Sebastian Wesley, John Stainer and Charles Villiers Stanford. Following the precedent of former Coronations, anthems have been specially composed by contemporary musicians—on the present occasion by Sir Frederick Bridge, Director of the Music at the Coronation, Sir Hubert Parry and Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Musick.

The processional anthem 'I was glad when they said unto me, We will go into the house of the Lord,' contributed by Sir Hubert Parry, is laid out upon lines conditioned by the ceremony. Its opening strains are sung by the choir of Westminster Abbey, but the entire choral force is subsequently employed in antiphonal response to the smaller choir. Midway in the anthem a break is made in order that the boys of Westminster School may exercise their ancient privilege of greeting their Majesties with Vivat Regina Alexandra! and Vivat Rex Edwardus! These vociferous exclamations have been incorporated by the composer into his anthem in a somewhat novel manner, as the Westminster boys, stationed aloft, sing their enthusiastic manifestations of loyalty, and are answered by the 'full-voiced choir below' in mighty unison.

The celebrated Litany of Thomas Tallis (or Tallys, as he himself wrote his name) was in all probability composed soon after the issue of the second Prayer Book of Edward VI. in 1552. It is not known whether Tallis wrote the music in four parts or in five; but the five-part version, from Boyce's Cathedral Music, is sung on this occasion. This time-honoured specimen of old church music possesses a beauty which age cannot fade, and as the late Canon Jebb has so well observed: 'Nothing can be more deeply religious than the effect of this sublime composition.'

The words of the Introit, sung at the beginning of the Communion Service—'O hearken thou unto the voice of my calling, my King and my God'—have been adapted by Sir Frederick Bridge to an extract from the late Sir Arthur Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World,' the concluding bars of the chorus 'Men and brethren' in that work.

The Service in E, by Samuel Sebastian Wesley, from which the Creed is taken, raised a storm of indignation when it first appeared in the year 1845. This was not only due to the new idiom of the music, but in a large measure to the remarkable Preface—really a manifesto—issued with the Service. In this he refers to the 'unvarying syllabic accentuation,' and the 'monotonous undescriptive expression' of the contrapuntal music of the dry-as-dust school, compared with the more natural style of poetic treatment, of which latter, it is hardly necessary to say, Wesley was so consummate a master. Wesley states that the Creed was originally written for treble voices only, 'to meet an emergency which occasionally arose at one of the cathedrals [Hereford or Exeter] with which he was connected, and that it was never intended for public inspection.' But an enthusiastic musical amateur, upon hearing it performed at Leeds, induced Wesley to write the entire Service, for which he remunerated the composer with the sum of fifty guineas. The Creed, therefore, is the parent of the Service known as 'Wesley in E,' and was composed by Wesley before he became organist of Leeds Parish Church.

The Veni Creator Spiritus, 'Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire,' is sung to the Ancient Plain-song—the voices in unison with organ accompaniment—a treatment admirably befitting its old-world character.

'Zadok the Priest' forms one of that noble chain of four anthems composed by Handel for the Coronation of King George II. and Queen Caroline; moreover, this majestic work has been sung at every succeeding ceremony—five times in all. The anthem is performed at that part of the ceremonial where the King is anointed. It has been suggested that the introductory symphony (twenty-two bars long) was designed by Handel to represent the procession of the twelve tribes to the Coronation of Solomon, but this borders upon the fanciful. The arpeggio figure (in the violins) can be traced to a Gloria (probably the final chorus of the Psalm Nisi Dominus) composed by Handel, and dated 'Rome, July 7, 1707.' A writer in The Musical Times has recently unearthed an interesting reference to the first performance of 'Zadok the Priest,' which took place at the Coronation of George II. It is to be found in a curious old London newspaper called Parker's Penny Post, bearing date October 4, 1727:—

> 'Mr. Hendle has compofed the Mufick for the Abbey 'at the Coronation, and the Italian Voices, with 'above a Hundred of the beft Musicians will per- 'form; and the Whole is allowed by thofe Judges 'in Mufick who have already heard it, to exceed 'any Thing heretofore of the fame Kind: It will be 'rehearfed this Week, but the Time will be kept 'private, left the Crowd of People should be an 'Obftruction to the Performers.'

The Te Deum, in the key of B flat, by Professor Villiers Stanford, belongs to the seventies of the last century, at which time its composer held the organistship of Trinity College Chapel, Cambridge, wherein the composition was first sung. The opening phrase is one of the ancient Plain-song intonations to the great Ambrosian Hymn.

The words of Sir Frederick Bridge's Homage Anthem have been selected with peculiar appropriateness. It was at this part of the service that in former times the 'General Pardon' was read by the Lord Chancellor, attended by Garter and the Usher of the Black Rod, at the four sides of the Theatre, hence the words 'That thou mayest say to the prisoners, go forth!' come with particular point. In the last section a march, played by the orchestra, is accompanied by the chorus. The Homage of the whole world is, as it were, signified in the words: 'Behold! these shall come from far; and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.'

The name of Henry Purcell is one that is rightly honoured in English music. He was organist of Westminster Abbey from 1680 to 1695; moreover, he composed two anthems for the Coronation of James II. in 1685. He also took part in a similar ceremony, in the year 1689, when William and Mary came to the throne. On the present occasion Purcell is represented by an extract from his Latin setting (in five parts) of Psalm III., Jehova, quam multi sunt hostes. Its middle movement has been adapted to the words 'Let my prayer come up into thy presence as incense: and let the lifting up of my hands be as an evening sacrifice.' The music of this Psalm, first printed by Vincent Novello in 1844, is to be found in a volume of Purcell's compositions entirely in his own handwriting. The contents show that he began writing in the book in 1680 (the year of his appointment to Westminster Abbey), and continued doing so until 1683. As this Psalm is included in the volume, the date of the composition cannot be later than 1683: it is probably earlier. At all events, Purcell could not have been more than twenty-five years of age when he composed the music. This Offertorium is a remarkable specimen of Purcell's harmony, and the shortness of the movement is in inverse ratio to its impressiveness.

The Sanctus and Gloria from the Service in A—orchestrated for this occasion by Sir George C. Martin—are by the late Sir John Stainer, sometime organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, whose name and achievements are held in reverent memory. The Sevenfold Amen, by the same composer—written in 1872 expressly for use in St. Paul's Cathedral—is sung at the close of the Prayer of Consecration.

The Threefold Amen of the celebrated Orlando Gibbons, organist of Westminster Abbey from 1623 to 1625, is taken from the anthem 'Great King of Gods,' of which the manuscript, in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford, records that this anthem was 'made for the King's being in Scotland.' These simple strains conclude the Coronation Service.—F. G. Edwards.

The Confortare, specially composed by Sir Walter Parratt, is a setting of the words: 'Be strong and play the man; keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways.' These words, selected from an ancient Coronation service, will be sung, accompanied by brass instruments, at that culminating point in the ceremony when the King is crowned—a most appropriate place for the composition of the Master of the King's Musick.

To return to the incidents which are preluding the arrival of Their Majesties. The procession of the representatives of the Cinque Ports, scarlet clad, of the Royalties of lesser degree, in which the octogenarian Duke of Cambridge is conspicuous, and that of the Prince and Princess of Wales, intensify the interest in the scene as the moments pass. If only the sun would favour us with his smile!

The approach from the West door of the first of the two great processions, that of Queen Alexandra, is the signal for the singing of Sir Hubert Parry's specially-composed anthem, 'I was glad when they said unto me, we will go into the house of the Lord'—strong, majestic music and much above the level of a pièce d'occasion. As the beautiful, Queenly figure of Her Majesty, with stately bearing, passes under the organ screen, the Westminster Scholars, stationed aloft in the Triforium, vociferously ejaculate their Vivat Regina Alexandra. Then Mr. Alcock plays an interlude on the organ during the progress of the King's procession. The Regalia duly makes its appearance, and the Westminster Scholars shout Vivat Rex Edwardus! But lo! the King has not yet entered the Abbey! Some error in signalling has been made. The anthem is, however, proceeded with, its final section, 'Pray for the peace of Jerusalem,' being beautifully sung, and the composition brought to a strenuous conclusion. An unexpected hiatus has evidently been made in the procession. However, all's well that ends well, and preceded by the Bishops of Ely, London and Winchester, bearing respectively the Patina, the Bible and the Chalice, His Majesty is seen to be advancing up the Nave with measured tread of regal dignity. He is arrayed in 'His Royal Crimson Robe of State, the Collar of the Garter, and on His Head the Cap of State,' according to the official order of 'The Proceeding'. The King's train is borne by eight youthful pages, who look resplendently picturesque in their scarlet attire. The Vivats are again sung, and from this point to the end Sir Hubert Parry's anthem is repeated. After the Archbishop of Canterbury from the 'Theatre' has presented the King to his subjects, and 'God save King Edward' has been shouted, followed by a fanfare played by the trumpeters, the Communion Service is at once proceeded with, the Litany being omitted as a part of the actual Coronation solemnity. Sir Arthur Sullivan's music falls with soothing effect after the blare of the trumpets, and the Introit is most expressively rendered.

Leaving any further description of the ceremony to the representatives of the daily and weekly press, we may confine our attention to the musical part of the Service. Following the Sullivan excerpt comes the setting, in the key of E, of the Nicene Creed by Samuel Sebastian Wesley, sterling stuff, although a product of his youthful period. It has been orchestrated for this occasion by Sir Frederick Bridge, and the wonderful precision with which the divided choir monotones the concluding portion of the Creed speaks volumes for the intelligence and musicianship of this fine body of singers. And how beautiful the music is! The usually strident voice of Archbishop Temple seems weak at this distance in his recitation of the questions put to the King in the section headed 'The Oath'; but we can distinctly hear the sonorous voice of the King as he says in solemn and emphatic tones: 'The things which I have here before promised, I will perform, and keep.'

The Veni Creator is sung, in unison and with organ accompaniment only, to the ancient Plain-song, and then the ear is greeted with the noble introduction to Handel's 'Zadok the Priest.' The anthem is nearly two hundred years old, and yet how strong and free from mere antiquarian interest are its stately tones. The choir seem to revel in the diatonic strains, so refreshing in their simplicity; and the manner in which the boys execute the rapid divisions in the last section calls for unstinted praise. There has probably never been better singing by choristers. After 'the Putting on of the Crown,' to give the official description of this culminating feature in the ceremony, Sir Walter Parratt steps forward to conduct his 'Confortare,' a setting, for voices with accompaniment of brass instruments only, of 'Be strong and play the man.' The music, quite unobtrusive and perfectly natural in expression, touches the opposite poles of dynamic force in its seventeen bars—from the unaccompanied softness of the voices alone to the fortissimo of the vocal unison reinforced with blasts of brass. To this succeeds the Homage Anthem, specially composed by Sir Frederick Bridge, a straightforward and vigorous piece of workmanship, in which the melodiously tender phrase, 'He that hath mercy on them shall lead them,' is sung by the Westminster choristers with great refinement.

'When the Homage is ended, the Drums beat, and the Trumpets sound, and all the People shout, crying out:

God save King Edward.
Long live King Edward.
May the King live for ever.'

These vociferations and their attendant Fanfare, as directed by the official 'Form and Order,' having been duly performed, the Coronation of Queen Alexandra takes place. Then follows the Offertorium, 'Let my prayer come up into Thy presence as the incense,' composed by the great master of English music, Henry Purcell. It is only fourteen bars long; but how wonderful its harmonic progressions and marvellous the modulations of these old-world strains. Do they not reach the highest point of poetical beauty in the exquisite cadence? And is not this the gem of the Coronation music? The Sanctus and Gloria in Excelsis, excellently orchestrated for the occasion by Sir George Martin, are from the well-known service in A by the late Sir John Stainer, whose devotional Sevenfold Amen is sung after the prayer of consecration, for which it was originally composed. Immediately after the Benediction has been pronounced the Threefold Amen of Orlando Gibbons, a former organist of the Abbey, is rendered in subdued tones by the choir—a fitting termination to the solemnity of this Coronation service.

During what is termed 'The Recess'—while the King and Queen, the Archbishop and others are performing certain ceremonies in St. Edward's Chapel—the well-known Te Deum in B flat, by Sir Charles Stanford, is sung, the composer's recent orchestration of the work adding to the effectiveness of a composition which needs no eulogy. Upon the reappearance of their Majesties, the National Anthem is given by choir and congregation with thrilling effect. The Marches and the Lohengrin excerpt already referred to are then played during the Royal processions to the West door. As the Queen and afterwards the King pass along the Nave of the Abbey, the pent-up feelings of this great congregation find a natural outlet in spontaneous cheering, again and again renewed, and heartfelt in its genuine enthusiasm. Thus is brought to a conclusion an event of the greatest historical interest in the history of our country.

If the recent serious illness of the King imparted to his Coronation a subdued glorification, the remembrance of it will not easily fade from the memory of those who were privileged to behold the splendour of its magnificence.

It only remains to be said that the whole of the musical arrangements were admirably carried out by Sir Frederick Bridge, Director of the Music of the Coronation and Organist of Westminster Abbey, who spared no pains to bring so important a feature of the great ceremony to a successful issue. He received able assistance in the matter of assistant-conductorships from Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Musick, Sir George Martin, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Dr. Joseph Cox Bridge, organist of Chester Cathedral. In the administrative department of his arduous duties, Sir Frederick was fortunate in the unwearied aid rendered by Mr. John E. Borland, orchestral secretary, and Mr. Henry King (formerly an Assistant Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral), choir secretary, both of whom rendered invaluable service.

Last but not least, 'full marks with honours' must be awarded to Mr. Walter G. Alcock, organist and composer to His Majesty's Chapel Royal and assistant organist of Westminster Abbey, for the admirable and resourceful manner in which he discharged the important duties of organist on this great occasion.

HORATIO PARKER.

America has been so very busy in material development during the formulative period of her history that little time has been left for cultivating the art of music as a national attribute. Uncle Sam and the almighty dollar have become so much a part and parcel of each other as to be almost inseparable, at least as a figure of speech. In the matter of mechanical invention, too, our ever cute cousins across the sea are hard to beat. But turning to less material things, what splendid names the literature, for instance, of the other side recalls! Let us mention a few in haphazard order—Emerson, J. L. Motley, Washington Irving, Edgar Alan Poe, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Whittier, Longfellow, T. B. Aldrich, W. D. Howells, Henry James, Bret Harte, and we must add Mark Twain and Frank Stockton—a goodly company of which any nation might be proud. But music in America has for the most part been in the hands of foreigners. No native composer in the higher walks of the art seems to have been born till the year 1839, when John Knowles Paine first saw the light at Portland, Maine. He now holds the important post of Professor of Music at Harvard University, and justly ranks as the pioneer of musical development in America. In the second half of the nineteenth century there arose such distinguished creative musicians as Arthur W. Foote, George W. Chadwick, Edward A. MacDowell, Arthur Whiting, Henry H. Huss, all of whom have made reputations beyond the great continent which gave them birth. One other composer must be added to these good men and true, that of Horatio Parker, who forms the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

Horatio William Parker was born at Auburndale, a beautiful village ten miles from Boston, Mass., on September 15, 1863. His ancestors originally hailed from Chelmsford, the county town of Essex in the old country, whence they emigrated in 1635. On both sides of his family his forbears can be traced to the best English stock; not a little of his intellectual superiority and mental equipment are due to this cause, and the inherited talents of many generations of gifted American ancestors, covering a period of nearly three centuries. His father, the late Mr. Charles Edward Parker (who died in 1891), was a prominent architect in Boston for forty years. He held the responsible post of Superintendent of construction and repairs for all Government buildings in New England, and he twice declined the appointment of General Superintendent of construction for the whole country, an office under the United States Treasury in Washington. The town halls of Chicopee and Easthampton, the Shawmut Church in Boston, St. James's Church, Keene, N.H., and Bethany Church, Montpelier, Vt., are monuments to his constructive skill and artistic taste—talents which his musician son Horatio has inherited in no small degree.

A GIFTED MOTHER.

How many musicians can trace their first love of music to their mothers! So it is in regard to the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Isabella G. Parker, a daughter of the Rev. John Jennings, is a highly-gifted lady of literary accomplishments. She has made excellent translations from modern languages, in addition to those from Latin and Greek into the mother tongue for her son's compositions. Her translation of 'Hora Novissima' is a remarkably clever achievement, and was attended with no small difficulty. The excellence of her original work as a librettist may be instanced in 'The Holy Child,' and especially in 'St. Christopher.' Moreover, the musical qualifications of Mrs. Parker are of no mean order. Her interest in the art has shown itself in a practical form, as she formerly held the post of organist of Grace Episcopal Church, Newton, where her husband and two eldest sons sang in the choir.

NATURE AND MEMORY.

The country around Auburndale is not unlike that of the English Midland Counties, fertile and beautiful, with rare spoils for gun and butterfly net. Horatio showed a great fondness for Natural History, and explored the country for miles round, bringing home all manner of treasures. He was a very acute observer and had a remarkable memory even in his earliest years. When only five years old he recited Browning's 'Pied Piper of Hamlin' at a school function, in a large hall, without missing a word or hesitating for a moment, and he delivered the lines with excellent expression. This achievement has often been alluded to by those who were present, but singularly enough his mother never knew how or when he learned the poem. It was doubtless a feat of memory, as Mrs. Parker was in the habit of reciting poems to her children, and the 'Pied Piper' was a favourite of her little five-year-old son.

A SUDDEN AWAKENING.

As a boy, Master Horatio positively disliked music! His mother tried various methods in order to stimulate in him an interest in the art she so much loved, but, to her great disappointment, her efforts were in vain. 'He was a dreamy little chap,' records the Rev. Dr. Shinn, minister of Grace Church, but quite suddenly a change came over the spirit of his dream. 'In the month of October, 1877,' writes Mrs. Parker, 'Horatio suddenly began to take great interest in music, to ask all sorts of questions about it, and to spend literally whole days at the piano, beginning at daylight, and stopping only when his father sent him to bed, perhaps at 11 p.m. From this time onwards he had but one object. Sports and recreation were left out of his life, and the necessary education was with great difficulty imparted in the intervals of music study.' His mother gave him pianoforte lessons. 'Such lessons and such work have seldom been seen,' says Dr. Shinn—'the teacher so eager to impart all that the pupil could receive, and the pupil so absorbed that there seemed to be nothing else in the world for him but music.'

He soon began to compose, saying he did not want to play music without knowing how it was made. When only fifteen years of age he set the fifty poems of Kate Greenaway, 'Under the window,' to music in less than two days. Each setting is a tuneful and characteristic melody with appropriate accompanying harmony, though he now smiles at those youthful attempts. He made excellent progress with the organ lessons he received from his mother, so much so, in fact, that at the age of sixteen he became organist and director of the music of St. Paul's Church, Dedham,—not the Dedham of Constable—and afterwards of St. John's Church, Roxbury, a part of Boston. At the 'hub of the Universe' he studied harmony with the late Stephen A. Emery, the pianoforte with John Orth, and composition with Mr. George W. Chadwick. He began to do a little teaching himself, but, to use his own words, 'not enough to do any harm.'

RHEINBERGER'S FAVOURITE PUPIL.

At the age of eighteen (in 1881), Horatio Parker left the New World and made his way to Munich. In the Bavarian capital he studied for three years under the late Joseph Rheinberger. He became a favourite pupil of that distinguished organist and contrapuntist, and it speaks well for the tuition he received from his mother, and for his own industry, that the famous Hofkapellmeister pronounced his organ technique to be perfect. Rheinberger thought so highly of his American pupil's attainments, that he selected Parker from his quartet of organ pupils to give the first public performance of his (Rheinberger's) new Organ Concerto in F, for organ, strings, and horns, at Munich. Several of the young composer's compositions were performed at the Odeon Saal by the orchestra of the Royal Music School, and received favourable notices from the German critics. At Munich, Parker made the acquaintance of Franz Lachner, the intimate friend of Schubert and a fascinating old man. Lachner's journey from Munich to Vienna on a raft was made when he was a penniless student, about the year 1825. He was a warm personal friend of Schubert, and walked side by side with him, both carrying torches, at the funeral of Beethoven. Schubert himself died shortly after this interesting episode.

GOOD WORK IN NEW YORK AND BOSTON.

Upon his return to the United States, in 1885, Horatio Parker entered upon the duties of a busy professional life. He became director of musical instruction in St. Paul's and St. Mary's Schools (for boys and girls respectively) at Garden City, Long Island. Soon afterwards he was appointed organist of St. Andrew's Church, Harlem, a part of New York, where he had a 'boy choir.' In 1888 he held a similar post at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Madison Avenue and Forty-second Street, New York. For several years he taught counterpoint in Mrs. Thurber's National Conservatory, an institution founded by that lady of independent means.

After eight years of hard work in New York, the composer of 'Hora Novissima' changed the scene of his musical activities when (in May, 1893) he went to Boston as organist and director of the choir of Trinity Church, of which the famous Philip Brooks was the minister. During the eight years he held this important appointment (till June, 1901) he had a large mixed choir of forty voices, all of whom were paid. This gave him the opportunity of performing, besides much other ancient and modern church music, the masterly church cantatas of Sebastian Bach, and, it need hardly be said, he took the fullest advantage of these opportunities.

YALE UNIVERSITY.

In the spring of 1894, being only thirty years old, Dr. Parker was appointed Professor of Music in Yale University. He was the second occupant of the Chair, founded in 1893 by the gift of a considerable sum of money from Robbins Battell, a Yale alumnus. Yale University, one of the largest and most important in the United States, is situated at New Haven, Connecticut. Last year it celebrated with much éclat its bi-centenary. Its charter, dated October, 1701, refers to the foundation as 'A Collegiate School, wherein youth may be instructed in the Arts and Sciences who through the blessing of Almighty God may be fitted for Publick employment both in Church and Civil State.' President Roosevelt bore striking testimony to its alumni at the Bi-centennial celebration last year when he said: 'I have never yet worked at a task worth doing that I did not find myself working shoulder to shoulder with some son of Yale.' It derived its name from Elihu Yale (1648-1721), a native of Boston, Mass., who, as Governor of Fort St. George, Madras, had acquired great wealth. In the year 1718, Governor Yale sent from Madras to the College, East India goods which sold for £562 12s.; also 300 books and a portrait of the King, the latter being still preserved. It was in recognition of the bounty thus so unexpectedly and generously bestowed upon the young institution—founded at Saybrook as the Collegiate School of the Colony, and removed to New Haven in 1716—that it was named Yale College in 1745, and Yale University in 1887.

A CURIOUS EPITAPH.

Elihu Yale is buried in Wrexham churchyard, North Wales. His tombstone bears a quaint epitaph, which, however, seems to have been edited in the process of restoration. According to Pennant's 'A Tour in Wales,' it read thus in the year 1770:—

Born in America, in Europe bred,
In Africa travell'd and in Asia wed:
Where long he liv'd and thriv'd, at London dead.

Much good, some ill, he did; so hope all's even,
And that his soul thro' mercy's gone to Heaven.

You that survive and read, take care
For this most certain exit to prepare:
For only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust.

A UNIVERSITY ORCHESTRA.

The buildings of Yale University now cover a space of about 3,000 acres, and represent an investment of many millions of dollars, apart from the endowments. The students number about 3,000, and it is stated that there are 10,000 living graduates of the University, of which Dr. Horatio Parker holds the honorary degree of Master of Arts. As at the University of Edinburgh, under the beneficent rule of Professor Niecks, the Chair of Music at Yale is by no means a lounge for an idle occupant to repose upon. The eminently practical nature of the American people does not stop short at a Professorial office. Professor Parker teaches counterpoint, composition, and instrumentation. He gives lectures on the history of music, and conducts six orchestral concerts every season. An additional orchestral concert is devoted chiefly to the compositions of the students. No anxiety is felt in regard to the financial result of these concerts. The orchestra is supported by the University as a laboratory for the Department of Music, where, as in a chemical laboratory, the students may, by means of their compositions, blow themselves up with their own hands. Courses in orchestration are offered by the University, and common sense requires that the means of practical exemplification of the results of studies in such courses should be available. Where have we in old England, or even in Auld Reekie, anything to approach such a boon and privilege as is enjoyed by the students in music at Yale?

PROFESSORIAL ACTIVITIES.

The inhabitants of New Haven, who number 100,000, have the opportunity of attending these orchestral music-makings at Yale University. Previous to each concert, Professor Parker delivers an analytical lecture, with musical illustrations on the pianoforte, upon the symphonies, &c., to be performed. A large male-voice chorus is always available among the students, though there is yet no regular organization. There is also an excellent oratorio society in New Haven which stands in friendly relations to the University, and has taken part in University functions. The orchestral concerts have hitherto been given in the local theatre, but a bi-centennial gift of a million dollars has effected a change in the matter of proper accommodation. A new concert hall—to be called Woolsey Hall—is being erected which will accommodate between 2,000 and 3,000 people. Moreover, it will contain an organ of eighty stops—the Newberry Memorial Organ, the gift of Mrs. Helen H. Newberry, in memory of her husband Mr. John S. Newberry, of Detroit. It is claimed for this organ 'that for dignity and grandeur of tone this new instrument will be unique in America, and will rank among the great instruments of the world.' Professor Parker enjoys a vacation of four months every year, and one year in seven is a Sabbatical Year—twelve months' complete rest from his ordinary avocations! Who will say that his lot is not a happy one?

COMPOSITIONS.

As a composer, Professor Parker has not only shown remarkable industry, but the quality of his work is of a very high order. From the subjoined list of his compositions it will be seen that the range of his productivity is very wide. His best-known work to English audiences is 'Hora Novissima,' first performed by the New York Church Choral Society in Holy Trinity Church, New York, on May 3, 1893. This excellent setting of the Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaix on the Celestial Country, formed an attractive feature of the Worcester Musical Festival—the Worcester of the old country—in 1899, when it was conducted by the composer. This event was made still more memorable for the fact that it was the first time a composition by an American musician had been heard at one of the Three Choirs Festivals during their long history of 175 years, or, indeed, at any English Festival. So successful did 'Hora Novissima' prove to be that Professor Parker was commissioned to compose a work for the Hereford Festival in the following year (1900), and 'A Wanderer's Psalm' was the result. At two Festivals in the West of England he will again be welcomed—by Act III. of his 'The Legend of St. Christopher,' at Worcester, in September, and the complete work at Bristol, in October. 'St. Christopher'—a setting to an excellent libretto compiled by Mrs. Isabella G. Parker, the composer's mother, and produced at the Albany Festival of 1895—is a fine dramatic work which offers abundant scope for variety and beauty of invention and development on the part of a poetic composer, and Professor Parker has certainly risen to great heights of imagination in his treatment of the 'Legend.'

The following is a list of Dr. Parker's compositions:—

OP.
1. The Shepherd Boy. Male chorus.
2. Five part-songs.
3. Psalm 23. Female chorus, organ, and harp.
4. Concert overture in E flat.
5. Regulus. Overture in A.
6. Ballad of a Knight and his Daughter.
7. Symphony in C minor.
8. King Trojan. Ballad for chorus and orchestra.
9. Five pieces for pianoforte.
10. Three love songs for a tenor voice.
11. String quartet in F (MS.).
12. Venetian overture in B flat (MS.).
13. Scherzo in G minor. Orchestra (MS.).
14. Blow, thou winter wind. Male chorus.
15. Idylle (Goethe). Cantata.
16. Ballad of the Normans. Chorus (MS.).
17. Four organ pieces. (Set 1.)
18. Morning and Evening Service in E.
19. Four pieces for pianoforte.
20. Four organ pieces. (Set 2.)
21. The Kobolds. Chorus and orchestra.
22. Three Sacred Songs.
23. Six Lyrics for pianoforte.
24. Six Songs.
25. Two Love Songs.
26. Harold Harfager. Chorus and orchestra.
27. Two choruses for female voices.
28. Four organ pieces. (Set 3.)
29. Overture to Count Robert of Paris (MS.).
30. Hora Novissima. Cantata.

OP.
31. The Dream King and his love. Cantata. Prize Composition.
32. Five organ pieces.
33. Six choruses for male voices.
34. Three songs.
35. Suite for violin, pianoforte, and violoncello (MS.).
36. Four organ pieces.
37. The Holy Child. Christmas Cantata.
38. Quintet for strings in D minor (MS.).
39. Four choruses for male voices.
40. Cáhal Mór of the Wine-red Hand. Baritone solo and orchestra (MS.).
41. Suite for violin and pianoforte (MS.).
42. Ode for Commencement.
43. The Legend of St. Christopher.
44.
45. Adstant Angelorum Chori (à capella). Prize Composition.
46. A Northern Ballad for Orchestra (MS.).
47. Six Old English Songs.
48. Choruses for male voices.
49. Three pieces for pianoforte.
50. A Wanderer's Psalm. Cantus Peregrinus.
51.
52. Three Songs.
53. A Greek Ode, for chorus and orchestra, for the celebration of Yale Bi-centennial, 1901.
54. A Star Song, for solo quartet, chorus, and orchestra.

A NEW ORGAN CONCERTO.

The last work in the above list, which gained the Paderewski prize offered by the distinguished pianist last year, is to be performed at the Norwich Musical Festival to be held in October next, for which it was expressly composed. To the foregoing must be added much church music, songs, &c., which have been published without opus number. His latest work (Op. 55), now in the press, is a concerto for organ, brass and string orchestra, and harp. This concerto will doubtless be warmly welcomed by English organists. In all his compositions, Professor Parker gives evidence of a directness of expression which is too often lacking in modern productions. Whatever he has to say is presented in a coherent manner, and he never strives after effect for the mere making thereof. His scholarly and thoughtful mind is well reflected in his music. Gifted with melodic invention, he disdains not the use of counterpoint to serve his end—that end, however, being an artistic production, in which the means thereunto are kept in the background. His choral writing is excellent, and he specially excels in music of a devotional character. The Yale Professor is still on the youthful side of forty, and his past achievements undoubtedly point to the hope of still greater things to come.

HOBBIES.

In regard to hobbies, Professor Parker is an ardent cyclist. For many years he has spent most of his summer vacations in Europe, and has journeyed over a great part of England and most of the Bavarian, Tyrolese, and Swiss Alps on foot or on the wheel. He is fond of mountain climbing or 'any other occupation which promotes a rapid change of tissue.' Having had this last College year free, he has spent it in Europe studying European music as a disinterested listener, chiefly in Germany and France, and in composing.

ENGLAND AND ENGLISH MUSICIANS.

As to his visits to the old country, Professor Parker may speak in his own words:—

'Since my first visit to England I have felt very much at home in that country. It seemed at first as though I was visiting relatives of whom I had always heard, but whom I never had seen. I have had most delightful experience of English hospitality, and feel a profound admiration for that distinctly Anglo-Saxon institution as well as gratitude for the cordial frankness and good-will I have always met among my British colleagues.

'My first experience with an English chorus was rather amusing. I attended a rehearsal with the understanding that it was to be strictly as a listener, but the conductor was delayed by a lame locomotive somewhere in Yorkshire and I had to conduct. There were a few misunderstandings. What is called a "pause" in England we call a "hold" in America. I did not know what minims and breves and crotchets were—we call them half, and whole, and quarter notes. But we soon got into sympathy, and I enjoyed the practice thoroughly. The best English choruses are quite the best choruses in the world. I have great hopes for English music. With Cowen, Elgar, Mackenzie, Parry, and Stanford the nation has made great progress within my own memory. The Germans and French have made enormous strides in recent years, but I am not sure that they are in a direction in which Anglo-Saxons need strive to follow. I hope for a powerful school of Anglo-Saxon music in time,—less subjective and nerve-racking than that of Continental races, more broad, reserved and self-contained, with a larger respect for that economy of resource which characterises all true artistry, and I hope that Americans may bear their part in the development of this school.'

PERSONALITY.

As to the personality of the subject of this biographical sketch, it may be said at the outset that throughout his life he has been a very hard worker. He has often been heard to say that his talent consisted in a willingness to work more hours a day than others. When he was preparing to go to Munich his mother begged him to take a holiday. He replied: 'Life is too short, mother; there is not half time enough for what a fellow wants to do.' Underneath his quiet, thoughtful manner there is an earnestness of purpose and strenuousness of intent that go far towards the making of a strong individuality. Cultured, courteous, considerate, he possesses those old-world manners that denote the true gentleman. He is, moreover, an exceedingly congenial companion; thus it is no wonder that one of his London friends lately greeted him with 'Yale fellow, well met!' The recent conferment upon him of the honorary degree of Doctor in Music by the University of Cambridge has set the seal of commendation, so far as England is concerned, on the art-work of one of America's gifted sons.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH:

PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

By Professor Prout.

PART II.

No. 22.—Chorus.—'Behold the Lamb of God.' In this movement I have, for the reasons given in speaking of No. 5, shortened the first quaver of the opening subject, and adopted throughout what I have no doubt was Handel's own reading:—

In bars 7 and 8 the words in the treble are wrong in every edition I have seen:—

which gives an uncomfortable wrong accent to the second 'taketh.' It is true that Handel at first wrote it thus, but he afterwards corrected it in the autograph to—

Another improved reading of the text is furnished by Mr. Goldschmidt's copy. At bars 11 and 12 the autograph and all printed editions have in the treble—

In Mr. Goldschmidt's score the word 'Behold' is substituted for the repetition of the words 'of God' at the end of the bar—a manifest improvement. Both these corrections I have naturally incorporated in the text.

A far more important correction has been made in bar 16. All editions, following Walsh, as usual, give the treble thus:—

The E at the fourth note of the bar is simply a misprint; in Handel's autograph D is perfectly distinct, both in the treble and in the first violin part; yet, in spite of the unpleasant effect of the E, even Franz did not take the trouble to refer to the facsimile! At bar 18 Handel writes in the treble—not , as invariably printed. At bar 25 the second beat in the alto and tenor is , not ; the voices move with the bass. In the final chord of this chorus Handel has omitted the third. As he has done so in no other number of the oratorio, I feel little doubt that he intended the effect of the bare fifth, exactly as Mozart did at the end of the Kyrie of his 'Requiem'; I have therefore deleted the third which appears in Mozart's bassoon part. I have made no addition to the score of this movement except a fully written out organ part.

No. 23.—Air.—'He was despised.' There is only one point to be noticed with regard to the text of this air. At bar 20 Handel's autograph has—

Some editions print A♭, and others A♮ here, either being possible. In the Dublin score the leaf is missing; but Mr. Goldschmidt's has a ♮ before A; and in Dr. Cummings's transposed copy in the key of G, a ♯ is put before the C. There can therefore be no doubt that the omission of the ♮ in the autograph is a mere oversight.

The last three notes of the bar are incorrectly given in all editions, except Arnold's, thus:—

As the autograph is here quite unmistakable, and its reading is corroborated both by Mr. Goldschmidt's score and by Dr. Cummings's transposed copy, I have, of course, adopted it.

In this, and in a few other numbers, Mr. Goldschmidt's score has a number of ornaments added in the voice part which do not seem in keeping with the character of the music. One example will suffice. The voice in this MS. begins thus:—

As the small notes here quoted are not in the composer's handwriting, I have not incorporated them in the text. In the score of this number it has been necessary to make several additions and alterations. In some passages (e.g., bars 11, 13, 25 and 26) the outlines of the harmony are not filled up at all; while in two places Mozart's (Hiller's ?) wind parts destroy the beauty of Handel's idea. The first of these is the addition of four chords for the wind in bar 33, where Handel had left a most impressive silence; the other is the cadence in bar 41. Handel wrote—I give voice and bass only—which not only destroys the effect of Handel's silence, but alters the progression of his harmonies. I need hardly add that I have removed both these excrescences from the score.

Here Mozart has introduced a chord on the third beat of the bar—

No. 24.—Chorus.—'Surely he hath borne our griefs.' Handel wrote this and the following number, both of which are in F minor, with only three flats in the signature. I have adopted the modern notation as being less likely to cause mistakes in performance. The opening of this chorus shows another case of the old method of notation discussed in speaking of No. 5, and also to be seen in No. 22. An examination of the music makes it quite clear that the figure should be in every case, and not, as written after a rest, In bar 19 the viola should read—

The manuscript admits of no doubt here; but Walsh printed C for the semiquaver instead of D♮, and other editors have followed him. Franz gives the correct reading here.

No. 25.—Chorus.—'And with his stripes.' In this number I have added wind and organ, as Handel himself did, to the strings printed in Mozart's score; the additions are throughout in unison with the voices. At bar 4 Handel at first wrote in the treble—then he added a dot to the F, and filled up the head of the G, making it a crotchet. He then changed his mind, and wiped out the head of the crotchet—apparently with his finger—thus making the voice part agree with the organ, in which the two minims have never been altered; but he forgot to cancel the dot that he had added. As the subject has two minims in all the other voices, I have no doubt that this is the correct reading here.

At bar 45 many editions, including Franz's, mark a flat to the D in the bass—for which there is no warrant in the autograph. Handel has D♮.

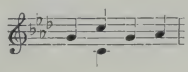
At bar 71 Handel writes in the alto—



The part was always sung in his time by men, and the alternative lower C is given for those who might find the upper note uncomfortably high. The upper C should alone be sung here; as the lower note is in the autograph I have retained it, but printed it small.

No. 26.—Chorus.—'All we like sheep.' The iterated notes for the wind at the commencement of this chorus—are so un-Handelian in character, and so unlike anything I have found in the other Mozart-Handel scores, that I feel but little doubt that here we have some of Hiller's additions. In any case, I have felt no hesitation in removing them, and in employing the wind to double the voice parts in the unison and octave. I have done the same in similar passages at bars 17, 33, and 52. But I have retained Mozart's counterpoint for the wind at bar 29, because it is an effective and ingenious use of Handel's own material. At bar 45 Walsh gives in the second violin part—and is followed, as usual, by later editors. In the autograph the F is a dotted minim. At bar 65 we have a parallel case to that just mentioned in bar 71 of 'And with his stripes'; the lower notes in the alto are an alternative reading for male voices. In the concluding Adagio I have adopted Dr. Crotch's reading of—in all the voices. It is true that there is not the same reason here for the change of Handel's quaver into a semiquaver as in the passages already discussed in speaking of Nos. 5 and 22; but the article 'the' being an unimportant word, and the musical effect of the passage much improved, I believe that Dr. Crotch's traditional reading, derived, as has already been said, from one who had played in Handel's orchestra, is reliable.

No. 27.—Recit.—'All they that see Him.' In this number I have deleted some marks of expression which are not in the autograph; the only piano indicated by the composer is in bars 4 and 5.

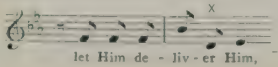
No. 28.—Chorus.—'He trusted in God.' In this number I have attempted approximately to reproduce Handel's orchestration. The wind parts are his own, as found in the parts bequeathed by him to the Foundling Hospital; the organ doubles the voices, according to his custom in fugues. His full effect will, of course, not be obtained, owing to the small number of oboes and bassoons in our modern orchestras.

There are several mistakes in the printed scores of this chorus; most of them are due to Walsh, who has, as usual, been copied unquestioningly by later editors. At bar 4 Handel writes in the bass of the orchestra—

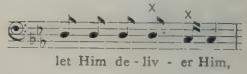
not, as printed,—

Similarly, in bar 8, the viola does not begin with a rest, but with an E, tied from the preceding bar—

In the autograph the three upper string parts are only written out when they differ from the voice parts, being in other places indicated by ut Canto, ut Alto, &c. In a few places (e.g., in the second violin part of bars 12 and 13) I have made them to correspond with Handel's own organ part. At bar 26 is an important mistake. In Walsh, and also in Mozart, the alto reads—



thus altering the form of the subject. Handel wrote E for the second quaver of the bar. The mistake has been corrected by Franz; and the passage is also rightly printed in some recent editions of the vocal score. At bar 44 all editions I have seen give as the bass of the chorus—



Handel writes ♪♪, not ♩.♪ here, as in the instrumental bass.

No. 29.—Recit.—'Thy rebuke hath broken his heart.' The only point to notice in this number is that Handel has written a ♯ under the last note of the bass. This note (D♯), which is not in any of the string parts, was doubtless played by the composer upon the harpsichord; I have therefore added it in the second violin part.

No. 30.—Air.—'Behold and see.' In bar 3 I have filled in the harmony indicated by Handel's figured bass. I have added a few marks of bowing and expression, and have deleted a superfluous shake on the third quaver of the last bar; in other respects the movement is as Mozart left it.

No. 31.—Recit.—'He was cut off.' Requires no remark.

No. 32.—Air.—'But thou didst not leave.' The passage seen for the first time in bar 3—is incorrectly given in many editions. Some omit the tr altogether; others place them over the crotchets:—

Mozart's arrangement of this air is very unsatisfactory from the numerous passages in which the harmony is not filled up at all. I have therefore thought it best to re-score the whole movement.

BRUGES AND THE 'SCHOLA CANTORUM.'

A NOTE FROM TOUR.

The mysteries of Bruges are not those of Eugene Sue. Not dark corners to show a lantern to. Rather facts which excite a dialectic marvel. In that sense mysteries. It is a marvel that an almost imperceptible operation of nature should first have made this 2,000-year-old town into the chief town of Northern Europe, then plunged it into obscurity; the land envious of the sea has pushed itself up here, so that first a marsh-land or polder-land has become a northern Venice with maritime opportunities, then later the good Brugeois have found themselves tilted right out of the coast-line with their opportunities turned into their ruin; and in proof the 700-year-old Belfry leaning 15 inches N.E. It is a marvel that a town never exceeding about a mile in longest axis should have played such a part in history. It is a marvel that men should have devised such a romantic obliquity as the central 'Grand' Place,' which in shape is what children would make playing bricks. It is a marvel that Bruges should have concentrated within itself all the feminine beauty of West Flanders; it is the heart of a once-Celtic country, perhaps of Pliny's Toxandri, and it may be suspected that the Spaniards of the 15th to 17th centuries colonized as well as ruled, while there are even Moorish traces. It is a marvel that the modern population keep their heads with a dual and absolutely diverging (that is to say Flemish and French) name for every single place, person, and thing. It is a marvel that the residents should maintain spotlessly clean houses above such reeking foundations. It is a marvel that a population drinking such water (and the mosquitos are of a giant brood) should not ere this have been exterminated. It is a marvel that white swans swimming in filthy canals for 2,000 years have not ere this become the rare bird of Horace and of our 4th Form reminiscences. It is a marvel that anyone (antiquarian or otherwise) should call this town, in spite of its reduced estate, a dead town; in that case a fallen acorn is dead. It is a marvel that Englishmen should know so little of a Flemish population distant only seventy miles, talking what is very nearly the same language as their own, and showing absolutely English personal features. It is a marvel that visitors who have discovered this town of exceptional allurement should (in spite of its drawbacks) ever get away from it.

In plainer language, Bruges is a singularly beautiful town of Northern Europe, with a unique history and record. Whatever guide-books with facile follow-my-leader may say, its name has nothing to do with bridges, and means the town of the brugga, bruyère, or 'heath.' It is called Brugge die Schoone, Bruges of the windmills, Maria-stad, the Venice of the North, &c., &c. It is astride of a stream called the Reie, is environed and intersected with canal upon canal, and was once fronted by an estuary the Zwin now almost silted up so as practically to put seven miles between it and the North Sea. It absorbs into itself, in a way too intricate here to discuss, the Legend of Brünnhilde the north-country wife of Gunther of Upper Burgundy, and the enemy but not lady-love of Sigurd (Siegfried) of the Rhine; regarding which in connection with Wagner the present writer might perhaps quote his own paper in the June, 1901, Monthly Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians. It was the nearest over-water landing-place for our forefathers, north of Portus Itius (near Calais) whence Julius Cæsar came to invade us. In the 3rd century St. Chryseuil (Chrysolius), the Armenian-born Bishop of Tournay, preached here the Christian gospel. The Municipium Flandrense (later Brugense), capital of Flanders, was a flourishing town when St. Ouen

A CORNER OF BRUGES:
LE QUAI DU ROSAIRE ET LE BEFFROI.

(Audoënus) wrote the Life of St. Eloi (Eligius) in the 7th century. In the 9th century it was a Bourg fortified against the French, with church to St. Donatian. By the 12th century various Counts of Flanders had developed its canals and its immense harbour, and in the 13th century it was the practical clearing-house for the whole of the German Hansa. In the 14th century, apart from its own cloth-making and tapestry, it was the metropolis of the world's commerce; and merchants from Bruges (then more than twice as populous as London) definitely founded the London Hanse.

Bruges declined in the 15th and 16th centuries, with the silting of the Zwin, the break-up of the Hanses, and the re-discovery of America, but chiefly with the first; and then gave way to Antwerp. The Bruges school of painting ran from 1200 to 1650, with John and Hubert van Eyck, Hans Memlinc, and less known painters afterwards; then it too went to Antwerp. The Bruges architecture shows variously beautiful and elegant private buildings in brick, less noticeable church exteriors. The former have predominantly gable-ends facing the street with corbie-steps (crow-steps, pignons à redents), such as those in Nuremberg and Edinburgh; and windows progressing through four marked periods. The chief beauty of Bruges is the totality, mixture of water, verdure, and building; but the detail is also wonderful. The view from the Quai du Rosaire here shown in illustration is one of the most fascinating. Bruges is more beautiful than Nuremberg. As to the interiors, it is needless to say that she is one vast mediæval museum; except a trouble in 1578, she has escaped great religious or political revolutions. With regard to the chimes in the Town-hall belfry, the most celebrated in Europe, Longfellow heard them (and moralised thereon),

> As they loud proclaim the flight
> And stolen marches of the night;

the resident of one or two days ceases to hear them, as one ceases to hear cicadas in a forest. For music Bruges only shared the general Flemish School, running from Dufay to Roland de Lattre (di Lasso), or from about 1400 to about 1600, and had no special school of her own; though she takes credit for the birth of Adrian Willaert. She is full of convents, is the centre of Flemish catholicism, and charity has survived political decay.

This is a long preamble; but when Bruges is visited for any purpose, 'Brugge die Schoone' claims first attention. The last ten years there has been a great revival of general life. In three years' time she expects to be again connected by ship-canal with the sea at Lisseweghe or Heyst, under the old general plans of Lanceloot Blondeel of the 16th century, and to play at any rate some cards against Antwerp with a 'Zee-Brugge.' Especially in art-conservancy and art-exposition is there a revival, and this year there has taken place her first great 'Exhibition of Flemish Antiquities and Pictures' collected from sources without and within herself. The Flemish exhibits are Coins, Damask, Embroidery, Enamels, Iron-work, Ivory-work, Jewellery, Lace, Linen, Manuscripts, Paintings, Pre-historic remains, Sculptures, Tapestry, Weapons; besides other things. The Exhibition is open from June 15 to September 15 current. The Historical and Archæological Federation of Belgium has held its 16th Congress during course of proceedings, or from August 10 to 15. Seizing the opportunity the 'Schola Cantorum' of Paris have organised a propagandist Music Festival in Bruges, in which they have themselves played the chief part, lasting from August 7 to 10. This has now to be explained.

Off the Rue St. Antoine, Paris, and behind the Hôtel de Ville, is the church dedicated to the First-century brother-martyrs of Ravenna, SS. Gervasius and Protasius, otherwise the church of St. Gervais, founded in 1420, large and beautiful, and not many years ago restored. The acoustics of the building are admirable. About thirteen years ago the curé of the parish, the venerable Canon de Bussy, appointed a young man, Charles Bordes, a pupil of César Franck, to the maîtrise or choir, with a clean slate before him. Whether as the pupil of a strict school, or from innate qualities, Bordes displayed exceptional energy, in the direction both of the plain-chant and of the part-music. Breaking special ground for the latter in June, 1890, with a festival performance of his master's three-part Mass (Franck died five months later), he attracted Paris on February 8, 1891, by performing in a similar way Schumann's posthumous four-part Mass (op. 147). On March 26, 1891, with Julien Tiersot, another pupil of Franck's and Assistant Librarian of the Conservatoire, as co-conductor, he performed Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater' and Allegri's 'Miserere,' each for two choirs a capella; for these he ventured to introduce women-singers into the church, finding the boys not competent. In May, 1891, Schubert's Mass in B flat was given, but without success. On December 17, 1891, he gave as extra-liturgic works, a first performance of Franck's Prologue and second Beatitude from the 'Beatitudes' (sacred choral-symphonic-poem in nine movements), and Schumann's 'Adventlied' (op. 71). In Holy Week of 1892 the church choir supplemented gave a performance which for Paris was monumental. The Gregorian plainsong was according to the edition of the Benedictine Dom Joseph Pothier, abbé of St. Wandrille at Vonèche (following the Solesmes use), who has himself been called in France a modern Gregory. At the Tenebrae of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, at Friday Mass, and at the Matins of Friday and Saturday, was performed an extensive series of part-music a capella pieces by Allegri, Bach, Bernabei, Corsi, Gallus, Guidetti, Josquin, di Lasso, Lotti, Nanini, Palestrina, Pitoni, and Vittoria. The Bach consisted of two eight-part motetts. The conductors for all this were Vincent d'Indy and Bordes. The former held 50 rehearsals, the latter 103.

Consequent on this celebrated performance in 1892, a formal performing-society, the 'Chanteurs de Saint-Gervais,' was enrolled for extra-ecclesiastical purposes, with most careful co-operative details. In 1893 and 1894 'Concerts Historiques' were given in the Rue Rochechouart. In 1894 began extensive performances of Bach cantatas, too numerous to quote. Schütz was intermingled with Bach. In 1894 the 'Chanteurs' began provincial tours, taking this and that soloist, and making their first great success in South-West France.

On June 6, 1894, the movement took a still more general form, a meeting of clerics and musicians at the St. Gervais church discussing the reform of church-music in the Catholic church of France, and projecting an organization thereto directed. Other meetings followed. Meanwhile the Pope's standing committee at Rome for regulating the church service, &c., otherwise the Sacred Congregation of Rites, issued a decree on June 12, 1894, on the same subject. This seems at first to have fluttered the Paris dovecote, and to have been taken as the prohibition of activities other than at Ratisbon. The decree does not read so. The Paris movement at any rate went on, and shortly adopted four main theses for its objects:—(a) A return to Gregorian tradition for plain-chant, and where practicable the assimilation of different diocesan uses; (b) The adoption of Palestrina's music as a perpetual high model for church music other than plain-chant, i.e., for musique figurée (part-music); (c) The creation of a modern style founded on the first two heads; (d) The improvement of organ-solo music so as to mix with the above. The Association was to have duly enrolled subscribers, officers, &c. The maîtrise or choir-department of any particular monastic institution is called its 'Schola Cantorum'; furthermore the Christian Church had general instructionary 'Scholae Cantorum' even before St. Ambrose; hence this title was adopted as that of the new Association. Its functions were apparently to consist:—(1) In issuing a newspaper-organ, La Tribune de Saint-Gervais; (2) In giving exemplary performances by the agency of the 'Chanteurs de Saint-Gervais'; (3) In publishing a repertoire for the same and for organists; (4) In holding lecture-debates or 'Conférences'; (5) In instituting competitions for execution and composition; (6) In founding a teaching-school for church purposes. The educational operations of the Schola were to be directed to such matters as Vocal emission, Tempo observance, Phrasing, Use of legato, Accent, and so on; all this according to Benedictine practice. The notation was to be modern, halving the time-values, with G and F clefs only, and giving dynamic signs.

All the six functions above mentioned have been carried out, unless competitions are to be excepted. The Tribune appears monthly, about 32 pages, with contributions from Guilmant, d'Indy, Tiersot, Dom Pothier, and others. The 'Chanteurs de Saint-Gervais' (meaning a small chorus of mixed voices, with quartet of soloists) have appeared in about 120 towns outside Paris; they sing for profit, but a most exiguous one, and practically they give their services from zeal; they were in evidence at the 'Vieux Paris' in Paris Exhibition of 1900; in fact they are the best church-music choir in Paris. The music-publications are already of respectable volume, and come under these heads:—Sacred vocal works of 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries, in vocal score; organ-music of 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries; several other more modern series, for schools, &c. The lectures are a special feature. About the competitions no information. The practical teaching school has been opened at 269, Rue St. Jacques since 1896; this forms the official address of the 'Schola'; it has thirty-five professors, chief of whom are Guilmant and d'Indy, and some 200 pupils mostly adult; the instruction given comprises everything useful to a 'chantre' and to a church musician; Bordes (as in other departments) retains position of director; it has no Government grant.

It will be seen that a formidable concern is directed to a wide subject. A single musician (albeit a very modest one) drives quadrigas multijugas. A general society possesses an executive choir, a music-publishing department, a Journal, and a teaching-school. The future of such an organization cannot be foreseen. Being a reformer, Bordes already pays penalties. At this moment he is capite minutus, a revulsion of feeling towards the lighter church-style beloved of Parisians having driven him from the music-directorship of his own church of St. Gervais. And the title of the singers is so at this moment historic, not actual. But a powerful body of clergy, and some of the leading musicians of France and Belgium (e.g., Bourgault-Ducoudray, Gevaert, Guilmant, d'Indy, Ropartz, Tiersot, Tinel, De la Tombelle), are still behind Bordes; he is on the right side for evoking educated sympathy; as far as known the finances are sound; and a little persecution is a good thing—it is said camomile grows better for being trodden on. The Parisian movement of A. E. Choron (1772-1834), which came to an end with the extinction of French royalty at the Revolution of July, 1830, was the old prototype of this; the same having been partly revived by L. Niedermeyer (1802-61) in an institution called the 'École Niedermeyer,' with organ La Maîtrise. A German parallel organization on a large scale is of course the great society for German-speaking countries, the 'Cäcilien-verein für Länder deutscher Zunge,' founded in 1868 at Ratisbon (Regensburg in Bavaria), with its organ the Fliegende Blätter für katholische Kirchenmusik. The more distinctive feature of the eight-year-old French 'Schola Cantorum' would seem to be its propagandist and travelling executive choir; and this, it is believed, will come to London next year in connection with a Westminster Cathedral scheme.

This leaves little room to report the Bruges proceedings, August 7 to 10, 1902. They were equally divided between performances in the churches, lecture-debates at the new and unpretentious Trades Hall (Salle de la Gilde des Métiers), and concerts in the latter. The chief church performance was Tinel's fine five-part Mass of the Immaculate Conception in the Cathedral (director, Auguste Reyns). The rest were poor.

The lecture-debates (different persons stepping on to the platform) were of some note. M. Bordes acted as showman to illustrations. Baron Henri Cochin, deputé du Nord ('French Flanders'), gave a really eloquent harangue on 'L'Âme flamande.' Mgr. Foucault, Bishop of St. Dié, seemed an able prelate, with a suave tenor voice, the combination beguiling him to make mathematical theories about the plain-chant not consistent with its elastic character. M. Gastoué, second conductor, supported his chief. Dom Gatard from Farnborough said what was being done, or not being done, in England. Dom Laurent Janssens, Rector of the Benedictine University at St. Anselmo, Rome, with apparently a Cardinal's hat not very far distant from him, spoke with astonishing fervour in Flemish and French. Dom Pothier above mentioned showed that he carried the whole practical plain-chant question in his pocket. Mr. R. R. Terry of Westminster spoke up manfully (in English) for the English early church style. M. Tinel, the composer, Principal of Malines Conservatoire, Professor of Brussels Conservatoire, and who is expected to succeed the aged Gevaert, gave a lecture much applauded. Père Villetard, curé of Serigny, remarked on the Rassegna Gregoriana newspaper of Rome.

The music by the 'Chanteurs' (supplemented by local chorus and orchestra) was a plenitude, old and new. The unaccompanied Gregorian Alleluias and Graduals (equal voices or mixed) were a revelation of effect and expression. The manner of conducting them with two waving hands is curious. The music-styles illustrated were Franco-Flemish, Franco-Walloon, French, German, Italian, and Spanish. One concert was called 'Un Jubé Modèle,' or specimen organ-loft (not congregational or plain-chant) performance; Jubé is the rood-screen. There was abundance of Bach. Beethoven's 'Elegischer Gesang' (op. 118), in memory of the Baroness Pasqualati, died 1811, for four voices and strings, made a great effect. Franck's oratorio 'Redemption' (1871) was an exciting work, with inspired soprano solos and strong rhythmic choruses. England should welcome this warm style, and his 'Beatitudes' are to be done in October at Cardiff. Franck has the mysticism of Elgar, though more superficial, and walking in a more confined harmonic sphere. He is plaintive and melodious, with occasionally the Walloon joyous lilt. W. W. Cobbett's lecture at the Musical Association in January, 1901, should be read on the whole of this style. The free glowing methods of the 'Chanteurs de St. Gervais' might not suit lofty vaults, but in the concert-room they make old music live. The solo quartet is Mlle. de la Rouvière, Mme. de la Mare, MM. Jean David and Alb. Gébelin; each really distinguished.

The audiences were immense; 7,000 at Cathedral, 2,000 at Hall. The numerous priests apart, their outward appearance greatly resembled English audiences. But for intense interest, and united swift apprehension of musical and argumental points, these show a superiority over anything that is usual in England.

Occasional Notes.

The King has conferred upon Sir Frederick Bridge the Fourth Class of the Royal Victorian Order in recognition of the valued services recently rendered by him as Director of the Music at the Coronation. We understand that Sir Frederick has received from the Earl Marshal a cordial letter of congratulation 'on the great success and beauty of the music.'

An unusually pleasant if not unique function took place at the Holborn Restaurant on July 29, when Sir Walter Parratt was entertained at dinner by his old pupils. No fewer than 140 would have been present could that have been possible, but about eighty sat down to dinner, which was presided over by Sir Hubert Parry, Bart. Speeches were made by the chairman, Dr. H. Walford Davies, Dr. F. G. Shinn, Miss Rosamond Philpott, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, and Dr. A. Madeley Richardson. The guest of the evening, in responding to the toast of his health, thanked, in feeling terms, his old pupils for their great and constant kindness and for the honour they had paid him of which he felt so unworthy. In the course of the evening an antique silver urn, temp. George II., was presented to Sir Walter. It bore upon it the following inscription:—

To Sir Walter Parratt,
From 140 Pupils,
in gratitude,
July 29, 1902.

The King Cross Prize Brass Band, Halifax, had the honour of playing 'by command' before His Majesty the King, at Buckingham Palace, on the 8th ult., the eve of the Coronation. The Band, which consists of working men who devote all their spare time to the practice of music, fulfilled an engagement with the London County Council to play for a week in the Metropolis during the past month, when their admirable performances were much appreciated.

The 'descriptive' Gentlemen of the Press had a magnificent opportunity for the display of their genius in that direction at the recent Coronation. It must, however, be feared that in matters musical their high-falutinism exceeded the limits of their technical knowledge. In proof thereof, we have culled the following extracts, not from journals of the Little Peddlington type be it noted, but from some of the great London dailies. The first, a fugitive quotation, reads thus:—

In places where the bands were close together you got the music rendered as a fugue.

The performance of a Coronation March is referred to in these terms:—

Sir F. Bridge seized his baton and started off his orchestra on an inspiriting drum-and-trumpet piece, while the turned-up lights of the organ loft were flashed back from the brass instruments of the band, including the clarions of the State trumpeters . . . ready at the slightest nod to blow a triumphal blast that would make the ancient Abbey ring.

Sir Hubert Parry's anthem, with its novel treatment of the Westminster boys' shouts, furnished excellent 'copy.' Here are some specimens:—

Sir Hubert Parry's psalm, with storm of symphony, had worked to its greatest point.

It was the first shout of the Westminster scholars, and the clamour had not died away before the choir attuned the cry to music, and basses and tenors rolled the cry upwards to the altos and sopranos, 'Vivat Regina—Vivat!'

Their [the King's Scholars of Westminster School] harsh 'Vivat Regina Alexandra' being pitched in a key most effectively discordant to the march of the band.

The shouts of the Westminster boys shook the fane with the virile rhythm of their athletic voices.

Voice strainers, please take note.

One might almost imagine that the silver trumpets had all undergone operations for tracheotomy, judging from the following quotation, which, by-the-way, is not out of the Echo:—

The silver throats of the trumpets were lifted again into the air, and a wild blast from them rang across the choir, while, out of its echoes, followed, softly, as if it had fallen from them, Sir Arthur Sullivan's tender little introit.

Still they come:—

Wesley's setting in E minor [!] of the Nicene Creed.

This [a prayer] was followed by the anthem [Zadok the priest]—a curiously zigzagging, trolling, jerking, flamboyant, but yet effective piece of music.

Adjectivity in excelsis!

The swollen condition of one of the anthems attracted special attention, though the result of the swelling is variously stated.

The anthem swelled to a noble sweetness.

The grand finale swelled and melted.

Lastly:—

The Abbey shook with the ascending note.

Poor Abbey!

Apropos of the account of the Coronation in another column, the following in the handwriting of the late Sir George Grove is from some of his papers now in the possession of the writer of that article:—

BAND.

At the Coronations of various Kings, the Sovereign's Band is designated in the Wardrobe Book as follows:—

Edward VI.—'King's Majesty's Musicians.'
Elizabeth.—'Musicians.'
Charles II.—'His Majesty's Musicians.'
James II.—'Master of the Music,' 'Musicians.'
William and Mary. } 'Musicians.'
Anne. }
George I.—'Master of His Majesty's Music,' 'Musicians.'
George II.—'Master of the Music,' 'Musicians.'
George III. } 'Master of H.M.'s Musick.'
and } 'Master of the Musick.'
Victoria. } '24 Musicians.'

The Memorandum is headed: 'Scarlet cloth for the Band of Musicians.'

In the receipt, Fifteen yards . . . . . for the Master of His Majesty's Band of Musick.

George IV. and William IV. } 'The State Band.' 'Musicians.'

No mention of Master or Director.

In accordance with our usual custom we give a time-table of the approaching Worcester Musical Festival; it may prove useful for reference.

The following letter from Canon Ainger, which appeared in the Pilot of the 2nd ult., speaks for itself, more especially in the reference to melody:—

SCHUBERT IN LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

Sir,—I was present at a musical incident last evening, the most interesting that I have lately noticed as bearing on the musical education of the people, and I hope it may be equally interesting to your readers. I was on my way to call on a friend, at about half-past five in the afternoon, and had to pass through Lincoln's Inn Fields. As I approached that green and umbrageous enclosure I became aware that a band was playing, which I rightly assumed to be one of those that play in various public gardens and places under the direction of the London County Council. As I drew nearer I detected that they were giving a well-known pianoforte impromptu of Franz Schubert's. I entered the garden, and, skirting the crowd, waited to hear what would follow. I soon discovered that it was a pot pourri of very varied extracts from Schubert's compositions. Two of his loveliest songs—'Lob der Thränen' and 'Am Meer'—followed; and after one or two interludes, which I failed to recognise, the selection wound up with the gay and delightful strains of the overture to 'Rosamunde.' On my return from my call, an hour and a-half later, I succeeded in procuring a programme, and discovered that some of the 'links' in the Schubertian chain that I had missed were a Salve Regina and an allegretto from a pianoforte sonata.

As I have said, this is a very hopeful sign of an improving musical taste among our people, or at least of a really artistic ambition on the part of those who are catering for such taste. It is to be devoutly hoped that experiments of the same kind are being tried elsewhere, and that they will be persevered in. They should be carried on, no doubt, with great care and judgment, and too much should not be expected of the people at once. But there can be no reason why the lighter works of Mozart, Haydn, Mendelssohn, and Weber should not be given in abundance, and nothing better can be interspersed with them than the melodies of Schubert and Schumann, the lovely Volkslieder of Germany, and the standard old English songs, such as are contained in Mr. William Chappell's collection. It is melody that the undeveloped taste cries out for, and let it have the best and purest and most refined. Out-of-door bands for the people in summer are everywhere spreading. Let their conductors not throw away their opportunities.

Master's House, Temple, July 28, 1902. Alfred Ainger.

I should add, in justice to this particular body of instrumentalists, that they bear the name of the 'London Temperance Prize Band,' and that their conductor is Mr. S. Cope.

The same writer who has supplied the account of last month's Bruges Musical Festival (the 'Schola Cantorum'), which appears in another column, furnishes us with the following particulars gathered on the spot regarding the celebrated Chimes or Carillon in the Belfry of the Town Hall at Bruges. The Belfry tower in brick is 265 feet high; it is longer than square, like the tower of Magdalen College, Oxford; built as to its main structure in 13th century or earlier, it now leans N.E. 15 inches in the 265 feet; it is mounted by 402 steps. The big bell or Bourdon or Cloche de Triomphe in a lower chamber is distinct from the Carillon proper, and used for Fêtes only, or (in possible events) as a danger-signal; it weighs 12,295 lbs.; it was cast in 1680 for the Nôtre Dâme church, but transferred; it was baptized 'Marie,' the town being under special protection of the Virgin. The bells that take part in the chimes are 46 in number, covering four octaves from with all the semitones except low G sharp and A sharp. The pitch is as nearly as possible that of the present French Diapason Normal. There was a previous carillon in 1299, but these bells were cast mostly by Jacques Dumery in 1743-4. They weigh 44,355 lbs. The copper barrel (tambour) connected with the clock was made in 1748 by one Antoine de Hondt, and has 30,500 perforations for staples. The weight driving the barrel is 4,000 lbs., and has to be wound day and night every two hours, for which a gang of workmen (two and two) keep a turn and turn vigil, light-house fashion, and constantly signal their presence to the town by special strokes on the bells. The tunes are changed during the silence of Holy Week every two years. Those set at this moment are:—(a) The Hour, 'Lustige Brüder,' by Vollstedt; (b) First Quarter, 'La Czarine,' by Ganne; (c) Half Hour, 'Moederziel alleen,' National air; (d) Third Quarter, air from 'Cloches de Corneville,' by Planquette. The bells are of course all stationary and there can be no change-ringing. The usual clavier and pedal-board however are there (for fist and feet), and these strike the bells with other hammers. The pedal-board tallies with the clavier, being 16 notes, G to C; and the corresponding fist-levers are scarcely used. The music for the carilloneur (two-part and three-part) is played from book on a music-desk. The present carilloneur, Edouard Dupan, plays three times a week, or to order. In the belfry itself the hearer cannot distinguish the tunes.

The annual 'Return,' in other words, the blue-book of the British Museum for the year ending March 31, 1902, has just been issued. Turning to matters of musical interest in this official yet interesting compilation, we find that no less than 8,511 Musical Publications have been added to the collection, of which 8,063 have been received under the provisions of the Copyright Act, 257 by Colonial Copyright, and 191 acquired by Purchase.

To think that upwards of 8,000 compositions have come into existence in one year! What will become of them? In regard to 'the old stuff,' the 'Return' informs us, under the sub-heading Music in the Department of Printed Books, that

The accessions to the collection of Music have been more than usually important. The most noteworthy additions have been:—

'Missarum Josquin Liber Secundus,' printed by Petrucci at Fossombrone in 1515.

Four Bass parts of the very rare edition of the four books of Masses of Josquin des Près, printed by Pasoti and Dorich at Rome in 1526.

'Breve Introduttione di Musica misurata,' by G. del Lago, Venice, 1540.

'Intabulatura di Lautto, Libro Quarto, de la Messa di Antonio Fevino Intabulata dal Messer pre Marchiore de Barberijs,' Venice, 1546.

'Intabolatura de Lauto di Simon Gintzler. Libro primo.' Venice, 1547.

'Intabolatura de Lautto Libro Settimo. Recercari del divino M. Francesco da Milano.' Venice, 1548.

'Madrigali a cinque voci,' by Guglielmo Gonzaga, Duke of Mantua, Venice, 1583.

'Second Livre de Clavessin,' by N. A. Le Bègue. Paris, about 1680.

A set of the proof sheets of an unpublished Collection of Sixteenth Century Motets and Madrigals formed by E. T. Warren and printed in 1777.

In these additions the vigilance of Mr. W. Barclay Squire can be traced. The only specified acquisitions in the Department of MSS. are the following:—

English Operas, formerly belonging to the English Opera House, 1834–1841. Presented by Mrs. A. W. Arnold.

Autograph music of T. Attwood and Jacob Meyerbeer; 19th cent.

The replica portrait of Sir John Stainer by Professor Herkomer will be on view in the Lord Mayor's Vestry, St. Paul's Cathedral, during the present month. Its ultimate destination is the Music School, Oxford, as part of the Stainer Memorial.

The Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall were announced to begin on the 23rd ult., under the management of Mr. Robert Newman, and with Mr. Henry J. Wood in his usual rostrum as conductor of the orchestra. Several English composers have written works for this series of concerts: Messrs. Rutland Boughton, Ernest Blake, Josef Holbrooke, Charles Maclean, and Percy Pitt, while Miss Ethel Smyth will be represented by the dance music arranged by her from the opera 'Der Wald.' Of no less interest to musicians and amateurs is the announcement that on successive Tuesdays the whole of Schubert's eight symphonies, and the entire orchestral works of Brahms, are to be played; on Wednesdays the six symphonies of Tschaïkowsky will form the chief feature in the bill of fare; and Beethoven's 'immortal nine,' to be given on Fridays, are sure to attract large audiences. It is now thirty-two years ago—in 1870, the centenary of the great composer's birth—that the whole of Beethoven's symphonies were given on successive Saturdays at the Crystal Palace, and eleven years later (in 1881) that the Schubert symphonies were similarly set before the habitués of the Sydenham concert-room. We venture to think that the Tuesday and Friday evenings of the Queen's Hall music-makings will be popular in the best sense of the term. Mr. Newman announces the production of many novelties.

The splendid series of concerts recently given at New Brighton Tower deserve to be recorded with the highest commendation. The weekly programmes have been of great interest and sterling merit—one being devoted entirely to the works of British composers, when the names of J. C. Bridge, Cowen, Elgar, Mackenzie, Parry, Somervell, Stanford and Sullivan figured in the scheme. On another occasion, Mr. Granville Bantock, who initiated these concerts, conducted some of his compositions—the 'Eugene Aram' overture, 'Songs of Persia,' and the 'Dante' Symphonic Poem—in addition to Mr. Josef Holbrooke's tone-poem, 'The Skeleton in Armour.' Mr. A. E. Rodewald, the honorary musical director, is to be heartily congratulated upon the results of his artistic enthusiasm.

The Athenæum of July 26 contains the facsimile of a letter written by Clementi to his partner, F. W. Collard, and dated 'Vienna, April 22, 1807.' In this he says:—

> 'Dear Collard,—By a little management, and without committing myself, I have at last made a complete conquest of that haughty beauty, Beethoven!'

That 'haughty beauty' had just composed his Coriolan Overture.

Under the presidency of Dr. W. H. Cummings, the fifth Annual General Meeting of the Incorporated Staff-Sight-Singing College was held on July 26, at the Guildhall School of Music. The Annual Report was read by the Hon. Sec. (Dr. Hamilton Robinson), and was highly encouraging. Much progress had been made in the spread of the systematic study of sight-singing from staff notation in secondary schools, and mention was made of the fact that classes had now been started at the Guildhall School of Music for instruction in the system advocated by the College. During the year one hundred and sixty-three certificates and diplomas have been awarded.

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE 'ABRIDGE.'

The familiar common-metre tune 'Abridge' is one of those old melodies that have taken deep root in the services of the church, but concerning its origin we know very little, and of its composer still less. It first appeared in a psalmody entitled:—

A COLLECTION OF PSALM TUNES IN THREE PARTS
Adapted to each Measure as now sung in several churches, chapels and Meeting Houses in and about London: to which are added 2 Anthems & 2 Canons.
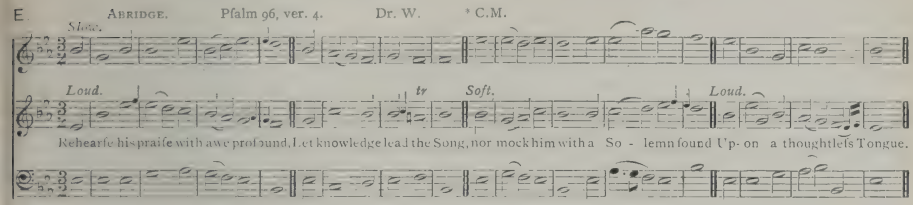
By IS. SMITH.
London: Sold by Mrs. Davenhill, No. 30, Cornhill; and Mr. Buckland, No. 57, Paternoster Row. Price 2s. 6d. unbound.

The tune is to be found on page 1 of the above book in the following form:—



The harmony is incomplete; the absence of the third of the chord evidently did not trouble those old folks, who may simply have revelled in bare fifths. The expression marks are interesting, as showing that in those long-ago days an attempt was made to avoid a bawling monotony in the service of praise, though the 'Loud' direction for the words 'Upon a thoughtless tongue' speaks more for good intention than appropriateness in the matter of expressive rendering.

No date of the publication of this Psalmody is known, but the year 1770 has been approximately assigned as that of its first appearance.

From the Preface to the fifth edition, 'with very great additions by S. Major' (of which the British Museum copy bears the written date 1790), we gather the following information:—

> The letter or key which seems best adapted to the harmony, is placed over each Tune. Some of them are placed half a tone higher, and some half a tone lower, than they are set. But the last note in the Bass will always point out the original key. . . . Those tunes which have a star placed before the Metres, were composed by Mr. Isaac Smith, a gentleman greatly admired for his fine taste, and to whom the public are much indebted for the pains he has taken to improve Church Music.

To the foregoing may be added a few extracts from the Preface to the original edition, written by Smith.

> Having been frequently requested by many respectable friends, to publish a Collection of Psalm Tunes, adapted to the different Metres, I could no longer refuse to comply with their desire. The Treble is omitted; because, except in choirs, proper voices are not easily found; besides, I would not unnecessarily increase the size of the book.

As to the qualifications of the Precentor, he says:—

> The person chose to officiate as clerk, ought to have a good voice, a good ear, and some knowledge of Music. I say, some knowledge, because, however desirable a thorough acquaintance with Music may be, it is not often to be met with; and common tunes may be very well sung by one who is not a perfect master. The compass of his voice should be an Octave and a Fifth; at least, he should be able, clearly and distinctly, to sound an Octave and a Third. A person not equal to this, is very unfit for his office.

After referring to the advantages of the pitch-pipe, and stating that 'in order to render this Collection as useful as possible, the musical directions are given in English, and not in Italian, as is the general practice,' Mr. Smith goes on to say:—

> It is much to be wished that every congregation would appoint an hour or two, some evening every week, to practice such tunes as may be thought proper. By that means, the mistakes of those who sing out of tune or out of time, will easily be corrected; and by being accustomed to sing together in private, they will naturally adopt each other's manner, so as to render this part of worship delightful indeed.

The biographical particulars concerning Mr. Isaac Smith, the composer of 'Abridge,' are of the scantiest nature. In 'Psalmo-Doxologia'—a psalmody published in 1823 and prefaced with a Biographical Index—we learn that he was clerk to Alie Street Meeting, Goodman's Fields, one of the Nonconformist chapels in London a century or more ago. He is said to have been the first Dissenting clerk to have received a salary of £20 per annum for his services. 'Latterly,' we are told, 'being in a respectable line of business, he declined that profession; but having a taste for music, he composed and published a number of Psalm-tunes, which are in very general use among Dissenters, and some of them in many churches.' The 'respectable line of business' above referred to may have been that of a linen-draper, as the name of one Isaac Smith following that avocation at 141, Cheapside appears in the 'London Directory' of 1780 and in subsequent years; a grocer and tea-dealer of the same name and at the same time was in business at No. 54, Margaret Street, Cavendish Square. Whatever the nature of the old Psalmodist's business, a sample of his 'fine taste' in music has been handed down to us in 'Abridge.'

Isaac Smith doubtless lived his life in quiet, humble circumstances, little thinking that his tune would be sung by countless millions of worshippers long after he had passed away. 'Abridge,' which is the only one of his twenty-five tunes that has survived, finds a place in the hymnals of all denominations. It probably received its name from the little village of Abridge, near Theydon Bois, in Essex, not far from Epping Forest. Possibly Isaac Smith may have been born at Abridge. In some Scottish hymnals it is designated 'St. Stephen,' a rather unfortunate change of name, as it is apt to cause confusion with the tune 'St. Stephen's' of similar metre, composed by the Rev. William Jones, of Nayland. Concerning the first appearance of Jones's tune we may have something to say on a future occasion.

S. S. WESLEY'S CREED IN E.

The freshness of youth and the vitality of its productiveness have been repeatedly demonstrated in the art of music—to wit, Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream overture, the graceful overtures of Sterndale Bennett, and, in our own day, the 'Hiawatha' of Coleridge-Taylor. In the region of church music, however, Samuel Sebastian Wesley stands out as a brilliant example, his anthems 'Blessed be the God and Father' and 'The Wilderness' both having been written before he was five-and-twenty years of age. To these must be added his setting of the Creed in E, sung at the recent Coronation, and to which reference is made in the article on that event in another column. It may not be without interest to give a further quotation from the elaborate Preface which Wesley contributed to the original edition (1845) of his famous service more especially in regard to the Creed.

For the appearance in print of certain portions of the following composition he would also offer a few words of apology. The Creed and Kyrie Eleison (No. 2) were written for treble voices only, to meet an emergency which occasionally arose at one of the Cathedrals with which he was connected, and were never intended for public inspection. . . . The Creed would not have been published by the Author's desire. It was a youthful effort, is without merit, and was intended for private use. This will, it is hoped, be a sufficient defence against criticism in respect to this piece.

Surely no one but the author would admit that this noble specimen of church music 'is without merit.' How many composers of the present day would be proud to have produced it, even as a mature effort?

BOYS ONLY.

The Precentor of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, the Rev. A. E. Herrman, communicates the following in connection with the Sunday services in the College Chapel during the Long Vacation, which, in their way, are probably unique:—

The choir consists of sixteen boys and members of the College. During the Long Vacation none of the altos, tenors, and basses are necessarily in residence, and the two choral services on Sunday are sung entirely by the boys in parts. The Ferial Responses and the Litany have been harmonized for four treble voices in the key of B flat, and the result is very effective. Dr. Naylor, Organist of Emmanuel College, has kindly adapted a Te Deum in A flat, originally written for tenors and basses, for performance in four treble parts, and he has added to this a Kyrie for boys' voices. At Evensong the Canticles are sung to chants in unison (there do not apparently exist any settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis for treble voices) and the Anthem is one for three or four trebles.

During this Long Vacation, among other things, there have been sung the first of the three motets (Veni, Domine) written by Mendelssohn at Rome in 1830; also Schubert's setting of 'The Lord is my Shepherd.' Of anthems solely for trebles there is a bound volume containing almost everything which has been published and is now procurable, the number being about thirty, in addition to complete works such as Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater.' Evensong usually concludes with the Sevenfold Amen, for S.S.A., by Agutter. A service such as this entails a very great deal of practice on account of the difficulty of getting boys to sing in parts (four to a part) with a satisfactory tone and perfectly in tune.

The gifted Berlin musician, Professor Heinrich Hofman, widely known as the composer more especially of choral works and songs, died on July 16, at Tabarz, in Thuringia, aged sixty. The number of his works, including several operas, is considerable. His symphony, entitled 'Frithjof,' first established his fame as an orchestral composer in Germany, while his important choral work, 'Prometheus,' as well as many of his charming cantatas, including 'Cinderella,' 'Melusina,' and others, are equally well known and esteemed by choral societies in this country.

Reviews.

The Temple. An oratorio. Words selected from the Bible. By H. Walford Davies (Op. 14).

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

There is something appropriate in Dr. Davies's choice of subject for his new choral work, written for this year's Worcester Festival. He is, as most of our readers already know, the organist at the beautiful old church of the Inner Temple, within the round chapel of which sleep many of the Knights Templars of old, an Order which I believe received its name from the efforts of its knights to tear the Temple of Jerusalem from the grasp of the Saracens. Yet when I heard that this clever young composer had chosen, for the central idea of his new choral work, the inception of The Temple by David and its building by Solomon, my first thought was, 'How is it possible to invest such a subject with musical and human interest, without which an Art-work is foredoomed to dulness?' On further thought, however, the possibilities of the subject opened up, and I rather expected that the composer had made his work a vehicle for the painting of a picture of Oriental magnificence.

David, 'the sweet psalmist of Israel,' has always been an object of affection to the musician, while the personality of Solomon is one that stands out boldly through the mists of the dim, forgotten past as the archetype of the Oriental monarch; a king famed, even in those days of prodigal luxury, for his supreme magnificence, yet, in his moods of repentance before God, as abjectly humble as only an Oriental can be; a man thoroughly imbued with a belief in himself as an instrument in the hands of the God he worshipped, yet, in his philosophy, as pessimistically pagan as an Omar Khayyam or any other of the numerous Oriental philosophers. Many others among the old Judaic kings seem unreal and shadowy personalities, but there is a reality and a consistence of characterisation about the Biblical narrative of Solomon's reign that compels belief and holds one's interest, so much so that we can almost believe the claim of Menelik of Abyssinia to be a direct descendant of the son of Solomon and Balkis, Queen of Sheba. So one would hardly have looked upon it as out of place had Dr. Davies presented us with a glowing piece of Oriental picture-making, brilliant with local colour, setting to luxuriously exotic music words which tell of the most magnificent piece of work achieved by this most magnificent of Oriental monarchs. Yet the composer has not allowed himself to be led into what many an English critic would consider a pitfall to be avoided, but has rather chosen a form for his work that is, I believe, much more acceptable to the majority of British ears and susceptibilities, I mean the much more austere and rigid mould of the 'oratorio'; for 'The Temple' is oratorio pure and simple. For the most part Dr. Davies's effects are produced by fine though rather complex choral-writing, interspersed with narrative and arias for the solo voices.

The very first page of 'The Temple' (which, by-the-way, is labelled Op. 14) shows us in what direction the composer's tastes lie. After four fortissimo chords the soprano solo begins the 'Choral Overture' with the words 'Let all the earth fear the Lord,' the six-part chorus joining in with the words 'Let all the earth stand in awe of Him.' So is the 'atmosphere' fixed; the work is to rely on its choral treatment for its effect, the orchestra being evidently intended to take second rank, a modus operandi which will come as a relief to many who dislike the tendency in many choral works of to-day to make the voices accompany and explain, as it were, the complex and emotional writing for the orchestra. After this impressive opening the overture starts off with a phrase for the basses—of which much use is made later on, serving as the nearest approach to leitmotiv that the work affords. After contrapuntal treatment for some forty bars, the chorus enters with a setting of the words of the fine old hymn, 'Before Jehovah's awful throne.' After the first verse has been given out, somewhat in the manner of a chorale, the orchestra is entrusted with what may stand for the second subject of the overture, commencing thus—and evidently a phrase intended to be suggestive of the Divine power, the chorus entering afterwards with the words 'His sovereign power,' &c. On these two subjects the whole of the dignified overture is built.

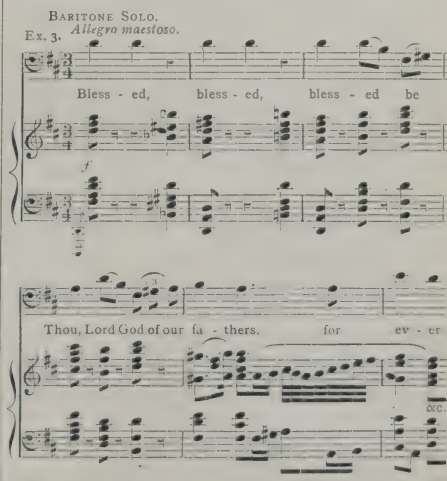
No. 2 is divided up between the soprano solo (Narrative) and semi-chorus, the words dealing with David's desire to build a Temple, the word of God, through Nathan, forbidding him to do so, and the prophecy that one should come after him by whom the work should be effected. Then we have a long and impressive prayer of David for help, set as a baritone solo and followed by a soprano solo and chorus, treated a capella and of great simplicity.

This is followed by No. 5, wherein the soprano solo tells how David assembled the princes of Israel and the mighty men, and acquainted them with his former desire, how its fulfilment had been forbidden, and how his son Solomon had been chosen in his place to bring his idea to fruition, the sopranos and contraltos of the chorus breaking in several times with the words 'Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, glory and strength.' To this succeeds David's appeal to the mighty men for help, and the rejoicing of the people when this is offered 'willingly'.

Then comes what to many will seem the best number of the work, 'The Song of Thanksgiving' (No. 6), an elaborate and impressive number, for chorus and baritone solo, beginning in this strain:—

Ex. 3.



Space forbids one to go into a detailed account of this imposing number, and neither the time nor place is suitable for anything like criticism, but I would merely point out the massive choral writing and the freedom of the contrapuntal treatment, as also the pathos of the solo 'But who am I?' &c., followed by the beautiful but complex 'Give unto the Lord,' written for semi-chorus and soprano and baritone solos. This leads back to the first subject (Ex. 3), now elaborated into a fine contrapuntal finish for chorus and semi-chorus. Then, after a short solo, 'And David died' and a kind of 'Elegy' for orchestra alone, entitled 'Solemn Interlude'—

Lento maestoso.

Ex. 4.

a soprano solo, 'Lord, into Thy hands I commend my spirit,' brings Part I. to a hushed conclusion.

Part II. commences with a narration—for chorus and soprano solo—of the building of the Temple by Solomon, and the placing therein of the Ark of the Covenant.

No. 11. is a chorus for tenors and basses labelled 'Andante Marziale' and of a strongly marked rhythmical character. It is a setting of the words 'We will go into the tabernacle of the Lord,' commencing thus—and followed by a double chorus, 'O give thanks unto the Lord.' The situation, though not the music, is strongly suggestive of 'The Procession of the Ark' in Mackenzie's too rarely heard 'Rose of Sharon,' and we would have pardoned Dr. Davies here if he had allowed himself a little local colour as did Mackenzie in his work; but the composer has evidently set his face strongly against such treatment, deeming it, perhaps, to savour more of the opera-house than the cathedral, so that we have to be content with a thoroughly English setting of the words, a setting that once more proves the abundance of the composer's technique, rather than the exuberance of his imagination. However, the chorus is a fine, massive one, as are all the choruses in the work, and evidently Dr. Davies's tastes lie strongly in the direction of this kind of work, so that it were mere hypercriticism to find fault when the work is so well done.

Andante marziale.

Ex. 5.

This chorus is followed by a soprano solo, No. 13, 'It came even to pass,' in the middle of which we have what looks like a dramatic piece of tone-colour accompanying the words 'The house was filled with a cloud,' though, not having the orchestral score before us, it is impossible to quite gauge its effect. It is certainly dramatic in the shortened score. Following this comes Solomon's prayer (No. 14), beginning 'O Lord God of Israel,' a number marked by great earnestness of expression. It is of great length and broken up by a quartet at intervals singing, as though in parenthesis, 'Hear thou from Heaven,' after which the whole work finishes with another massive chorus 'King of kings! Lord of lords!' in which much use is made of the first subject of the overture (Ex. 1). This number is of elaborate proportions, and after working up to its climax at the words—

> Firm as a rock Thy truth shall stand,
> When rolling years shall cease to move,

we have, by way of Epilogue, a setting of the words 'Howbeit, the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands,' the oratorio finishing pianissimo with the words 'Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in you.'

To sum up this rather discursive though inadequate analysis, we have in Dr. Walford Davies's new work an impressive and scholarly composition, imbued with deep earnestness of purpose, and never for one moment calculated to outrage the susceptibilities of an English oratorio-loving audience, yet, by its sound musicianship and clever, massive contrapuntal writing, calculated to call forth the admiration of the musician. Although the complexity of the choral-writing will place it beyond the efforts of the average choral society, it is a work that should receive numerous hearings, and one must congratulate the composer on having written, and the Worcester Festival authorities on having secured the first hearing of, a work worthy to rank beside the best works that have been done on the same lines by British composers. While we have young men like Dr. Davies who can write in this manner, we need have no fear of the traditions of English choral-writing dying out, traditions of which we are all so justly proud.

The Roll Call of Westminster Abbey. By Mrs. A. Murray Smith (E. T. Bradley). With illustrations and plans. [Smith, Elder and Co.]

The daughter of Dean Bradley is favourably known by her excellent 'Deanery Guide to Westminster Abbey,' the sanctuary of which her father has been the guardian since the death of Dean Stanley, twenty-one years ago. The unusual opportunities she has had of investigating on the spot, and in gaining access to the archives of the venerable fane, have resulted in the mass of information contained within the covers of this interesting and historically valuable volume. The authoress not only takes her readers round about the resting places of the remembered and the unremembered dead, saying so-and-so is buried here, but she furnishes us with details of their lives and the part they played in the history and the well-being (in some cases the ill-being) of their country. That 'The Roll Call' is a very long one, the index to the book at once bears testimony.

Of the twenty-five chapters into which Mrs. Murray Smith divides her volume, that treating of the musicians who sleep the long sleep of death within the walls of the Abbey or in its precincts, naturally attracts our attention. Most of the names are household words, e.g., Purcell (the inscription on his monument as here quoted needs a little correction), Handel, Henry Lawes, Blow, Croft, Clementi, Sterndale Bennett, and others. Mrs. Murray Smith does not profess to give all the names of those who are buried in the great Walhalla of Westminster, but in regard to the musicians, we venture to suggest, in the certainty of a new edition, the addition of the familiar names of John Banister, Pelham Humphreys, the Rev. Luke Flintoft (composer of one of the most beautiful of minor chants), J. P. Salomon, Haydn's friend, and Jack Wilson, said to have been Shakespeare's tenor. And should there not be a complete list of the Abbey organists who are therein interred? These names and those referred to above might at least be given at the end of the chapter, with dates and the locality of their graves. By this means the 'Roll-Call' would become more useful, not only as a guide-book, but as one of reference. A few slips of the pen may be pointed out by way of friendly correction. Purcell's grave was restored at the instance of the late Henry F. Turle, a son of the Abbey organist, who, by-the-way, was never Dr. Turle; Sir John Hawkins was the author of a history of music, not a musical dictionary; and Dr. Burney's Account of the Commemoration of Handel, held in 1784 (the first Handel Festival), appeared in 1785, not 1704. These are, however, as spots on the sun, and we feel sure that so fascinating and well-illustrated a volume will find a host of delighted readers.

Nights at the Opera. Wagner's 'Lohengrin.' By Wakeling Dry. [Alexander Moring. The De La More Press.]

This is one of a series of attractive little volumes which merit a welcome. The author, whose style is very readable, divides his handbook into five chapters—The Maker of the Music, The Story of the Swan-Knight, The Presentation of the Opera, The Characters represented, and Music and Story side by side. The result is a companionable multum in parvo; but in a future edition the tiny facsimile music examples should be type-printed and thus be made clearer.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

A Modern School for the Violin. By August Wilhelmj and James Brown. Nos. 20—28.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Several new numbers have recently been issued of the section of A Modern School for the Violin devoted to pieces for the violin and pianoforte. Messrs. August Wilhelmj and James Brown show excellent discrimination in their selection, all stages of proficiency and varieties of style being gradually provided for in the course of the series. Although primarily designed to be studied concurrently with the editors' twelve books of Technical Exercises and Studies—thereby completing their great scheme of including in one systematic school all that is necessary for the acquirement of the art of violin playing—the concertos, sonatas, solos, &c., comprised in these newest additions are, of course, of equal value if used in conjunction with any other school or method. The contents of each number are chosen so as to make them of special suitability to a distinct degree of progress, as far as can be graded by knowledge of the various positions of the violin; this fact must in itself be of considerable assistance to teachers when engaged in the difficult task of selecting pieces for their pupils.

Taking the present numbers according to their degree of difficulty, Twelve Christmas Carols, and Four Little Pieces, the latter by Pleyel, are for quite young players who have made a little advancement in the first position. There is no reason why the drudgery and dreariness of the pupil's first efforts to master the difficulties of the violin, or indeed of any other instrument, should not be relieved by the practice of pure, simple melodies, such as are contained in these two books. The Carols will specially help to impart expression, rhythm, and cantabile playing, while the pieces by Pleyel (arranged from the well-known Duets for Two Violins, Op. 8) will serve as an easy introduction to sonata form.

The Sonata in A by Mozart, and the Bourrée and Gigue by Bach, are suitable for those who have become proficient in the third position. The Sonata is that in two movements beginning with an Allegro molto— and followed by an exquisite Tema con Variazioni, a theme which may serve as a beautiful example of Mozart's power of melody. The Bourrée and Gigue have been arranged by the editors from a Suite in D, originally written for small orchestra. Besides forming excellent practice before attempting the more difficult works of the same character by such composers as Bach and Corelli, these two pieces may be recommended to teachers who require something suitable for violins in unison. Occasional practice in unison playing is very beneficial to young as well as to more advanced students. It not only helps to impart confidence to them, but also to impress on them the absolute necessity of a strict observance of bowing directions, phrasing, nuances, &c.

Haydn's Sonata in G (No. 8), is an arrangement by the composer of one of his string quartets (Op. 77, No. 1). Amongst the many pleasures to be derived from violin playing perhaps the keenest of all is that of leading a string quartet—when it can be done well. In this arrangement the first violin of the quartet can be practised with the (arranged) pianoforte part of the Sonata, and then the other instruments may be added ad lib. After all goes well with the quartet, the pianoforte part should, of course, be dispensed with. The violin part is not very difficult, but the performer must be well acquainted with the sixth position. We now come to the Concerto in A minor, by Bach, a delightful work which contains one of the most exquisite and graceful slow movements ever written. Two very popular solos form the next number—Rêverie, by Vieuxtemps, and the Sarabande and Tambourin, by Léclair. The editors have added to the close of the Rêverie two short cadenzas, either of which can be taken instead of the one supplied by the composer. To depart from the original text in performance cannot be commended, but the extra cadenzas will prove admirable little studies in octave playing.

Last of this instalment is Rode's Concerto in A minor. This is one of the finest of the old violin Concertos, and may be practised with advantage again and again by those who wish to advance beyond a mere superficial knowledge of their instrument. It would be difficult to overpraise the admirable bowing and fingering supplied by Messrs. Wilhelmj and Brown—not only to this Concerto, but throughout the entire series of pieces. Moreover, each number contains interesting historical notes, and many useful hints as to the best way of playing and practising the various pieces and movements.

WAGNER AT BAYREUTH AND AT MUNICH.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

One does not look for novelty in the works given at Bayreuth, but novelty in their production experience has taught us to expect. 'Der Fliegende Holländer' was the nearest approach to a novelty at this year's festival, having been introduced at Bayreuth only a year ago. Many have inclined to doubt whether this early work would quite repay the cost and trouble of an elaborate revival, but I fancy that most of those who have witnessed a performance will feel that it fully justified itself. It certainly illustrated in striking fashion the methods which distinguish Bayreuth. Stars are always discouraged, but in this case there was not an individual performer who could fairly be styled of the first rank, while as vocalists pure and simple one would hesitate before placing the majority as high as the second. The impression made by the opera was, none the less, the deepest in my experience. It was treated quite seriously as a drama, which the actors set themselves to expound, not simply contenting themselves by making the best effect out of their parts, and still less seeking to create a series of isolated musical sensations. This, joined with perfect stage management, artistic scenery, and the most wonderful stage appliances, accounted for the impressiveness of the production.

In the Dutchman there is a curious mingling of styles. The characters which appealed strongly to Wagner's imagination evoked, even at this immature period, his characteristic individual style—there are, for instance, many passages in the Dutchman's part which are big enough in their lines, and dramatic enough in feeling, to belong to a period quite as late as 'Lohengrin,' if not later. In other minor parts he would seem to have been hardly sufficiently interested to raise himself above the current operatic style. Erik is a mere operatic tenor lover, and his cavatinas have tunefulness enough, without a trace of the warmth of melody which characterises Wagner's later works. Daland is rather different. He is a thoroughly commonplace individual, with a veneer of heartiness that does not conceal a keen eye for the main chance. His superficial cheerfulness is exactly reflected in his music, though later on Wagner would no doubt have made it equally appropriate by different means. Now the point of the Bayreuth performance lay chiefly in this, that the dramatic significance of each character was carefully and consistently suggested. Emmy Destinn's Senta was full of intensity; she was possessed by her one idea of saving the unhappy man who had won her sympathy. Emil Borgmann had the hard, unpleasing timbre that seems to be the rule with German tenors, but he atoned by making Erik really a man, and not a warbling barber's block. Theodor Bertram's conception of the title part was thoughtful, but by no means convincing; he did his best, but the study was too apparent, he never felt the romance of the character. On the other hand, Madame Schumann-Heink's Mary and Paul Knüpfer's Daland were well finished and altogether excellent interpretations. The stage management was not only artistic, but the perfection of common sense. The maidens who listened to Senta did not all face the audience, or sit in stiff rows, but grouped themselves about the singer, and concentrated their attention upon her song. The ships were marvellously handled, but the Norwegian crew was rather inclined to be fussy, especially considering that its numbers were far in excess of any possible Board of Trade regulations. The spectral phenomena about the Dutchman's ship in the last act were for once above the level of pantomime, for they took account of the necessity of mystery. The ship was shrouded in clouds, and the skilful management of the lighting greatly helped the illusion. The whole work was played without a break, and took two and a-half hours, yet there was no suspicion of monotony, while the quickness and noiselessness with which the elaborate set scenes were changed was little short of marvellous. Mottl conducted, but was less successful in keeping the orchestra in its proper place than Richter, who directed the first of two performances of the 'Ring des Nibelungen,' on July 25-28.

Concerning this work, the chief thing to be recorded is that Richter did not fall into the Bayreuth failing of dragging the tempi, but gave the music all its proper warmth and passion, without, of course, any sacrifice of dignity and force. Gulbranson's Brünnhilde is a fine impersonation, and van Rooy is well known as one of the best of Wotans. Miss Wittich as Sieglinde and Burgstaller as Siegmund were excellent, but the Siegfried of Ernst Kraus did not commend itself to me. He, like many others of the minor performers, did not sufficiently consider the claims of vocal beauty of tone, but indulged in a hard method of production that occasionally approached shouting. His attitudes were forced and stagey, and he was altogether too pretty for this son of the woods. To some extent the same complaint might be made of Erik Schmedes as Parsifal, but there are in truth very few artists living who can quite satisfy one's idea of the character, and in many respects his thoughtful interpretation deserves great praise. Wittich was good as Kundry, singing beautifully as well as acting with dramatic power. Dr. Muck conducted the performance I witnessed, and did not drag it so much as one at least of his recent predecessors, though he took it more slowly than Levi, who conducted it under Wagner's own supervision. A new scene for the Magic Garden was a very decided improvement upon what used to be the least satisfactory piece of Bayreuth scenery. As for the audiences, they showed the deterioration that has set in since Bayreuth became fashionable, and there was not that intentness upon the drama that used to be noticeable, while its place was ill-supplied by an increased attention to the toilet. If 'smart' people once make their influence felt at Bayreuth, then good-bye to its artistic importance. But it is to be hoped they will drop it as quickly as they have taken it up, and I think this is not unlikely to happen.

MUNICH.

If imitation be the sincerest flattery, then Munich has made ample amends for its treatment of Wagner thirty years ago. Then, as is well known, it would have nothing to say to his plans for a special theatre for his music dramas, and, indeed, made the place 'too hot to hold him'; now it has erected, close to the spot on the bank of the Isar originally chosen by Wagner and King Ludwig II., a theatre which in all essentials is an avowed copy of the Bayreuth House. The only structural difference in the auditorium is, so far as I could see, a different treatment of the side walls, which converge towards the stage, instead of being in effect a series of recesses, growing shallower as they approach the stage. The contrast between the two buildings lies chiefly, however, in their decoration, and in this particular the Prinz Regenten Theater has a distinct advantage. At Bayreuth economy was, of necessity, the first consideration, though a certain impressive effect, due to the good proportions, is undeniable. At Munich, though the means have not been unlimited, decorative effect has been attempted, with quite exceptional success. The Germans are not as a nation conspicuously gifted with a faculty for colour, which makes this success the more remarkable. The style of the theatre is severely classical, and this severity is carried out in the auditorium by a colour-scheme of greys, bronze greens, and gold, perfectly harmonious, cool, and pleasant to the eye, and more satisfying, in the general impression it creates, than any theatre interior I can recollect. For comfort it is at least equal to the Bayreuth house, and, indeed, I understand that even a rather more liberal allowance of room is given to each spectator.

As with the building, so with the performances, a comparison with Bayreuth is inevitable. The means employed are in many cases identical with those of Bayreuth, and in no respect inferior; the singers are perhaps of higher individual ability—where the performances seemed to fall short of the Bayreuth standard was in regard to preparation. While of course far exceeding in completeness and finish anything one is accustomed to in England, there were signs that the work of rehearsal had not been quite so thorough as at Bayreuth. The chorus, an exceedingly powerful one (the exact number was 112), was well drilled, but signs of drilling were too apparent. The lighting was most cleverly managed, but the effects were a trifle overdone, and, on the whole, the art—which was undeniable—was not perfectly concealed.

The works performed were chosen to form a sort of supplement to the Bayreuth Festival, so that by attending both one could witness a series of all Wagner's dramatic works, from the 'Dutchman' to 'Parsifal.' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' Tristan,' and 'Meistersinger' formed the Munich series, and at the cycle I attended (August 15-20) they were given in the above chronological order. A few remarks on each must suffice. Mr. Zumpe conducted both the earlier works with excellent taste and much refinement of detail. The chorus sang with great vigour, and as 'Lohengrin' was given with few, if any, cuts, they had here an excellent opportunity for display. Sometimes their ardour overmastered them, and they inclined to run away from the conductor, but the effect of the important male-voice choruses in the second act, so rarely heard in their completeness, was very fine, and the martial vigour of the assembling of the nobles with their retainers in the last scene, which I suppose has never been properly done in England, was tremendous. Of the individual singers, Morena, as Elizabeth, commended herself by her grace of style and of person, and by her highly sympathetic manner. In 'Lohengrin' the vocal standard was somewhat higher. Feinhals, as Telramund, and Moest (of Hanover), as the King, were not only dignified as actors, but were good vocalists, their tone never degenerating into mere noise. Knote was an excellent Lohengrin in bearing and appearance, and satisfactory as a singer. In Tristan, which was conducted by Fischer, the level of performance was a very high one, thanks to the singing and acting of the chief parts by Nordica and Forchhammer (of Dresden), who were quite excellent. The glorious music was splendidly interpreted throughout, and the fine orchestra of 134 players came in for warm praise. The tone of the strings was quite superb. After the passionate intensity of Tristan the genial humour of the Meistersinger was very refreshing. It was conducted by Zumpe, who is a master of orchestral detail, and the performance was in every respect admirable. The difficult ensemble passages for the Masters which are so commonly muddled, were for once reasonably clear, and the cast was, collectively and individually, of exceptional merit. The Walther of a like-named artist, Herr Walter, was refined and manly, if not of commanding power vocally. The Hans Sachs of Feinhals had the right touch of geniality and sympathy, the difficult music of David was perfectly sung by Reiss, and a most interesting and able study of Beckmesser was given by Geis, who made the Town Clerk not merely comic, but conveyed the idea of malevolence, which is undeniably suggested in the text. Altogether, I think that 'Die Meistersinger,' as given in the city where it first saw the light, marked the highest level of the Festival. I, for one, have no great expectation of seeing a finer performance.

HERBERT THOMPSON.

TWO INTERESTING FESTIVALS.

HOVINGHAM.

The Musical Festival at the beautiful village of Hovingham, in Yorkshire, has been for some years past a highly artistic function, under the zealous and enthusiastic direction of Canon Pemberton. That which took place on the 7th and 8th ult. was no exception to the rule. On the first day Sir Hubert Parry's fine oratorio, 'Judith' was performed in a manner which would doubtless have gratified the composer—choir, orchestra, and conductor alike entering into the dramatic spirit of the music, while the solo vocalists, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mrs. Burrell, and Mr. William Green, were admirable exponents of their respective parts. The novelty of the Festival was Dr. Wood's 'Song of the Tempest,' given on the 8th ult., a work full of breadth and dignity. This was followed by the special event of the meeting, the performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the solo part interpreted by Dr. Joachim—in what manner it is needless to state, further than that the great violinist was in his best form and that he was most ably supported by the orchestra. The evening concert, which terminated the Festival, included Bach's Cantata, 'God's own time is the best,' Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto (Miss Fanny Davies, soloist), Mozart's E flat Symphony, and Bach's 5th Concerto in D major, in which Miss Davies played the important pianoforte part, while the more subordinate parts for violin and flute were played by Dr. Joachim and Mr. Eli Hudson. It is to be hoped that Canon Pemberton will be able to continue the direction of these Festivals, notwithstanding his removal from the locality.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The fifteenth of these Festivals took place on the 23rd ult., when one of the features of musical interest consisted of a concert by children, conducted by Mr. Charles J. Jeapes, on the Handel Orchestra. The important event of the day was, however, the great concert of adults (5,000 voices), under the able direction of Mr. Allen Gill. We give the complete programme of the adult concert:—

Coronation March	...	...	... Edward German.
Psalm xcv.—'Come, let us sing'	...	...	Mendelssohn.
Part-Song—'Love and Summer'	...	...	John E. West.
,, 'Who is Sylvia?'	...	...	Edward German.
,, 'O happy eyes'	...	...	Edward Elgar.
March and Chorus—'Hail bright abode' (Tannhäuser)			Wagner.

A word of special praise should be awarded to Mr. Allen Gill for his care and pains in rehearsing and conducting the large choir. His eminently practical notes printed and circulated beforehand to conductors of the separate choirs—especially those with regard to articulation—were excellent in their directness and common sense.

Miscellaneous.

The Royal Academy of Music announces a number of Scholarships to be competed for during the present month. We can only give a bare outline of the valuable prizes which the old Institution in Tenterden Street has to offer:—The Ada Lewis Scholarships (five: composition, singing, harp, orchestral instruments); John Thomas Welsh Scholarship (vocalists); Sir Michael Costa Scholarship (composition); Erard Centenary Harp Scholarship; the Maud Mary Gooch Scholarship (organ playing); Henry Smart Scholarship (organ playing and composition); Stainer Exhibition (value £20, organ playing). Full particulars, conditions, and entry forms, &c., in regard to the above Scholarships may be obtained from the Secretary, Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, London, W.

A choral Festival is announced to be held in Tewkesbury Abbey on the 25th inst., when Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's 'Emmaus,' conducted by the composer, and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' conducted by Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, organist of the Abbey, will be performed by the Festival choir with full orchestral accompaniment.

Mr. Georges Jacobi has been looking after the interests of English music at Dinard, where he directs the orchestral performances at the Grand Casino. Two of his programmes during the past month are headed 'Festival de Musique Anglaise,' and include compositions by Sullivan, Mackenzie, Elgar, Edward German, Percy Pitt, and John E. West.

The death is reported, on the 14th ult., of Ernst Wilhelm Fritzsch, the well-known music publisher, of Leipzig. Herr Fritzsch was the editor, proprietor and publisher, whose publications included that of the 'Musikalisches Wochenblatt.'

Foreign Notes.

Berlin.—Two State services of different character recently took place at the English Royal Church of St. George. On the 5th ult. a memorial service for the late Empress Frederick, who presented the beautiful organ to the church, and on the 9th the official service in celebration of the Coronation of King Edward VII. The music on both occasions was under the direction of the organist, Mr. C. G. Thomas.

Carlsbad.—The centenary of the birth of the popular composer of dance music, Joseph Labitzky,—a name almost as familiar at one time as that of Lanner or Strauss—was celebrated last month by the unveiling of a commemorative tablet at the house inhabited by him, and the performance of a Mass of his composition in the Parochial Church. Labitzky was for many years the conductor of the 'Cur-capelle,' or municipal orchestra, at this fashionable watering place, a position occupied at the present time by one of his sons.

Donaueschingen.—On the initiative of Prince Fürstenberg, a monument has just been erected, in the grounds adjoining the castle, to Johann Wenzel Kalliwoda, the once famous composer.

Graz.—The sixth annual Festival of German male choirs was held in this city in the last week of July and extended over five days. No less than twelve thousand singers took part in the performances, which included a most excellent interpretation of Wagner's oratorio 'Das Liebesmahl der Apostel,' under Herr Eduard Kremser's direction.

Lauchstädt (Saxony). — The Lauchstädt Theatre recently celebrated the centenary of its existence. This modest institution is associated with Goethe, who wrote a prologue for its inaugurative performance, when Mozart's 'La Clemenza di Tito' was produced, and likewise with Richard Wagner, who, in 1834, was musical director here.

Leipzig.—The Stadt Theater opened its new season on the 8th ult. with the revival of a little-known opera in three acts by Spohr, 'The Crusaders,' the libretto founded upon a drama by Kotzebue. The work was performed once or twice under the composer's direction at Cassel, in 1845, and, it is interesting to note, shows traces of the influence upon the much older master of Wagner's 'Der fliegende Holländer,' which Spohr had produced, in his capacity as musical director of the Cassel theatre, some time previously.——A bust of Richard Wagner has just been placed, in a prominent position, at the new building erected on the site of the house in which the master was born. Modest though it be, it is the only Wagner monument as yet existing in this city.

Lourdes.—The first performance took place last month, by the Toulouse Society 'La Tolosa,' of an oratorio, in three parts and a prologue, entitled 'Nôtre Dâme de Lourdes,' from the pen of the well-known composer of church music, Lucien Comire. The new work, which is scored for chorus, solo voices, and orchestra, was ably conducted by M. Petrus Soulignac, and greatly impressed the audience.

Marienbad.—A commemorative tablet has been placed at the house, known as the 'White Swan,' in the Kaiser Strasse, where Chopin resided in 1836.

PALERMO.—An oratorio, 'Judith,' by the young composer, Salvatore Averna, has obtained the first prize of one thousand lire in the competition opened some time since by the authorities of the Palermo Conservatorio.

SOFIA.—Under the title of 'Horo-Dance,' what may be described as the first national Bulgarian opera has just been produced at the Grand Theatre. The composer is M. K. Machanyi, who, as a matter of course, has largely availed himself in his score of the folk-song element of which Bulgaria is by no means destitute.

STRASSBURG.—A noteworthy performance of Eduard Grell's sixteen-part Mass (unaccompanied) took place last month at the Church of St. Thomas, under the direction of Musik-director Münch. There was a choir of seven hundred members and sixteen solo vocalists. The remarkable work of the whilom director of the Berlin Singakademie is but rarely performed, owing to the difficulties presented by it, and there was consequently a very numerous and discriminating audience on the present occasion.

TERAMO.—A new one-act Biblical opera, 'La Figlia di Jefte,' the music by Giuseppe Righetti, has been brought out with much success at the Municipal theatre. The libretto is an adaptation of a drama bearing a similar title, by Felice Cavalotti.

VIENNA.—A number of Schubert autographs have recently been discovered in the archives of the Church of St. Peter, the most important of which is a setting, with orchestra, of a Hymn to the Holy Sacrament, which the composer completed shortly before his death, in 1828.

Correspondence.

GEORGE SMART.

SIR,—The notice of Henry Smart in your May number suggests a question as to a certain George Smart, treasurer and one of the founders of the New Musical Fund, established in 1786. He died in Edinburgh on September 4, 1818, aged sixty-seven, and was buried in St. James's Church, Hampstead Road, where there is, or was—for the 'restorers' are always at work—a tablet to his memory. Was he the father of Sir George Smart?

I am also looking after another George Smart, an inventor, who took out several patents between 1800 and 1822. He was a timber merchant, carrying on business, first at Camden Town and then at Ordnance Wharf, Westminster Bridge.

Should this letter come under the notice of any members of the Smart family, perhaps they will be able to throw some light upon these questions.

R. B. P.

[We think the George Smart, No. 1, referred to by our correspondent, was the grandfather of Henry Smart, the composer.—ED. M.T.]

WORDS, WORDS, WORDS!

SIR,—Cannot something be done to make the words of singers intelligible? Often when listening to singers, supposed to be of the first rank, I find it extremely difficult to accurately determine the language, or languages, in which their vocal efforts are being presented to their audience. There is no doubt that librettists and composers have something to answer for in so serious a shortcoming, as they often handicap the vocalists by their handiwork. But for all that, the singers are the culprits. 'I am afraid they are getting worse and worse. 'A national defect,' they may be inclined to retort. And there may be some truth, though no justification in the observation. The other day, before I came here, and while walking along a main thoroughfare in a highly respectable neighbourhood, I overheard this remark from a respectably dressed person: 'I hav'nt an ocean in my head.' I thought to myself: 'If you had, it would certainly be a serious case of water on the brain,'—Yours reflectively,

PLAIN SPOKEN.

By the sad sea waves. August 20.

Brief Summary of Country and Colonial News.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

CHERTSEY.—At the Parish Church, on the 9th and 10th ult., in connection with the Coronation celebrations, there were performed the 'Coronation March' (Meyerbeer), Coronation anthem, 'Zadok the Priest' (Handel), Te Deum in F (Smart), and Coronation Prize March (Percy Godfrey). At All Saints' Church, on the 12th ult., the same music, with the addition of Clare's Magnificat in D, was given. The accompaniments at all the services were rendered by a small orchestra under the direction of Mr. F. Monk, organist and choirmaster, who presided at the organ on both occasions.

CHRISTCHURCH (New Zealand).—The Musical Union gave their second concert of the season in the Canterbury Hall, on June 24, when Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed for the first time here, preceded by Handel's Coronation Anthem 'Zadok the Priest.' The choir sang with excellent attack and tone, being especially good in the Evening hymn 'O gladsome light,' and the choral epilogue 'God sent His messenger the rain.' The orchestral accompaniments were admirably played throughout; Mrs. Burns, Miss Maud Graham, Mr. Percy Aylmer, and Mr. H. M. Reeves were the solo vocalists, and Mr. F. M Wallace was as usual an able conductor.

MATLOCK BANK.—Miss Lucie Johnstone gave a successful concert in Victoria Hall, on the 21st ult., when she was assisted by Madame Adelaide Mullen, Mr. Henry Beaumont, Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerson (vocalists), and Miss Ethel Knapp (pianoforte). Mr. Fulkerson gave the music-recitation entitled 'Te Deum' (Stanley Hawley's music) with powerful effect, and Miss Lucie Johnstone rendered her songs with artistic charm. Miss Gertie de S. Webster accompanied, and Miss Ethel Knapp's pianoforte solos were much appreciated.

MELBOURNE (Australia).—The programme of the North Suburban Choral Union's Concert on June 10, given at the Masonic Hall, Ascot Vale, included Cowen's cantata 'St. John's Eve,' Macfarren's part-song 'Break, break, on the cold grey stones, O sea,' Mendelssohn's 'Son and Stranger' overture, and Strauss's concert waltz 'Morning Leaves' (the last two being given for the first time here)—the inclusion of the last being apparently due to a remark in THE MUSICAL TIMES of January last, apropos of the introduction of good light music in classical concert programmes. The solo vocalists were Miss Doris Carter, Miss Florrie Gordon, Mr. G. Baulch, and Mr. T. H. Lightfoot. Mr. E. A. Jäger conducted.

WELLINGTON (NEW ZEALAND).—The Orchestral Society gave the first concert of its twelfth season at the Opera House, on June 18, under the direction of Mr. Robert Parker. Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony received an admirable interpretation throughout, that of the Finale being especially noteworthy. Other items in an excellent programme were Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, two movements from the same composer's violin concerto (admirably played by Miss Grace Kennedy), Edward German's three dances from Henry VIII., and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Ballet Music. Miss Phœbe Parsons was the vocalist.——Mr. Maughan Barnett (pianoforte) and Herr Max Hoppe (violin), with the assistance of Mr. A. Hamerton (violoncello), gave a concert on July 7, when the programme included Rheinberger's Trio in A (Op. 112), Gade's Novelletten (Op. 20), and soli for their respective instruments, by the above-named artists. Miss Amy Murphy was the vocalist.——On July 15, Mr. Maughan Barnett gave a pianoforte recital, the principal items of the programme being Beethoven's 'Sonata pathetic,' a group of pieces by Chopin, including the Polonaise in A flat, Rubinstein's Staccato Study in C, and the second Rhapsodie Hongroise of Liszt.

Answers to Correspondents.

BATON.—Tschaïkowsky's 'Pathetic Symphony' was first performed in England by the Philharmonic Society at its concert of February 28, 1894, and repeated at the following concert, March 14, both performances conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. It was designated in the programme 'New Symphony in B minor (No. 6, Op. 74).' The title 'Pathetic' was given by Tschaïkowsky after the first performance of the work, under his direction, at Petersburg, October 16, 1893: a few days later the composer drew his last breath.

A LONG SUFFERER.—(1) Perfectly true. The curate who always sings out of tune is a very trying member of the community. Cannot you try to convince him that in this respect he is a 'miserable sinner'? (2) Your plan is an excellent one—to make the boys read together such verses of the Psalm that cause any difficulty in the pointing. (3) A cessation of the boom of the pedals is a good feature in organ accompaniments, and some tunes do not lend themselves to solo treatment in being played over.

OLD COLWYN.—The following works, suitable for a choir concert, with soprano or bass, or soprano and bass, solos and chorus, will doubtless answer your requirements: 'Hero and Leander' (C. H. Lloyd), 'May Day' (Macfarren), 'The Forsaken Merman' and 'Ode to the Sea' (A. Somervell), 'The Ballad of Carmilhan' (A. D. Arnott), 'The Death of Minnehaha' (Coleridge-Taylor).

THEORY.—You seem to be very well supplied with books for your Theory of Music Examination. But you should read the theoretical articles in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music,' especially that on Form, by Sir Hubert Parry, Bart. The Harmony Course by Bridge and Sawyer might help you still further.

W. P.—(1) We do not know of any book on 'arranging from score.' This is a matter of practical experience and studying good models. (2) Beethoven's Op. 63 and 64 are arrangements of his Op. 4 and 3—the first for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, the second for pianoforte and violoncello.

COLONIAL.—You are quite right in regarding the ambiguity of compound time signatures as 'unsatisfactory.' Your suggestions of amendment, though not altogether novel, are ingenious. But it would be simply impossible to make any change that is likely to be generally accepted in all countries, or, indeed, even in one.

G. R.—So far as we know, none of the houses in which Wagner stayed during his three visits to London have been commemorated with tablets recording the event. Sentiment in these matters is almost a negative quantity in London—and, indeed, in England—compared with continental cities, towns, and even villages.

HIAWATHA.—We are not familiar with any distinguished musician named Boxer, though such an one may hail from the Celestial Empire. Perhaps you mean Bochsa. He was a harpist of some, and a composer of less repute who died at Sydney in 1856.

H. G. C.—If the music is copyright, it is a distinct infringement of the copyright to make any transcription without the sanction of the owner. See the article 'Copyright' in Stainer and Barrett's 'Dictionary of Musical Terms.'

ENQUIRER.—A matter of taste—evenness and good touch are most important factors in scale-playing, and the proper use of the pedal comes under the head of discretion, regulated by a knowledge of harmony.

FUGUE.—The 'Life of Merkel,' by Gustav Jansen, is published only in the German language. The price of the book is 2s. 6d. net.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—The song entitled 'L'Addio,' attributed to Mozart, is a melody by Gottfried von Jacquin, though the accompaniment is by Mozart.

A. W. F.—The centenary of the birth of Hector Berlioz will not fall due till next year; the composer was born on December 11, 1803.

We are greatly indebted to a large number of correspondents for their kindness in furnishing information in respect of Dr. Joseph Parry's hymn-tune 'Aberystwyth.' The tune appears in several Welsh hymnals, and it may be obtained, printed on a card, from Messrs. Hughes and Son, Wrexham.

THE "AMBROSE" EDITION of CHURCH MUSIC.

A Clergyman writes: "Your Edition is well selected, well edited, and well printed."

An Organist writes: "I find your music pleases the Clergy, pleases the choir, pleases the congregation, and pleases myself. As a rule it seems to combine the minimum of difficulty with the maximum of effect. I generally try to end my choir practices with one of your pieces, as it always sends the choir away in a good temper."

NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS, &c.

By CALEB SIMPER.

Interesting, attractive, popular, easy, melodious, and effective.

*THOU ART GOD ALONE. 6th 1,000. Sol-fa, 2d. Staff ... 4d.
This is an exceptionally fine Anthem. The Chorus and Organ Parts are attractive and inspiring, uplifting and grand. The Solo for Bass is noble and majestic with rich modulations, which, however, flow melodiously The Soprano Solo (or Tenor Solo, or Soprano Chorus) is sweet and expressive. Altogether it is an ideal Harvest Anthem for this notable year.
*GREAT AND MARVELLOUS. 9th 1,000. Sol-fa, 2d. Staff 3d.
*HIS PROMISE TRUE. 8th 1,000. Sol-fa, 2d. Staff ... ... 4d.
A Clergyman writes:—"Kindly send 36 copies of 'Thou art God alone.' I think it is a beautiful Anthem, quite one of your best productions; I am delighted with it."
Another Vicar writes:—"I like your new Anthem, 'Thou art God alone,' very much. Send 30 copies."
An Organist writes:—"Please send 30 copies 'Thou art God alone.' I am very pleased with it."
Another Organist writes:—"I enclose P.O. for 30 copies of 'Thou art God alone.' I consider it one of the finest Anthems I have seen."
Free Specimen Copies of the above Three Anthems are sent to Choirmasters who send post card, giving name of Church, to the Composer:—Caleb Simper, "Kilbirnie," Barnstaple.

A MANUAL OF PLAINSONG

FOR DIVINE SERVICE

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES NOTED

THE PSALTER NOTED

TO GREGORIAN TONES

TOGETHER WITH THE LITANY AND RESPONSES

A NEW EDITION

PREPARED BY

H. B. BRIGGS AND W. H. FRERE

UNDER THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE OF

JOHN STAINER

(Late President of the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society).

PREFACE.

THE first edition of The Psalter Noted was published in 1849 under the supervision of the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, and secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship. Subsequently Mr. Helmore's scheme was enlarged by the issue of The Canticles Noted, of A Brief Directory, and of three Appendixes to the Psalter: and the whole collection was issued in one volume under the title of A Manual of Plainsong. The Manual had also two companion books, one of Words only, containing The Canticles and Psalter Accented, the other a collection of Accompanying Harmonies. Thus complete provision was made for the musical performance of the regular services of the Prayer Book. Practical objections, however, to the monotony of the recitation of several Psalms to one Tone without the relief of Antiphons, added to certain difficulties in the pointing, led to the issue of other Psalters which have competed with The Psalter Noted, but without obtaining, any of them, a marked supremacy; and nothing has been issued which covers the whole field so completely as Mr. Helmore's Manual.

Study of the art of Plainsong during the last half century has, however, undergone something like a revolution: on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing. In consequence of repeated demands for a new edition of the Manual, the work of revision was entrusted to the late Sir John Stainer. He readily undertook the task, and called into collaboration Mr. H. B. Briggs and the Rev. W. H. Frere, with the result that before his death he had passed for the press the greater part of the revised proofs prepared by them for the new edition. He had also devoted much time to the consideration, with Mr. Shebbeare, of the Organ Accompaniments, so that the complete work may be considered as his last contribution to the music of the English Church.

His was not the only loss that this book had to undergo in the course of revision, for on the eve of its completion, Mr. Briggs was suddenly called to his rest. So the foregoing words which he had written about Sir John Stainer have now become his own epitaph. Without competing with Sir John Stainer in the wider domain of Church Music he had, in the narrower department of Plainsong, an influence and a competence which were unrivalled; and whatever merits this book may have are due almost entirely to him.

The Manual thus appears in a New Edition, revised in accordance with modern standards of taste and science: it does not cover quite so large a field as formerly, for it contains no music for the Holy Communion; but it has the same counterparts as before in the shape of The Canticles and Psalter Accented, and The Accompanying Harmonies prepared by Mr. Shebbeare, which include accompaniments for the Responses, Te Deum and Litany, as well as for the Tones.

THE VILLAGE TUNE BOOK

CONTAINING

ONE HUNDRED POPULAR HYMN TUNES.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The one hundred hymn-tunes forming this collection have been selected from various sources, old and new. As the earliest can be traced to the year 1551, and the most recent was composed in 1901, they cover a period of three-and-a-half centuries.

In selecting these tunes, care has been taken to provide for all the metres in general use, and the index of first lines may be found useful as a guide to the selection of suitable tunes for particular hymns.

Clergymen and Organists of most Village Churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overladen volumes: therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.

RUTH A HARVEST PASTORAL SUITABLE FOR USE IN PLACES OF WORSHIP WORDS BY EDWARD OXENFORD
MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.
SUITABLE FOR THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventual episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

A HANDBOOK
OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A.

November, 1898. E. A. D.

A further reprint of the Handbook affords the opportunity of adding the papers set forth for the recent Mus. Doc. Examination at Victoria University, for the use of which the Author is indebted to the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles.

August, 1901.

CANTATAS

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

*UNA

Sixth and Seventh Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"'Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Eleventh and Twelfth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twenty-sixth to Thirtieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

Seventh Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

†ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal Parts, each 1s. Words only, *7s. 6d.; †5s. per 100.

SCHOOL MUSIC

ALFRED R. GAUL.

THE ELFIN HILL

A FAIRY OPERETTA.

"'The Elfin Hill' is founded on one of Hans Andersen's charming stories, and the libretto has been written in dainty and graceful language by Miss Baldwick. The operetta opens with a short overture describing moonlight on the Dovrefeld Mountains, and Mr. Gaul has been particularly happy in infusing the Norse spirit into that portion of his music which deals with goblin life in Norway. When the goblins become visitors in fairyland, the character of the music changes; lightness is its predominant feature, perhaps the choicest fragment being a fairy dance. This latter, together with a very characteristic dance of elves and a shadow dance, were beautifully executed."—Birmingham Gazette.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

Verse by James Strang.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. Taking the Cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship, and, above all, melodious and expressive."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"This charming work was composed for the pupils of King Edward VI.'s High School for Girls, Birmingham, and bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. The libretto is of a high order of merit, and worth the music, which from first to last is attractive and without a dull page."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

4. The Skylark.
5. The Owl.
6. The Swallows.

"By the production of these Trios our townsman, Mr. A. R. Gaul, has made a valuable addition to the many beautiful and useful compositions he has formerly given to the public. Mr. Gaul's music is unfailingly charming, the voice-parts being so disposed that they may be easily learnt, and the accompaniments are as characteristic as they are pretty. Each separate piece is so good that we cannot make references to special favourites. Young ladies who take pleasure in part-singing will find variety in the collection, and both in the home circle and in the school class Mr. Gaul's new work is sure to be heartily welcomed."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

NINE SYMPHONIES
BY GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, SIX SHILLINGS.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal Symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

MENDELSSOHN'S "ELIJAH" IS TO BE PERFORMED AT THE APPROACHING FESTIVALS OF WORCESTER, PRESTON, SCARBOROUGH, SHEFFIELD, BRISTOL, CARDIFF, AND NORWICH.

SECOND EDITION.

THE HISTORY
OF MENDELSSOHN'S ORATORIO
"ELIJAH"
BY
F. G. EDWARDS.
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.
And a number of Portraits, including a hitherto unpublished one of the COMPOSER.

"Another work of distinct value to musical historians. . . . The temptation to gossip over the incidents of the first performance has been quite successfully resisted, and the author lets Mendelssohn's own letters tell the story for the most part. . . . There are several portraits of those who took part in the original performance, and one most interesting portrait of Mendelssohn from a drawing in the possession of Mrs. Victor Benecke. The work of compiling the necessary information has been excellently done, and the publication comes as a fitting celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the production of the work."—The Times, April 16, 1896.

"Mr. Edwards's book contains, of course, much that is familiar to students of Mendelssohn, and even to the casual readers of musical biography, but the author is able to set forth no little which fairly claims attention as new. There are, for example, various letters from the composer not heretofore made public, and full of interest for those to whom the details of a great work are attractive."—Daily Telegraph, April 15, 1896.

PREFACE.

This arrangement of the Responses for Sopranos and Contraltos was originally intended to supply a need occasionally felt in Gloucester Cathedral when the Lay Clerks were away and the Choir consisted of Boys only. I am not aware that any similar arrangement has been printed, and I therefore offer this version to the public in the hope that it may be found useful in cases where Choirs are limited to Boys' or Ladies' voices.

CANTATAS.

JUDAH IN BABYLON.

WORDS BY REV. H. SMITH.

This work is laid out for Soprano and Baritone Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra, and embraces altogether twelve numbers, one-half of which are given to the Chorus. Noteworthy features of the Cantata are the agreeable and tastefully written Accompaniments—never difficult or obtrusive, and the free and flowing part-writing. One of the choral items, "And the ransomed of the Lord," takes the form of a Four-part Female Chorus. Besides a rich store of Choral music, there are Soprano and Baritone Solos, especial attention being due to "His going forth is sure." The Libretto is interesting and well planned. Time of performance about Seventy minutes.

Daily Telegraph—"The Music, solid and straightforward in character, is well made and worthy. . . . It exhibits life and freshness."

Staff Notation, One Shilling and Sixpence.

BETHANY.

WORDS BY MRS. ALEXR. ROBERTS.

This Cantata deals with the story of the miraculous raising of Lazarus, and paints the life of the inmates of the house of Bethany.

The work is scored for the usual soloists and chorus, and contains 25 numbers, of rich and varied interest. Part I. introduces the Master and His disciples on their way to Bethany. Certain incidental features are here detailed which tend to endow this section of the work with point and interest, and, it is believed, with some degree of originality also. Part II. deals with the death and resurrection of Lazarus, and is more strict in outline than Part I.

In performance the Cantata will take about an hour and a-half.

Price Two Shillings.

Sol-fa, 6d. Words, 4s. net per 100. Band Parts on hire.

THE GARDENS OF THE LORD.

SACRED CANTATA.

WORDS WRITTEN BY ALICE G. DYER.

The Cantata consists of thirty numbers, and is divided into four parts:—

PART I.—"The Garden" has reference to the Creation, the Fall, and the ejection of Adam and Eve from the Garden.

PART II.—"The Garden of Gethsemane" portrays the closing scenes of our Lord's life on earth.

PART III.—"The Garden of the Resurrection" deals with the events following the Crucifixion up to the Ascension of Christ.

PART IV.—"The Garden of Paradise" is an attempt to set forth the glories of the future life, as indicated by the Saviour in His teachings, and, later on, by St. John in the Book of Revelation.

While a performance of the complete work is advisable (time about 1¾ hour), any one section can be used entirely apart from the others; and Parts II. and III. are specially adapted for the Church seasons of Lent and Easter respectively.

Staff Notation, Two Shillings.

Sol-fa, 9d. Words, 6s. per 100. Band parts on hire.

THE JOURNEY OF LIFE.

A SACRED CANTATA FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

THE WORDS COMPILED AND MUSIC COMPOSED BY F. A. CHALLINOR, MUS. BAC.

This Cantata is designed for Soprano and Contralto Solo, Two-part Chorus, and is intended for Sunday School and Juvenile Choirs, for whom it is admirably suited. The work consists of twenty numbers, and will occupy about an hour in performance. All the numbers are full of charm; but No. 13, "In the March of Life," may be specially commended for its energy of movement and the attractiveness of its melody. Young people are under obligation to Mr. Challinor for providing them with music of so high an order, which yet never loses touch with the qualities of simplicity and directness, without which no music can engage the sympathies of the young. A Welsh translation of the words accompanies the English text, a feature which should give the work a wider appeal.

Staff Notation, One Shilling and Sixpence.

Sol-fa, 5d. Words, 4s. per 100.

A SONG OF THE SEA.

ODE.

WRITTEN BY HENRY BRANCH.

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA BY F. A. CHALLINOR, MUS. BAC., A.R.C.M.

This Ode may be commended with confidence to the attention of Choral Societies. It supplies exactly what is so often required, viz.—an interesting and musicianly short work to make up a programme with a cantata only occupying a part of the evening. The poem by Mr. Branch is a picturesque presentation of its subject, and Mr. Challinor has found in it inspiration for what is undoubtedly one of his finest works. He has treated it con amore, and the varying moods of the poem have been faithfully reflected in music which is remarkable for its melodious beauty and the strength of its writing.

Time of performance, about fifteen minutes.

Staff, in Choral Album, No. 384, price Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, in Tonic Sol-fa Series, No. 405, price Threepence.

"Magnificently clear and well-toned voice, perfectly electrified her audience."—Newcastle Chronicle.
35, Lancaster Road, S. Hampstead, N.W.

MISS MAGGIE JAQUES (SOPRANO).

Dates booked: October 2, Stockport; 28, Spennymoor; 30, Liverpool, "Creation"; November 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, Durham and District; 27, Osset, "Elijah"; December 4, Hclywood; 5, Lurgan; 6, Belfast; 8, Armagh; 9, Ballymoney; 11, Portsmouth, "Elijah"; 16, Todmorden, "Messiah"; 19, West Hartlepool, "Messiah"; 26, Leeds Choral Union, Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" and "Messiah" Selections; 29, Stourbridge, "Elijah"; January 7, 1903, Horbury; 27, Moseley; March 2, Sowerby Bridge, "Bohemian Girl"; 25, Lancaster, Sullivan's "Light of the World"; 31, Hull, "Israel in Egypt."

"Golden Legend."—Yarmouth Musical Society.—Miss Jaques sang Elsie's music with expression, brilliance, and sweetness, and especially made a deep impression in the solo "My Redeemer and my Lord."—Yarmouth Mercury, April 26, 1902.

Dunfermline Choral Union.—It is always safe to engage Miss Jaques for oratorio. Her straightforward style, clear enunciation, and beautiful bird-like voice suited the Elsie music to perfection. All her numbers received a most adequate rendering, and those who heard her are not likely to forget her splendid effort in "The night is calm," &c.—Dunfermline Press, March 29, 1902.

Arbroath Choral Union.—Elsie's music seemed peculiarly grateful to the clear and flute-like voice of Miss Maggie Jaques, the beautiful quality of her upper register being especially notable in such solos as "The night is calm," &c.—Arbroath Herald, March 27, 1902.

Peterboro' Choral Union.—Miss Jaques' soprano voice and dramatic style are singularly well adapted for the part of Elsie, which she interpreted with great charm. Her singing was confident, pure, and full of expression, her sustained top notes in the fine recit. with the Prince being magnificent. In the beautiful solos, "I hear him call," "My Redeemer," &c., Miss Jaques held the attention of the audience, so to speak, in a vice.—Peterboro' Standard, Dec. 14, 1901.

Miss Maggie Jaques, as Elsie, was almost ideal. Throughout the work her conception of the part and the tenderness with which she sang the music allotted to her were all that could be desired.—Peterboro' Advertiser, Dec. 14, 1901.

Dundee Choral Union.—"Death of Minnehaha" and Selections from "Tannhäuser."—Miss Jaques has a very pure and telling voice, and she achieved conspicuous success in the soprano portion of the "Death of Minnehaha." In Wagner's "Tannhäuser," Miss Jaques sang the music for Elizabeth with much feeling, her duet with Mr. Brearley being specially worthy of commendation.—Dundee Advertiser, March 13, 1902.

Verdi's "Requiem."—Hull Vocal Society.—Miss Maggie Jaques sang the soprano solos with remarkable flexibility. Her voice was most admirably adapted to the gigantic task she undertook.—Eastern Morning News, March 19, 1902.

Gade's "Psyche."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Postal Choral Society.—The soprano who approaches the part of Psyche in Gade's work must do so with considerable force in reserve, for it is a trying rôle. Miss Jaques had this force, and a pure, fresh soprano voice to boot, and acquitted herself meritoriously.—Newcastle Chronicle, March 22, 1902.

Miss Jaques was in splendid voice, and she gave her solo work exquisite rendition.—Newcastle Journal, March 22, 1902.

"Martyr of Antioch."—Bishops Stortford Musical Union.—Miss Maggie Jaques sang splendidly, her fine voice, rich and brilliant, and pleasing manner combining to produce an impressive Margarita.—Herts and Essex Observer, April 26, 1902.

"Elijah."—Walsall Philharmonic Union.—Miss Maggie Jaques is a soprano who has already gained a high reputation at Walsall. In "Hear ye, Israel" she was very fine, and was loudly applauded, and in the other parts for which she was responsible, she was equally successful.—Walsall Free Press, April 19, 1902.

Stonebroom Choral Union.—Miss Jaques created a highly favourable impression in "Hear ye, Israel," sung with fervour of expression and dramatic power. She was also distinctly pleasing in the dialogue between the Youth and the Prophet and between the Widow and the Prophet. Indeed, the most widely known of Derbyshire sopranos sang throughout in a manner which was worthy of her high and advancing reputation.—Sheffield Independent, April 7, 1902.

"Messiah."—Ayr Choral Union.—We have to go a long time back to recall a soprano who gave a more satisfying interpretation of the "Messiah" airs than Miss Jaques. With her beautiful and flexible voice, her pure intonation, and easy style of delivery, the florid measure of "Rejoice greatly," became means of expression, and the solos, "Come unto him" and "I know that my Redeemer liveth," were given with touching effect.—Ayr Advertiser, April 3, 1902.

LONDON PRESS NOTICES.
Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts.
Season 1901-2.

"Mr. Samuel Masters is a young tenor possessing a voice of beautiful quality."—The Standard, September 5.

"Mr. Samuel Masters, whose fine tenor voice was exhibited in Beethoven's "Adelaide," phrased the song in an excellent manner, and gave a couple of vigorous songs by Korbay, and two by Noel Johnson, with considerable effect."—The Times, December 8.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was the tenor soloist of the evening, and sang the narrative solo of 'Lohengrin' with correctness; Wagner's ideal tenor was, we understand, Herr Vogl; and the voice of Mr. Masters is not unlike Herr Vogl; in this respect he showed the proper Wagnerian manner."—Pall Mall Gazette, September 23.

"Mr. Samuel Masters is a young tenor with a voice of delightful quality."—The Referee, September 8.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was one of the vocalists, and was thoroughly appreciated by his audience. His softer notes are especially beautiful, and his fortissimo passages are extremely brilliant."—The Whitehall Review, September 5.

"Mr. Samuel Masters has a beautiful tenor voice, and the production excellent."—The Standard, December 6.

"Mr. Samuel Masters sang with much success 'Lend me your aid,' from Gounod's 'La Reine de Saba.'"—The Standard, September 25.

"Mention must be made of the singing of Mr. Samuel Masters, who sang the declamatory passage 'In Distant Land,' from 'Lohengrin,' and 'Macgregors' Gathering,' in splendid style."—The Sunday Special, September 22.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).
(Assistant Lay Clerk Westminster Abbey)
Mr. Henry J. Wood (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—
"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.

"Henry J. Wood."

"Elijah."—Bromley.—"The title part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionalism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

"FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD."

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM

OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

"The most striking discovery of the present generation of practical musicians."—Musical News.

"Wonderful work is being done by Mr. Macdonald Smith in the application of his new system. . . . He is giving hundreds of lessons by mail with the very best results."—Musical Courier (New York).

"It is clear that Mr. Macdonald Smith has studied the subject carefully, and acts upon well-ascertained scientific grounds."—The Daily Telegraph.

"The great, the supreme merit of Mr. Smith's system consists in the fact that it involves the total abolition and disestablishment of all that terrible scale-practising and five-finger exercising."—Westminster Gazette.

"May be distinctly regarded as a boon and a blessing to men."—The Referee.

"Mr. Macdonald Smith's system of training the fingers, hands, &c., for pianoforte playing is most excellent, and in every respect well worth the high fees charged for lessons."—Organist and Choirmaster.

"The excellence of his methods had been abundantly proved."—The Times.

Extracts from reports of Correspondence Pupils:—

"Difficulties which were once almost insurmountable now seem to fall to pieces as I play. The keyboard, which once seemed hard and unyielding, has now become like velvet to my fingers."—D. Parkes, Plymouth.

"Allow me to take this opportunity of thanking you for your attention, and once again to testify to the marvellous improvement I have made under your system. It is worth any money to a teacher, and I sincerely hope for his own sake, every professor will avail himself of it."—Ralph Horner, Mus. Bac.

"I have found the system of the greatest possible use in teaching the piano, more particularly in the case of adult pupils, to many of whom music is now a delight instead of a toil as formerly. To teachers whose time is so fully occupied that they have no time for practice, Macdonald Smith's system is worth ten times the modest fee which he charges for lessons."—Chas. G. Bryan, Southport.

"I have tried all the technical methods in vogue for many years for the improvement of the technical difficulties in pianoforte playing, and I unhesitatingly affirm that the system employed by you for the speedy development of the muscles is the nearest approach to perfection I can find."—C. Davieson (Pupil of Liszt).

"I can play very much better: indeed, the change is just as some of your critics say, 'marvellous.' I always wondered how with careful practice and a fair knowledge of music I could not do better—the riddle is now solved. Every day I feel I have done something by adding a little to my proficiency. Let me say once more I am delighted with your system. I have derived benefit from your exercises and advice far, far beyond my expectations."—Mrs. H. W. (age 45), N.S. Wales.

"As far as your system is concerned, I can heartily say that it has helped me more than all the technical work I ever did."—F. J. F., Toledo, Ohio, U.S.A.

"Am hugely delighted with results . . . and consider you a public benefactor. The manuscript exercise I think perfectly splendid."—A. W. S., Windsor.

"I am finding it most useful in teaching, especially with examination pupils."—A. M. C., Edinburgh.

OCTOBER 1, 1902.

J. B. CRAMER

(1771—1858).

The fame of a man may hang on a single thread. But the thread may be of such strength that it seems as if it might defy the wear and tear of time. Sever it, and the great man of outstanding eminence in his day rapidly passes into oblivion. Art, science, and literature furnish many instances of one-achievement fame, judged by the severe tribunal of posterity. The reader will have no difficulty in recalling names in proof thereof; but should he momentarily be at a loss for one in the art of music, he may perchance find it in the perusal of this biographical sketch.

John Baptist Cramer, born at Mannheim, February 24, 1771, came of a musical family. His grandfather, Jacob Cramer, was a flautist in the celebrated Mannheim Orchestra; his uncle, Johann, a drummer in the Court band at Munich. Wilhelm Cramer, the father of the subject of this article, settled in England in the year 1772, and remained here till his death in 1799. He speedily made his mark as a violinist of high repute: he led the King's band, the Opera band, the orchestras of the Pantheon, the Antient, and the Professional Concerts, and discharged similar duties at every private concert of importance at which an orchestra was engaged. He also held the office of first violin at the Provincial Musical Festivals, and at the memorable Handel Festivals of 1784 and 1787 in Westminster Abbey—in fact, Wilhelm Cramer was a leading violinist in the fullest sense of the term. His son Franz (known as François), a younger brother of John (as we shall call him), became, like his father, a first violinist of distinction in the land of his adoption; he died in 1848, thus predeceasing his pianistical brother by ten years.

Although John, the great pianist, was born in Germany, he was brought to England in 1772, an infant in arms aged twelve months. Allowing for certain absences on the Continent, London thenceforward became his home during his long life of eighty-seven years. Thus to all intents and purposes John B. Cramer was an Englishman. The boy was cradled in music. His father, anxious that the little fellow should become a violinist, started him on a fiddling career at the age of four. There is evidence that he continued to be a violinist, though no biographer has mentioned this fact. His application for membership of the Royal Society of Musicians, dated February 7, 1802, states that 'he has studied and practised music for a livelihood seven years and upwards in England—is a married man—30 years of age—performs on the Piano Forte and Violin—teaches the Piano Forte.'*

To return to Cramer's tender years. One day the child was sent to practise his violin in an attic wherein stood an old pianoforte. This proved to be the turning point in his life. Instead of violin tones the father heard other strains—harmonies in two and three parts coming from the keyboard instrument. Parental plans were soon, and wisely altered, with the result that Master John at the age of seven was placed under the tuition of one J. D. Benser, a German pianist of repute then resident in London. Three years later he became a pupil of J. S. Schroeter, but although, according to Burney, Schroeter was 'the first who brought into England the true art of teaching that instrument [the Forte-Piano],' young Cramer's progress was not so rapid as his father desired. Fortunately for the young student the services of Clementi were secured as a teacher of the twelve-year-old boy. 'It was impossible,' says an old memoir, 'in the whole range of the musical world, to select a more able preceptor than Clementi, a man profoundly skilled in every branch of music, and a genius of the highest order, whose mind is richly stored with general knowledge.' Although these invaluable lessons from Clementi continued for one year only, owing to the teacher's departure from England, they proved to be a revelation to the boy as to the possibilities of future attainment. Between the ages of fourteen and sixteen young Cramer received some theoretical instruction from C. F. Abel, the famous viol-da-gamba player; but after receiving the inspiring lessons from Clementi, he relied upon his own resources for the further acquirement of technical skill and artistic development.

John Cramer made his first appearance in public at his father's benefit concert, April 5, 1781, at the age of ten years. Three years later we find him playing a 'Lesson' at a concert given in the King's Theatre, Haymarket, January 22, 1784. The following request, which appeared in the advertisement of that music-making, throws some light on the concert-giving customs of the day:—

> The Vocal Performers having often taken Cold by sitting too long on the Stage, it is humbly requested that the Audience will indulge them with coming on to sing, and retiring when the Song is finished.

Later in the same year we find this announcement in connection with 'The Hanover Square Grand Concert,' of March 10, 1784:—

> Duetto for two pianofortes, by Master Cramer and Mr. Clementi.

This 'Duetto,' played by master and pupil, was probably one of Clementi's duet sonatas. At Fischer's concert, on May 14, Master Cramer played a duet with Miss Mary Jane Guest, afterwards Mrs. Miles, a Bath pianist of repute and the teacher of the Princess Charlotte. In 1788, aged eighteen, young Cramer went abroad and played in public in the capitals of France and Germany. He was in Paris throughout the stirring times of the French Revolution of 1789. There he formed an acquaintance with a young Russian. Circumstances made this subject of the Czar a debtor of the young English pianist. As the former was wholly incapable of paying the debt, he offered to discharge it with some manuscripts of the works of John Sebastian Bach. Cramer accepted this offer without a moment's hesitation. He thus unexpectedly found himself in possession of some treasures for which he had long and ardently sought, and which afforded him intense satisfaction. 'It would be interesting to know what these Bach manuscripts were,' the reader may be inclined to remark. We venture to think that we can, to some extent, supply that information. On May 16, 1816, there was sold in London by auction 'Mr. J. B. Cramer's select, valuable and entire collection of MS. and printed vocal and instrumental music . . . also some compositions by John Sebastian Bach (that have never yet been published), also a portrait of him by Pellegrini, from the original in the Conservatorio, at Leipzig.'

From Cramer's sale catalogue (327 lots) we extract the following J. S. Bach items:—

Lot 33. A very curious Selection of Sonatas (Trios) for the organ or piano-forte, in score MS.
[This was knocked down for 15s.!]

,, 82. A valuable volume . . . Suites for piano-forte and Fantasia, all in score MS.
[This lot included compositions by W. F. and C. P. E. Bach. Unfortunately none of the prices are marked after Lot 74.]

,, 169. An Anthem adapted from a fugue of J. Sebast. Bach by M. Cooke, MS. in score.

,, 244. Sublime Harmony, in 5 parts, for 2 violins, alto, violoncello and contra basso, 1693, warranted to be a correct copy, MS.

,, 225. Two celebrated Trios for 2 violins and bass, in score, MS., warranted to have never been published. — N.B. The second contains his famous Canon perpetuus.

,, 242. Preludes and Fugues, 24 for the Organ, MS., and 24 do. printed, Zurich.

,, 244. 6 Lessons, 2 Preludes, 1 Fugue, and 1 by Graun, MS., 7 books.

The catalogue included 'A curious Head of Handel, by Richardson,' and the following book:—

Lot 276. Nicolaus (Elias). 'Orgel oder Instrument Tabulatur, Leipzig, 1571'; this curious book formerly belonged to J. Sebastian Bach, and was given to Dr. Burney by C. P. E. Bach, at Hambro', 1772.

While in this Bach region the opinion of Samuel Wesley on the subject of this sketch may be quoted:—

Among the devoted admirers of that greatest of musicians [Bach] must be enumerated J. B. Cramer, who it is well known has assiduously cultivated and thoroughly digested his works. Every one who has attentively perused his very excellent Studies for the Piano Forte will readily perceive that he has modelled a majority of them upon many of the pieces among the forty-eight Preludes and Fugues.

To return to the career of young Mr. Cramer. In the first month of the year 1791 we can trace him through the Gazetteer of January 14, in an interesting notice of a concert given at the Crown and Anchor tavern, Strand, by the Anacreontic Society. Here it is:—

The younger Cramer and Master Humel (sic) exhibited their surprising abilities on the Piano-Forte.

'Master Humel' was then a young gentleman aged twelve. The notice concludes in terms more or less amusing:—

Before the grand finale the celebrated Haydn entered the room, and was welcomed by the Sons of Harmony with every mark of respect and attention.

A small party of ladies occupied the gallery that overlooks the Concert-Room, seemingly so well pleased with the instrumental performance, that they returned after supper, joining chorus with 'Anacreon in Heaven,' and his convivial votaries, till 'Sigh no more, Ladies,' gently whispered the restraint which modesty ever imposes on the midnight crew.

Haydn had only just arrived in London for his first visit when his company had been secured by the 'midnight crew' of the Anacreontic Society. The great master took a special fancy to young Cramer, then just out of his teens. He became 'a great and distinguished favourite of Haydn,' we are told, 'and as a proof of the marked predilection of that eminent man, he was allowed to be present in his apartment at Lisson Grove during the time that he composed his "Orpheus" and others of his most celebrated works.' It may be mentioned that Haydn had fled from the worries of the street cries in Great Pulteney Street and sought the quietude of Lisson Grove, then quite in the country.

Cramer doubtless renewed his acquaintance with Haydn during the second visit of the latter to London in 1794-5. He certainly did in Vienna during his sojourn there about 1799-1800. He must have had a good time in Vienna, as, in addition to Haydn, he fraternised with Cherubini, Weber, Albrechtsberger, Woelfl and Hummel; moreover, he 'had the satisfaction of accompanying Beethoven to the opera to hear Mozart's Don Giovanni.' How intensely interesting!

After a professional tour on the Continent, which extended to Poland and Italy, Cramer entered upon his long and successful career as one of the most eminent performers and teachers of the pianoforte in London. And this brings us to what has proved to be the great event of his life—the world-famed Pianoforte Studies. Hans von Bülow, in the preface to his edition, remarks: 'We regret to say that, in spite of all our endeavours, we have not been able to ascertain anything definite of the dates of the successive publications of Cramer's Studies.'

The research which baffled the redoubtable Hans we have undertaken with more satisfactory results. The Morning Post of June 1, 1804, contains the following advertisement:—

> New Music.—This Day is published, Forty-two Exercises for the Piano-Forte, intended to facilitate the progress of those who study that Instrument, with the leading fingers marked to each passage. Price One Guinea.—By J. B. Cramer; and to be had of him, No. 6, Coventry-Street, Haymarket; and at all the principal Music Shops in Town.

Thus the actual date of publication, confirmed by the copyright entry in Stationers' Hall was June 2, 1804. The title of the first edition reads thus:—

> Studio per il Piano Forte > consisting of > Forty-two Exercises
> Intended to Facilitate the progress of those > who study that Instrument.
> Composed and the leading fingers marked to each Passage
> By J. B. Cramer.
> Pr. £1 1s. Op. 30.
> Published for the Author, & to be had of him
> No. 6, Coventry Street, Hay Market, and at all the > principal Music Shops.
> Entered at Stationers' Hall.

It may be inferred from the title-page that this important contribution to the literature of the pianoforte shared the fate of Mendelssohn's 'Songs without Words' (Book I) in being published by the author and at his own expense. It is quite possible that no publisher would take the risk of such an educational work as the Studies. But, with Clementi's Gradus ad Parnassum, they have held, and continue to hold, their ground. The Studies preceded Clementi's no less famous Gradus by fifteen years. 'I understand,' said Clementi to his former pupil, 'that you have published two books of Studies. But I have long thought of composing some.' 'While you have been dreaming, I have accomplished the task,' said Cramer. Clementi was surprised at this reply, but he at once held out his hand to his young friend and old pupil, complimenting him sincerely. 'Many of his (Cramer's) études are poems,' says Mr. Dannreuther, 'like Mendelssohn's Songs without Words,' and there are few pianists who have not borne testimony to their artistic value.

Mr. J. S. Shedlock has shown us the hall-mark of approval stamped upon them by Beethoven.* He not only set high value on Cramer's Studies, and declared them to be the best preparatory school for a proper understanding of his (Beethoven's) pianoforte works, but he actually prepared twenty of them specially for his nephew to study. Schindler says: 'Our master (Beethoven) declared that these études were the chief basis of all genuine playing. If he had ever carried out his own intention of writing a Pianoforte-School, these études would have formed in it the most important part of the practical examples.' Could any greater praise be bestowed? For further information on this important Beethoven-Cramer matter, the reader is referred to Mr. Shedlock's interesting book. Bülow, in the informing preface to his edition of the Studies (fifty selected) already referred to, speaks of their 'priceless value' and 'lasting importance.' Of the many editions of this classic, that by Henselt, with its second pianoforte part (quite optional) to several of the Studies, is of special interest and poetic beauty; one cannot fail to be struck with the charm of Henselt's melody.

We may now pass to another important incident in the life of J. B. Cramer—'glorious John,' as he came to be designated. It must not be forgotten that he was one of the founders, in 1813, of the Philharmonic Society. Its future historian will have some difficulty in adjusting the conflicting claims to the paternity of the Philharmonic, but the following account contains more than a grain of truth. At a friendly dinner party, Mr. Cramer suggested that 'a certain number of professors should be invited to subscribe five shillings each for the hire of a room, lighting, &c., &c., to meet once a month, to revive the dormant-lying symphonies, concertos, &c., of Mozart, Haydn, &c.' Cramer was one of the first Directors of the Society moreover, he, with his old master, Clementi, alternately conducted—'at the pianoforte'—the first season of eight concerts, Clementi leading off. The programme of the concert of May 3, 1813, contained a 'Full Piece' (whatever that may have been) by 'Cramer and Mozart.' Cramer's name frequently appears as conductor and solo-pianist—in fact, he introduced to English audiences some of Mozart's pianoforte concertos, and, moreover, had the courage to publish them. At the concert of February 23, 1835, we find 'Concerto No. 5, Cramer, and the last movement, Mozart.' Cramer conducted the concert (May 25, 1829) at which Mendelssohn made his first appearance before an English audience. 'Old John Cramer led me to the pianoforte as if I were a young lady,' the youthful composer wrote to his family at Berlin. This 'young lady' reference on the part of Mendelssohn was doubtless a sly hit at 'glorious John,' as he (Cramer), aged fifty-eight, was soon to lead to the altar a fair damsel thirty-three years his junior, and she not his first bride!

It is said that J. B. Cramer gave the title 'Jupiter' to Mozart's noble symphony in C. For many years the work was known as the 'Jupiter' only in England, and in selecting 'this high-sounding title,' to quote the late Sir George Macfarren, Cramer gave 'expression of his boundless admiration.' It may be interesting to state as a new fact that the designation 'Jupiter' seems to have been first used at the Philharmonic Concert of March 26, 1821. Mendelssohn, conservative as he was, adopted the term in his letter to Moscheles of March 7, 1845; he probably became acquainted with it at the Philharmonic Concert of May 28, 1832, already referred to, and at which he played, when the 'Jupiter' found a place in the programme.*

In the year 1812, Cramer commenced his career as a music publisher by becoming one of the partners in the firm, then newly-formed, of Chappell and Co. All the business arrangements of the Philharmonic Society in its earliest days were made at Chappell's premises, then at 124, New Bond Street. Mr. Samuel Chappell not only lent his house for the meetings of the Directors, but refreshed the weary ones. Cramer was then in the zenith of his fame, and the spirit would sometimes move him to play the pianoforte till one, two, or three o'clock in the morning, to the great delight of his auditors. In 1824 (not 1828 as is often stated) he joined Robert Addison and T. Frederick Beale, music publishers, then in Regent Street; this partnership brought into existence the firm still known as Messrs. Cramer and Company. J. B. Cramer gave his lessons in the long room over the shop, to which his pupils used afterwards to adjourn and purchase their music.

Previous to this, Cramer had been elected one of the first professors of the Royal Academy of Music. He was 'employed for the girls,' according to an official letter recording the commencement of operations at Tenterden Street on March 24, 1823. In spite of his many teaching engagements he kept up his practice, as he gave annual concerts in London for several years, and he can be traced as solo pianist at the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1826, though the two concertos he played on that occasion are not specified in the programmes.

The remaining incidents in the busy life of the subject of this sketch must be briefly recorded. In 1835 he gave a farewell concert previous to his retirement and his intention of settling at Munich. The concert took place on May 19, and the occasion was a memorable one. To quote from a contemporary account: 'When he who took the principal part in this [Mozart's quintet in E flat for pianoforte and wind instruments] rose, amidst the loudest and warmest cheerings, to make his last bow, we saw many lovely eyes filled with tears; and some of the sterner sex exhibited emotions no less honourable to themselves than to the occasion by which they were excited.' At this concert of sixty-seven years ago, Miss Clara Novello (now the Countess Gigliucci) sang, and Malibran gave her 'Rampataplan,' in her own inimitable way. The programme also included, 'New Ballad, Mr. J. P. Knight (his first appearance); "She wore a wreath of roses," Knight.' This was most probably the first public performance of this popular song.

The concert was followed by the inevitable farewell dinner, at which Sir George Smart presided, supported by Moscheles, Herz, Potter, Attwood, and other leading musicians, professional and amateur. J. A. Wade composed a song in honour of the occasion; it was sung by John Parry and accompanied by Moscheles, who, in the symphonies between each of the verses, deftly introduced snatches of Cramer's Studies, greatly to the delight of the guest of the evening and the assembled company. The veteran pianist was ultimately prevailed upon to play and he performed, as only he could, Mozart's beautiful pianoforte sonata in C minor.

Cramer soon returned to London, however, where he spent the remainder of his days. Probably his last appearance in public was at a farewell concert given by his brother François, the violinist, June 27, 1844. On that occasion he played in his own quintet (Op. 60), in which he introduced his melody 'Days of Yore.' The combined ages of the five performers (including Dragonetti, then eighty-three, and Lindley) totalled 342 years,

* Otto Jahn, in his monumental 'Life of Mozart' (English edition, vol. iii., p. 37, note 2) says: 'It has been called, I do not know when or by whom, the "Jupiter" symphony, more, doubtless, to indicate its majesty and splendour than with a view to any deeper symbolism.' Elwart, in his 'Histoire des concerts populaires de musique classique' (Paris, 1864), gives this reference to the 'Jupiter,' from the programme of the concert given January 5, 1862: 'L'enthousiasme des admirateurs des chefs-d'œuvre symphoniques d'Haydn et de Mozart fit donner des noms souvent assez mal justifiés à certaines symphonies de ces deux maîtres. Le titre de Jupiter a été sans doute inspiré par le début grandiose de cette belle symphonie.' Hanslick and Doerffel, in their respective monumental works on Vienna and Leipzig concert-givings, do not appear to have recorded the term.

an average of nearly seventy years each. At this concert Mendelssohn and Moscheles played the latter's 'Hommage à Handel,' and Staudigl sang a manuscript song composed by 'W. S. Rackstraw,' subsequently known as W. S. Rockstro. The only artist now living who took part in that music-making of fifty-eight years ago is Miss Sabilla Novello.

In 1851, the year of the Great Exhibition, the friend of Beethoven and Haydn met Berlioz in St. Paul's Cathedral. The great French composer was clad in a surplice as one of the basses in the select choir at the annual gathering of the charity children. Berlioz, like old Haydn on a similar occasion sixty years before, was in tears at the overwhelming effect of those thousands of children's voices singing in unison. He records: 'Going out I met old Cramer, who, in his transport, forgetting that he speaks French perfectly, cried out to me in Italian: "Cosa stupenda! stupenda! la gloria dell' Inghilterra!"'

On April 16, 1858, at his residence in Kensington, John Cramer drew his last breath at the age of eighty-seven. His remains are interred in Brompton cemetery, a polished red granite monument marking the spot of his last resting-place. Very few persons attended the funeral of this artist of European fame. One of them, John Ella, records: 'Had John Baptist Cramer been buried in Vienna or Paris, not two musicians only, but two thousand, would have followed his body to the grave!'

As a pianist, Cramer played with fine delicacy, a quality all too rare in these days of strenuous hypervirtuosity. He had a most velvety touch, and produced a lovely singing tone, 'like breathing from the sweet South,' in the words of Moscheles, and Mr. A. J. Hipkins well remembers his perfect legato touch and his bent fingers in producing it. As an interpreter of Mozart he was unrivalled. He worshipped at the shrine of that master. 'Have you read Holmes's Life of Mozart?' said Charles Salaman to him soon after the book appeared. 'Read it?' replied the seventy-four-year-old disciple, 'I took it up one evening, could not put it down, and sat up all night to finish it.' Beethoven held Cramer in high esteem as an executive artist. There are some amusing references to him in Beethoven's letters. Writing to J. P. Saloman about the English publication of some of his (Beethoven's) works, the composer of the C minor symphony says:—

> 'I hear, indeed, that Cramer is also a publisher. But my pupil Ries lately wrote to me that Cramer not long since publicly expressed his disapproval of my works, I trust from no motive but that of being of service to art, and if so I have no right to object to his doing this. If, however, Cramer should wish to issue any of my pernicious works, I shall be as well satisfied with him as with any other publisher.

The next extract—from a letter in which Beethoven held out the unrealised hope of visiting London—is written in a less sarcastic vein. It is to Ferdinand Ries, and dated Vienna, March 5, 1818:—

> Farewell; remember me to Neate, Smart, and Cramer. Although I understand that the latter is a counter subject both to you and me, still I understand a little the art of managing such folk; so, notwithstanding all this, we shall be able to create agreeable harmony in London. I embrace you from my heart.
> Your friend,
> Beethoven.
> Many best compliments to your charming (and as I hear) beautiful wife.

It must not be inferred, however, that Cramer in any way depreciated Beethoven, who, like many musicians before and since, was not free from hypersensitiveness; nor that he could not interpret Beethoven's works. In proof thereof the following anecdote may be told. On one occasion, at the private house of an amateur in London, there met four of the greatest pianists of the day—Hummel, Kalkbrenner, Moscheles, and Cramer. The first, on being asked to play, improvised at some length, but with comparatively poor results. Kalkbrenner and Moscheles refused to give some 'touch of their quality,' and Cramer was invited to gratify the company. He at first declined to play, but being strongly pressed by Hummel, Cramer consented. 'Sitting down to the pianoforte in his usual unpretending manner,'—records the author of 'Musical Recollections of the last half-century'—'Cramer began to play one of Beethoven's sonatas, then almost entirely new to English, though not to German ears. In a few moments his audience were literally entranced, and sat breathlessly listening to every note and phrase of the several motivos, which seemed to reveal some new inspiration at every turn. When he had finished, Hummel rushed up to him, seized him in his arms, and kissed him on each cheek, exclaiming, "Never till now have I heard Beethoven."'

One more anecdote, in which Liszt—the greatest of all great pianists—figures as the centre of attraction. In the year 1840, during Liszt's visit to England, the veteran 'glorious John' and the 'young lion' met. Cramer, then bordering upon seventy, had not been expressing a particularly high opinion of Liszt, who was a youth of seventeen. But when the latter arrived, the old man joined in the request that he should play. 'Oh, yes,' said Liszt, 'I'll play, and in sooth a duet with you, Mr. Cramer!' Both took their places at the instrument, and seldom was Hummel's beautiful duet sonata in A flat more beautifully played. Old Cramer took the treble, and Liszt, with that true gentlemanly feeling so eminently characteristic of him, 'accommodated' his playing of the bass part to the style of his venerable colleague. When they had finished, Liszt was called upon to perform alone, and this is what he did—he played one Cramer study after another, each one surpassing the other in genial execution. Could there be a more generous tribute of homage from one great artist to another?

Cramer was a prolific composer for the pianoforte. His output included eight, if not more, concertos, 105 sonatas, and a large number of showy pieces of ephemeral value. The 'Periodical Sonatas,' said to have been composed by him, the present writer has been unable to trace, but a clue thereto may be found on the title-page of Op. 42, which states: 'This sonata was composed during the first week in January, 1809.' This may have been one of a periodical series which justified the name. In addition to the foregoing there must be added two pianoforte quintets, about forty trios for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, and two serenades for pianoforte, harp, flute, and two horns. But all these have passed into the region of oblivion. The fame of Cramer rests on his Studies. They have kept his honoured name fresh for nearly a century, and have become an indispensable part of the equipment of all pianists from Liszt downwards. In the words of so eminent an authority as Mr. Dannreuther,—from his fine appreciation of the old pianist in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians'—'Spiritually, though not mechanically, Cramer occupies a field of his own, which all pianists respect. . . . Though not of the first authority, he must be considered one of the fathers of the church of pianoforte-playing, and worthy of consultation at all times.'

The portrait of John Baptist Cramer, which forms our special supplement, is from an oil painting by Mr. John Callcott Horsley, R.A., and an early work of that distinguished artist. It has long been in the possession of Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons, Ltd., and, by their kind permission, is reproduced for the first time.

EXETER AND ITS CATHEDRAL.

Exeter, under its various names of Isca Damnoniorum, Caer Wisc, Exanceaster, is distinguished as the one great English city which has, in a more marked way than any other, kept its unbroken being and its unbroken position throughout all ages. 'It is the one city of the present England,' says Professor Freeman, 'in which we can see within recorded times the Briton and the Englishman living side by side. It is the one city in which we can feel sure that human habitation and city life have never ceased from the days of the early Cæsars to our own.' In the time of Æthelstan, Exeter was a city of two nations and two tongues, and even now the city remains a county in itself. Its existence of more than eighteen hundred years has been so eventful and important as to place it in the front rank of English cities of historical interest. Long after weekly posts were first despatched from London to various parts of England, Exeter was still, as it were, on the borders of territory scarcely explored, and the city was the farthest western point to which letters were conveyed from the Metropolis!

Notwithstanding its fine shops and other indications of twentieth-century bustle, it is still free from electric cars which cut into (and in two) wayfarers on highways. As a matter of fact, the city is almost void of public conveyances of the penny-fare type—even of omnibuses. A disused tram-line laid through part of the city seems to furnish evidence that Exeter clings to old methods. No wonder, therefore, that the stranger within her gates finds a welcome change from the bustling strenuousness that characterises larger centres of population, even though they be of more mushroom growth than the pleasant Western city set upon a hill.

Exeter has received several marks of royal favour, resulting from the visits of various English kings. Edward I. held a parliament there. The courteous Inspector of Police at the ancient Guildhall shows with pride the fine sword of King Edward IV., given to the Mayor of Exeter in the year 1470; also the cap of maintenance and sword of Henry VII., presented in 1497 in return for the loyalty of the citizens, and ordered to be carried before the Mayor on all state occasions. The Guildhall itself, rebuilt in 1330 and 1464, is a noble panelled apartment containing some fine portraits from the brushes of Hudson and Sir Peter Lely. It was in this room that a former Mayor made ready a sumptuous repast to set before their Majesties King George III., Queen Charlotte and daughters three, during their sojourn of three days in the city. The viands included £500 worth of jellies and custards, but this jelliefication was frustrated owing to a serious disagreement between the ecclesiastical and municipal authorities, the former claiming the entire entertainment of the royal visitors. Is it any wonder that the Mayor declined the honour of knighthood!

A walk through the city reveals many features of interest. The musician will probably find his way to the old cemetery, pleasantly situated on sloping ground. In the uppermost tier of graves he will experience reverent emotions in standing over the last resting place of Samuel Sebastian Wesley. The grave, immediately below a high and ivy-covered wall, is severely simple, being covered by a flat stone bearing the following inscription:—

In memory of
Mary, daughter of Samuel Sebastian Wesley, of this city.
She died February 13th, 1840, aged 9 weeks.

Also of the above named Samuel Sebastian Wesley, who died at Gloucester, April 19th, 1876, aged 65 years.

Wesley particularly wished to be buried in the same grave as his much-loved infant and only daughter. Another grave may be visited, situated within the walls of St. Stephen's Church—that of the composer of 'Jackson in F,' a native of Exeter and sometime organist of the Cathedral. The inscription reads thus:—

William Jackson
Born in this city xxix May mdccxxx.
Died v July mdcccIII.

In the Science of Music an eminent Professor, whose genius united elegant expression, pure and original melody, with delicacy of harmonic combination. In painting, in literature, in every liberal study that enlightens the intellect, or expands the heart, his attainments were rare and distinguished: a writer, novel and acute in observation, a correct and discriminating critic, endeared to his select associates by a conversation and demeanour of impressive and fascinating simplicity.

Also the remains of Mary Jackson, relict of the above named William Jackson, who died x January, mdcccxl, in the 82nd year of her age.

Mary, wife of John Downman, Esq. (whose remains with those of her four brothers, Charles, Frederick, Romulus and Remus are deposited near this place), directed this monument to be raised; and of herself required no other memorial than that she was the daughter of William Jackson.

In St. Paul's Church we find a tablet bearing the following inscription:—

Richard Langdon, Batchellor of Music,
died the 8th September,
1803, aged 74.

The church of St. Olave's is as curious as it is ancient. Its tower is within and on the right-hand side of the church and the pulpit forms part of it. St. Petrock's is another church of historical interest; the entrance to it is between two shops. It dates back to 1066, and the former church had a Rood-loft on which stood an organ dating from 1472. In 1513 a Jesus Altar was erected, and the aisle called Jesus Aisle. The Vicars' College (or College Hall) is an ancient room which stands in South Street. It was originally built in 1388 for the use of the cathedral vicars, Priest and Lay, by Bishop Brantyngham, and in 1401 the Society was incorporated by Royal Charter. The present building, circa 1530, is all that remains of the Vicars' Close. It contains several portraits and some fine specimens of old oak furniture, and is used by the College of Vicars for their business meetings.

Almshouses are much in evidence in Exeter. These quiet spots are pleasantly situated, and betoken a happy haven of rest for those who have borne the burden and heat of the day. In two instances their picturesque and cobble-faced courtyards contain miniature chapels, still used by the inmates for divine service. Mention must of course be made of Rougemont Castle, probably dating from Saxon times, besieged in the reign of King Stephen and bravely defended by Baldwin de Redvers, Earl of Devon, in 1140. The visit of King Richard III. to the castle in 1483 is referred to by Shakespeare in his play of that name (Act iv., Sc. 2):—

Richmond!—when last I was at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle,
And call'd it—Rouge-mont: at which name I started;
Because a bard of Ireland told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

and no one is more qualified to say it—'forms a class by itself. As far as detail goes, no building of its age shows us the taste of that age in greater perfection.' Its external length is 409 feet, and the Choir and Lady Chapel together are longer than the Nave. If, therefore, vastness is not a feature of this Cathedral there are some splendid compensations. The visitor on beholding the West Front is struck with its hoary or grey-beard appearance. The sculptured screen, containing sixty-five figures of apostles, martyrs, saints and kings, is an addition to the main building. Behind this screen, and in the thickness of the great West wall, is an interesting chapel dedicated to St. Radegund. But the chief external glory of Exeter is manifested in the 'cliff-like' masonry

While in this fortress region it may be mentioned that the Volunteer movement originated (in 1852) in Exeter. It was the outcome of suggestions made by Dr. John Charles Bucknill to the Lord Lieutenant of the County. Dr. Bucknill became Secretary of a Committee for carrying out the idea; volunteers were enrolled, and the Exeter corps consequently enjoys the proud distinction of being the 1st R.V. At one time the city was a place of coinage; the product of its mint is known by the letter E immediately under the King's head.

The Cathedral Church of St. Peter, Exeter, possesses a distinctive beauty all its own. 'The Church of Exeter,' says Dr. Freeman—of the stately Transeptal Towers, unique in this country, except the church of Ottery St. Mary, a copy of Exeter. These noble Norman creations, reared in 1112, are like castles, 'and,' as Chancellor Edmonds says, 'it is possible that some idea of defence was in the mind of their builders.' Standing on the top of one of these Transeptal Towers, one cannot fail to be impressed with their colleagues, so to speak, in strength and beauty, the imposing flying buttresses and the graceful pinnacles, all of which are marked features of Exeter's chief sanctuary.

But what may be said of the interior? Much more than space permits, even were it possible to attempt an adequate description of its manifold beauties. First, the richly-ribbed roof extends throughout the entire length of the building. Well may Chancellor Edmonds say 'it is the high-water mark of English vaulting.' There is no Lantern to break the continuity of this perfect roof—'one church from end to end, a church at unity in itself.' Next, the beautiful Purbeck marble columns, due to the genius of the great Bishop Quivil. 'Standing between the Lady Chapel and the Choir, the visitor is in the cradle where Quivil rocked his ideas. There the pillar grew: the Exeter pillar of sixteen shafts was born there. The eye falls there upon a fourfold pillar, then upon an eightfold; then upon a clustered pillar of sixteen shafts. Thenceforth there is no change; that pillar is repeated everywhere and carries harmony in form and colour from one end to the other.'*

In the Clerestory region is a beautiful Minstrels' gallery, which gives the Cathedral quite a foreign character. Twelve winged figures fill the front space and the two returns. This fourteenth-century orchestra consists of two guitars, bagpipes, flageolet, violin, harp, two wind instruments, trumpet, organ, tambour and cymbals, as shown in our illustration. The Clerestory windows are unusually large, and as they are not coloured the flying buttresses can be seen through them. Among the details of the wealth of decoration mention must be made of the corbels in the Nave, which form quite a portrait gallery of Plantagenets. The excellent modern stained glass of Messrs. Clayton and Bell is an appropriate adjunct to the stonework of past ages.

The Bishop's throne, nearly six hundred years old, is of oak, and although it rises more than sixty feet from the floor, it does not contain a single nail. This splendid canopied seat has more than once been taken to pieces. One of the forty Misereres is carved with the figure of a knight in a boat drawn by a swan; it is probably the first appearance of Lohengrin in Exeter. To sum up, this interior is not only a study in bilateral symmetry, but it leaves an impression upon the beholder of something that is harmoniously beautiful.

A visit to the Cathedral Library is made specially enjoyable and instructive with the Rev. Chancellor Edmonds as a cicerone. Its chief treasure is the volume known as the Codex Exoniensis, or Exeter Book, a precious manuscript of the eighth, or beginning of the ninth century. This 'most glorious relic of pre-Conquest literature' is written in West Saxon (Anglo-Saxon) language, by Cynewulf. Its author was discovered by a passage in one of the poems containing Runes representing the letters forming the name Cynewulf. The contents form a great English book on all sorts of subjects wrought in verse, beginning with a fine Christian Epic on Christ. This is followed by other poems, allegorical and otherwise, of varied interest in which, as the Chancellor points out, Milton and Wordsworth are foreshadowed. We give a specimen stanza (original and translation) from the 'Christ' poem, wherein the writer refers to life as a perilous voyage, but there is a heavenly port and a heavenly pilot:—

Utan us to thære hythe	Let us in that port
hyht stathelian	our confidence plant, tha us gerymde	which for us laid open
rodera waldend	the Lord of the skies,
halge on heahthum	(holy port in the heights)
the he heofnum astag.	when he went up to heaven.†

A charter of Æthelred (993) and a manuscript of Canute (1018) take us back to a remote past in the history of our country. Of special interest is the Foundation Charter of Exeter Cathedral, placed by Edward the Confessor on the altar of St. Peter (the Cathedral) at the enthronement of Leofric, the first Bishop, in 1050. This remarkable document, 850 years old, and which remained unknown for three hundred years, transferred the See of the Bishopric from Crediton to Exeter. It bears at the foot the names of 'Eadweard (the Confessor), his two Archbishops, Earl Godwine, and Harold, his son, who fell at the Battle of Hastings, half-a-dozen bishops and abbots and an equal number of nobles and thanes. 'Are these the original signatures?' we ask Chancellor Edmonds. 'Probably none of them could write,' he replies, with a merry twinkle in his eye. Another manuscript is the Exeter Domesday, of 1086, a description of lands in the counties of Devon, Wilts, Dorset, Somerset and Cornwall—the original Rolls made by the Conqueror's commissioners.

The Act Books of the Cathedral contain much interesting information on various matters, Later on, however, the authorities seem to have been more liberal—perhaps their consciences were 'prick'd,'—as in 1748 they authorised the following payment:—

Silvester's note for pricking services . . . £1. 7s. 6d.

In 1678 the bells were hung 'Sally-wise' by a Mr. Warren at a cost of £40. This reference to the bells suggests mention of the recent recasting of two and the rehanging of the whole of this fine peal of ten bells, with an extra one sounding A flat:—

musical and otherwise. For instance, an entry at Michaelmas, 1389, reads:—

For mending the organs of the chapel of St. Mary's [the Lady Chapel] . . . 12s. 4d.

Ten years later the following extravagant expenditure is recorded:—

Paid for a porpoise taken at Dawlish for the use of the Canons . . . 6d.

Under the heading 'Quire, 1681,' we find this economical 'act' of the Dean and Chapter:—

Ordered that ye several Vicars and Secondaries shall prick their own books or get them to be done at their own expence.

The last bell of the series gives forth a lovely note, and the whole peal is not only a delight to the ear, but the heaviest and finest toned in the country. It will be observed that with the aid of the extra (A flat) bell the melodic minor scale of C can be obtained—'producing a very beautiful effect when muffled for a funeral,' remarks Dr. Wood; an effect, we may add, that is 'most musical, most melancholy.'

To return to the Act Books. There is more than one entry bearing testimony to strained relations between Dr. S. S. Wesley and the Chapter during the organistship of the former. Here is one under date of May 16, 1840 :—

They [the Dean and Chapter] ordered that Dr. Wesley be informed that he is not to give lessons on the organ either to his apprentices or to any other person, the order not being meant to extend to a prohibition to the apprentices to practise any service for use in the church.

In less than a year the composer of 'The Wilderness' shook the dust of Exeter from off his feet and went to Leeds; but before his successor was appointed the Chapter drew up a long Minute setting forth the duties of the organist in stringent terms. Poor Wesley! His genius and methods were not understood and certainly not appreciated by the Exeter and other cathedral clergy of his day.

Before referring to the organs and organists of the Cathedral, one or two of the Bishops may be mentioned. A former holder of the See of Exeter was Miles Coverdale, the famous reformer, whose translation of the Psalms still holds its place in the Book of Common Prayer. The name of Jonathan Trelawney is preserved in the famous Cornish ballad in which occur the words 'And shall Trelawney die?' Bishop Blackall (1717), the founder of Charity Schools, bore the christian name of Offspring, and of more recent bishops the names of Frederick Temple, now Archbishop of Canterbury, and Edward Henry Bickersteth, the editor of the 'Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer,' will readily be recalled. But a quartet of noble Bishops must yet be added to the above—Peter Quivil (1280), designer and first builder of the Decorated Cathedral; Thomas Bitton (1292), who carried on the Quivil traditions; Walter de Stapeldon (1308) and John Grandisson (1327), the last named 'the most magnificent of all the Bishops of Exeter'—for the noble work they did in the erection of the Cathedral, and whose memories are engraven in the beautiful fane as we behold it to-day.

We may now turn to matters strictly musical, and first, the organ. One of the earliest entries in the Rolls is for mending (claudenda) the organs in 1280. A charge 'pro novis organis in pulpit' appears in 1513; but the pulpit therein referred to is the organ screen, from which elevated spot the Bishop preached. But the first important organ in Exeter Cathedral was that built in 1665 by John Loosemore, a native of Exeter and resident in the city. This fine instrument, mentioned by Macaulay in his 'History of England,' consisted of great and choir manuals, each having a compass of four octaves and a fifth, GGG to D^2. It contained a very remarkable double open diapason stop. The speaking part of its largest pipe (GGG) was 20 ft. 6 in. long, and so capacious that it could hold three hogsheads, 8 gallons!

Between the year 1660-67 the records contain several references to the building of Loosemore's organ, e.g. :—

Jan., 166$\frac{3}{4}$. They [the Dean and Chapter] ordered that Mr. Loosemore shall be sent into Cornwall unto my Lord of Bath att ye comon charge of the Chapter to make choice of Tyn for the new organs to be made in this church.

March, 166$\frac{3}{4}$. They ordered the horshire for Mr. Loosemore and his man to be paid for their journey into Cornwall.

Oct. 1663. They ordered Mr. Loosemore's charges to be paid by the Chapter in riding to Salisbury to see the organ there, the better to inform himselfe to make the new organ of this church.

Jan., 166$\frac{3}{4}$. 20*l* lent to Mr. John Loosemore.
[This entry was probably a payment on account of the organ, which occupied two years in building.]

Loosemore is buried in the Cathedral; his monument bears a Latin inscription, of which the following translation, by Mr. John S. Bumpus, is taken from Mr. John E. West's 'Cathedral Organists' :—

Here lies, in hope of the Resurrection, John Loos(e)more, formerly the most faithful Curator to the Dean and Chapter of this Church, and by far the chief among the workmen of his kind: may this noble organ, placed near, be a perpetual monument of his art and genius.
He died 18 April, 1681, in the 68th year of his age.

In course of time the organ underwent repair at the hands of Christopher Schrider, Abraham Jordan, who 'transposed the whole organ for the benefit of the choir,' and other builders. The present instrument, built in 1891, is an unusually fine specimen of the handiwork of Father Willis, and consists of four manuals, fifty-seven sounding stops, ten couplers, and two ventils—sixty-nine draw-stops in all. Two open diapasons of Loosemore's organ still remain in the great organ. The late Sir John Stainer had a special predilection for this Exeter Cathedral organ, which he regarded as one of the most beautifully-voiced instruments he had ever heard: need anything more be said?

Before making mention of some of the organists, it may be stated that Exeter is a cathedral of the old foundation—Bishop and Canons, not Abbot and Monks. There are always two Canons in residence, and the Chapter meets weekly, on Saturday mornings, for the dispatch of business. The College of Vicars—Priest and Lay, the latter to the number of twelve—has been already referred to. There is a choir school at which the fourteen choristers are educated, boarded and partly clothed. The excellent tone of the choir, and their artistic rendering of the service have been frequently remarked upon, and deservedly so, by musical visitors. The voluntary Sunday evening choir which leads the singing at the congregational service in the Nave, consists of forty-two voices.

The first known organist of Exeter Cathedral was 'a pious, gentle and clever youth' named Matthew Godwin, who 'lived seventeen years and five months, and departed hence to heaven, 12 January, 1586,' as the Latin monument to his memory in the North transept records. To him succeeded, first, Arthur Cock, and then Edward Gibbons, elder brother of the famous Orlando. Mr. Richard Henman—who came upon the scene one hundred years after Mr. Cock—was dismissed (in 1741) 'for his long absence and disorderly life'; this proceeding of the Dean and Chapter may have accounted for his only known anthem, 'Have mercy.'

Richard Langdon, composer of the well-known double chant in F bearing his name, reigned from 1753 to 1777. A manuscript evening service in G, by him, is still sung in the Cathedral. It is somewhat in the style of the well-known services of King. Langdon was followed by William Jackson, of 'Jackson in F' fame. No manuscript copy of this celebrated service is to be found at Exeter; it must have been sung there long before it was printed at the instigation of Jackson's successor, James Paddon, some years after the composer's death. The inscription on Jackson's monument, already quoted, states the versatility of his gifts, of which the Service in F is perhaps the weakest example.

From 1835 to 1842 the chief musician was Samuel Sebastian Wesley. It may suffice to add to what has so often been said, that he composed while at Exeter those beautiful organ pieces which he dedicated to Lady Acland, a member of one of the best known families in Devonshire.

The present holder of the organistship is Dr. Daniel Joseph Wood, who was born at Brompton, near Chatham, August 25, 1849. As a boy he entered the choir of Rochester Cathedral. Among his fellow choristers were the late Joseph Maas and Dr. Joseph C. Bridge, of Chester Cathedral; the eldest brother of the latter, Sir Frederick Bridge, had left the choir just before Master Wood joined. After having been deputy-organist of Rochester Cathedral, Dr. Wood held, in succession, the organistships of Holy Trinity Church, Old Brompton (Kent); Cranbrook Parish Church; Lee Parish Church; Boston (Lincolnshire) Parish Church; and Chichester Cathedral. In 1876, upon the death of Alfred Angel, Dr. Wood was appointed organist of Exeter Cathedral, a post which he still worthily holds, the services testifying to the reverent and painstaking care with which he discharges his duties. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists and Bachelor of Music in the University of Oxford; in 1896 he received the Degree of Doctor of Music Cantuar. As conductor of the Western Counties Musical Association and the Exeter Orchestral Society, Dr. Wood extends the scope of his artistic interests beyond the Cathedral precincts, and his influence on music in the city and surroundings of Exeter is distinctly for its progress and well being. In the Rev. Arnold D. Culley, Mus. Bac., one of the Priest Vicars, Dr. Wood has an excellent colleague as Sub-Organist, an official appointment rightly made by the Dean and Chapter.

Finally, full acknowledgment, coupled with thanks, must be made of the valued assistance rendered by the Rev. Chancellor W. J. Edmonds, B.D., Canon of Exeter, and Dr. D. J. Wood, organist, in the preparation of these notes on Exeter and its Cathedral.

A FORGOTTEN ENTHUSIAST.

In the history of English Music it would not be easy—I may go farther, and declare that it would be absolutely impossible—to find so genuine a critic, so thorough a learner, so indefatigable a labourer in the fields of his art as was Dr. Charles Burney. Not for the first time have I taken pen wherewith to expound his merits, and to linger upon his most indubitable gifts of resolution, of stern devotion to his innermost ideals, and to note the physical martyrdom to which he chose to subject himself in the pursuit of his pet aims. Burney, as I shall attempt to show through his own words, was an insatiable musician. His accomplishment lay almost altogether on the critical side of the matter, and in this province he thirsted for refreshment. No traveller stepping the desert (and music in England was a veritable desert in the day of his enthusiasm) was more eager for an oasis, for a pool with its triple palms, than was Burney for the confirmation of his desires, for the 'Invention'—in the elder sense of the term—of his assured fellowship in art throughout the whole world. There is a strange picture of him in Macaulay. To the literary man whose sense of literary prose rhythm was only surpassed by his utter, his abased, his acknowledged ignorance of musical rhythm, Dr. Burney was famous merely and actually as the father of the author of 'Evelina,' 'Cecilia,' 'Camilla.'* Macaulay rightly appreciated the value of the Lady of Fiction. Yet who now reads 'Cecilia'? Who reads the 'Diary'? On the other hand, Macaulay was totally ignorant of the real value of Fanny Burney's father. It was far more important to him that Johnson should have petted the young girl at the house in St. Martin's Lane, than that Charles Burney should have speculated profoundly upon the art of his choice, and upon the musical tendencies of the various countries through which he travelled. Macaulay makes indeed the most casual of references, as though he were unearthing a dilettante matter of the least historical moment, to certain musical parties given by Burney, at which his daughter met the types of such characters as she embodied in the pages of 'Evelina.'

All the while that grave and reverend 'Signior' had been building up unseen foundations of a really great future reputation. Just as it may be the fashion of to-day for a 'man about town' to assure a musician, not without pride in the assurance, that—'I know nothing whatever about music, but I think very little of Edward Elgar'—so the wits and fops made a goddess of the daughter, and frankly confessed that the father was a negligeable quantity. And to-day some of us who agree very whole-heartedly with the verdict of praise given in favour of Fanny Burney, cannot help feeling a certain regret that a tradition bolstered up by Macaulay should still remain a matter of serious influence with the bulk of readers. 'Mr. Burney,' writes this master of the greatest occasional prose in the language, 'obtained the degree of Doctor of Music from the University of Oxford; and his works on subjects connected with his art gained him a place, respectable, though certainly not eminent, among men of letters.' It sufficed for Macaulay that his literary master, Johnson, 'condescended to growl out that Burney was an honest fellow, a man whom it was impossible not to like.' Nor did it occur to this man of rare accomplishment, so disdainful of every art other than his own, that it must necessarily have ensured the possession of surely an amazing and extraordinary capacity that, for example, the cream of Italian artists in visiting England 'exerted themselves to obtain his suffrage,' that Pachierotti became his most intimate friend, that even Agujari sang for him for the pleasure of the thing, or that all the lovers of music who visited the glimpses of a too often obscured London moon created a blockade on his concert nights with their chariots, or that on these occasions 'his little drawing-room was crowded with peers, peeresses, ministers, and ambassadors.' In a word, to Macaulay, Dr. Burney was the father of his daughter; it is permissible to thank 'whatever gods may be' that the historian may to-day recognise Fanny Burney as the daughter of her father.

* Sir George Trevelyan records that Macaulay knew two tunes—'God save the Queen,' and the other. The splendid formalist of words was rather proud of his limitations in this respect; and yet the same writer conceived the peroration to the Essay on 'Warren Hastings,' and he wrote the Roll Call of St. Peter's ad Vincula of the Tower. With these prose fantasias to remember him by, the mystery of music becomes all the more remote and insoluble, in view of his entire lack of musical ear.

And yet 'A Forgotten Enthusiast'—as I have called this paper—surely describes him not inaptly. Madame D'Arblay's novels are of course gone hence, and Burney is haply read not widely. But whereas the modern reader cannot (to be frank) go on, in Lowell's expressive phrase, with her books, Burney has only to be read in order to charm, to pique, and to engross. I have called him an insatiable musician. 'I travelled,' says he, 'not as a musician usually travels, to get money, but to spend it in search of musical merit and talents, wherever I could find them, in order to display them to my countrymen.' He is a man of his opinions. (He would have had none of Wagner.) 'The rage,' he cries, 'for crude, equivocal and affected modulation which now prevails generally all over Germany renders voluntary playing a torture to the ear. A little of this high sauce, discreetly used, produces great and surprising effects; but for ever to be seeking for far-fetched and extraneous harmony is giving a man that is hungry nothing but chian to eat, instead of plain and wholesome food.' Then again there are his views upon John Sebastian the Great and Emanuel the Lesser Bach. The first he admired for his 'technical quality,' but his accomplishment had 'crabbed' him; the second was the divine melodist. And to-day where is the level of the son when you compare it to the level of the father? However these verdicts (and I have given a few of the more surprising only) may to-day be regarded—and Burney, awaiting us all in the Elysian Fields may, for aught we know, have some final words to say on the subject of his opinions—they prove how nobly enthusiastic was this man in the cause of his art. They show his magnificent single-mindedness, his splendid intolerance, his fine industry, his yet finer fanaticism.

Art and the phases of Art must hang under, in some respects,—in those, namely, of immediately personal judgment—somewhat mobile influences. Those rare creatures (in creative no less than in critical art) who fly ahead of their time, even as pioneer swallows start perilously on their Southward pathway, must encounter storm and stress in their going. Burney was not among these. Even his admiration of Gluck was unpunctual, however whole-hearted. He was pre-eminently a practical theorist of his time. A man, I take him to be, who with almost acute sentiment appreciated the best in the world that had just passed over his head. Keenly critical, brave to even splendid excesses, a man of candour and of kindness, affectionate to a fault, liberal with certain precautions, he just remained within the circle—that teasing circle!—of his own particular period. Still, he lives to-day, a pleasant creature, a most engrossing entertainer, to any modern mind with a bent of curious enquiry. I am not at all persuaded that his books would not be read with quite keen interest, if presented to the public of this generation in modern dress—with as keen an interest, I will even dare to add, as to-day the 'Journey to the Hebrides' is read, with an interest far more vital than that which approaches that dreary classic 'Rasselas.' The ghosts of that day may well be awestruck to consider the possibility of such a judgment, written more than a century since the death of my forgotten enthusiast. Let us, however, think of him crowned with posthumous honours among his shadowy companions, and now invited, by reason of the fact, to quaff an extra goblet of nectar.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH:

PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

By Professor Prout.

(Concluded from page 594.)

No. 33.—Chorus.—'Lift up your heads.' There is hardly another number of the oratorio in which the text is so corrupt as in this chorus. At bar 11, Handel, following the authorized version of the 24th Psalm, writes 'Who is this King of Glory?' I have felt it my duty to give Handel's original text here; but I have inserted it in smaller type above the version in general use, which is certainly rather easier to sing. Conductors can choose whichever version they prefer. In bar 13 the first violin part must be—

not, as printed

For this error Walsh is not responsible; he gives the passage correctly. But the next mistake is found in his score. At bar 24 the last two quavers of Viol. 1° must be—

In bars 27 to 29 Handel wrote—

Every edition I have seen gives—

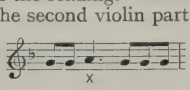
The composer writes a semiquaver to the word 'of' in each of the three bars.

A more important alteration is needed in the following bars (30 to 33). Here every edition has in each bar the figure—

Handel, in the autograph, distinctly writes in this and the following bars—

—a far superior reading musically. In the Dublin score the leaf containing this passage is missing; but Mr. Goldschmidt's score agrees with the autograph. I have therefore unhesitatingly adopted the reading.

At bar 43 the second violin part should be—



Instead of the dot after A, the printed scores give a quaver rest. Again, at bar 65, the first two notes in the viola are—as printed. But the most important mistake of all occurs at bars 69 and 70. Every edition has in the bass—and this reading of the autograph is confirmed both by the Dublin score and by Mr. Goldschmidt's copy. Here again, as usual, Walsh is the original offender; but it is rather surprising that, though the facsimile of the autograph has been published more than thirty years, not one of the numerous editions of the oratorio which have appeared since 1868 has given the text correctly. Of the ad libitum trombone parts which I have added to this chorus, I have spoken above; my only other addition to the score has been the organ part.

Handel wrote a different sequence:—

No. 34.—Recit.—'Unto which of the angels.'

No. 35.—Chorus.—'Let all the angels of God.'

No. 36.—Air.—'Thou art gone up on high.' These three numbers, being generally omitted in performance, are given in an Appendix. I have therefore thought it superfluous either to write an organ part for the chorus or to complete the instrumentation of the air, and have contented myself with a collation of the text. The only correction to be made is in No. 36, where, at bar 56, the violin part must be—as printed.

No. 37.—Chorus.—'The Lord gave the word.' At the beginning of this chorus, and on the repetition of the subject in bars 9 and 10, I have adopted Crotch's reading, and substituted semiquavers for quavers (see the remarks on No. 26). At bar 4 the printed scores have five F's in the tenor instead of five D's, as in the autograph; this is one of the few mistakes that Franz has corrected in his edition. But in bar 14 he has gone with the multitude to do evil, by retaining Walsh's mistake, naturally copied by Mozart, and giving the first two notes in the viola as Handel wrote Excepting the addition of an organ part, I have not touched Mozart's score.

No. 38.—Air.—'How beautiful are the feet.' In this movement Handel has omitted the usual indication as to Ripieni. It is obvious that the accompaniment should be senza Rip., which I have therefore added in brackets. This number is another of those which in Mozart's score is very unsatisfactory. Not only has he (as already mentioned) given much of Handel's violin part to the flute, but a great deal of the accompaniment is left very thin. I have therefore to a great extent re-scored the air.

No. 39.—Chorus.—'Their sound is gone out.' In this chorus I have restored Handel's oboe parts, which Mozart had given to clarinets, and have written an organ part; there is no further change in the number.

No. 40.—Air.—'Why do the nations.' Here I have retained Mozart's effective and dramatic addition of trumpets and drums, excepting in the cadence at bar 67. This air is always performed with a Da Capo of the first part, which is absolutely contrary to the composer's intention. Had he meant it he would most certainly have not only written 'D.C.' at the end, but he would have put a 𝄐 over the C in bar 74. Further proof is given by the abridged version of the air found in the Dublin score—also in the Hamburg and Foundling Hospital copies—in which only the first thirty-eight bars are retained. In these copies the words of the second part of the air, 'The kings of the earth rise up,' are set as a recitative, the autograph of which is in the Dublin score. The page has been reproduced in Chrysander's facsimile (p. 326), and at the end Handel has written, not 'D.C.,' but 'Coro. Let us break their bonds asunder.' Whichever version is used, it is quite evident that the composer intended the chorus to follow immediately after the cadence in E minor.

Two mistakes are found in the printed scores. At bar 10 the first crotchet in the second violin must be—and at bar 30 Handel writes

but all the editions give

The mistakes are, as usual, both due to Walsh, who has been copied by other editors. The harmonies for the strings which I have added in the last two bars of this number are Handel's own, and are those which he used when he changed the latter part of the air into a recitative.

No. 41.—Chorus.—'Let us break their bonds asunder.' The tempo of this number is given by Walsh, and following editors of the full score, 'Larghetto e staccato.' Handel writes 'Allegro e staccato.' At bars 28 and 29 the instrumental bass should be—

not, as printed, and in bar 65, the second crotchet in the first violin must be—

I have adopted Handel's instrumentation for this number, exactly as in No. 28.

No. 42.—Recit.—'He that dwelleth in heaven'; No. 43.—Air.—'Thou shalt break them.' I have already given the reasons which have induced me to make considerable modifications in Mozart's score of this air. In addition to what has been said above, it should be here added that in two passages (bars 40 to 42, and 53 to 56) I have removed Mozart's string parts, and given the harmonies to the wind, in accordance with the plan that I have mostly pursued—that of employing strings only where Handel has himself introduced them, and replacing the harpsichord by wind instruments.

At bar 38 of this air is a figure in the first violin which in the autograph is written—while in the Dublin score we find—

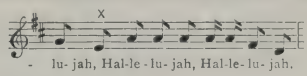
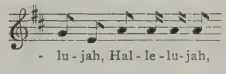
Mr. Goldschmidt's copy agrees with the autograph, and the printed full scores with the Dublin score. The decision as to the preferable text has cost me more thought and trouble than any other doubtful reading in the oratorio. The conclusion at which I have finally arrived is, that the later reading in the Dublin score is most likely a correction by the composer himself. In coming to this conclusion I am influenced by two reasons. The version seen in the autograph gives a chord of the dominant seventh, in which the seventh, G, receives no proper resolution. In the only analogous passage in the air (bar 67), Handel takes care to resolve his discord regularly. Moreover, though Mr. Goldschmidt's score corroborates the reading of the autograph, internal evidence shows that it is an earlier copy than the Dublin score; it will be remembered that both are in Smith's handwriting. This is proved by the fact that it neither contains the later version of 'Rejoice greatly,' nor the abridged arrangement of 'Why do the nations,' both of which are in the Dublin score. It is the reading of the latter that I have therefore retained in the text.

No. 44.—Chorus.—'Hallelujah.' In this chorus Handel several times writes the last syllable of the word 'Hallelujah,' and the first syllable of the same word repeated, to one note. The first instance of this is in the alto of bar 24:—



All published editions of the oratorio give Walsh's reading—



I have restored Handel's text here, and in the similar passages (soprano, bar 31, bass, bars 31 and 32).

At bars 70 and 71 every edition, whether of the full or vocal score, has the words wrong in the tenor. All read—which, it will be seen, omits the final words 'and ever.' An examination of the autograph shows that Handel at first wrote—

He did not complete the sentence, but erased the word 'for' and altered the notes in bar 71; his final version is—which I have of course adopted in the text.

At bar 16 the second crotchet in the viola should be—which is wrongly printed in all the scores as—and at bar 23 the first crotchet in the second violin must be—

It should also be mentioned that there is no authority in the autograph for the traditional piano (bar 33) at the words 'The kingdom of this world.' I have not felt justified in omitting it, but have put it in brackets.

Throughout this number Mozart has treated Handel's trumpet parts in the most arbitrary manner, cutting out nearly all the brilliant melodic passages which the composer had so freely introduced, and substituting for them commonplace fanfares on tonic and dominant. I have felt it to be an obvious duty to restore the original parts as far as possible; but in a few places (bars 20, 55, 56, 79, and 86) I have made slight modifications where Handel had written the passages so high as to be unsafe for players of the present day. I have also added trombones and a fully written out organ part.

PART III.

No. 45.—Air.—'I know that my Redeemer liveth.' There are several mistakes in the printed editions of this number. In bars 12 and 13 the first violin part is—not, as in Walsh and those who have copied him,—

At bar 22 the published scores mark either f or mf. In the autograph Handel has expressly written piano. At bars 58 and 59 Mr. Goldschmidt's score has an alteration in the setting of words, made in Smith's handwriting, which is so manifest an improvement that I have had no hesitation in adopting it. The printed copies read—

Mr. Goldschmidt's score has—

In bar 84 is seen again the old notation spoken of under No. 5. Handel's intention is clearly—

At bar 104 Handel wrote—

At bars 150 and 151 is another improved setting of the words, again from Mr. Goldschmidt's copy. Handel first wrote—an exceedingly clumsy setting, altered in the printed scores to—

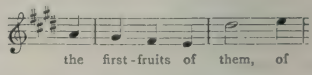
I have adopted the far better version of Mr. Goldschmidt's copy—



In the following bar the final cadence is wrong in most editions. Handel wrote, not—

Mr. Goldschmidt's copy of this air has a large number of ornaments added in the voice part. One example is given. At bar 92 his MS. reads—

It is quite possible that such embellishments were usual; but I omit them, as not authorized by the autograph. On this point it is worth mentioning that, through the kindness of Mr. Goldschmidt, I have had the opportunity of examining a copy of the 'Messiah' used by the late Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt when she studied the work under Sir George Smart before singing it in England. Sir George wrote into her copy all the embellishments which were traditional; these mostly consisted of appogiaturas and ornamental flourishes at the cadences. After carefully weighing the matter, Madame Lind-Goldschmidt (I cannot but think, very wisely) declined to adopt them, and decided to give the plain text as Handel left it. Mozart's instrumentation of this air is in parts so incomplete that I have thought it advisable to write a fresh score.

No. 46.—Chorus.—'Since by man came death.' There is not the least authority, either in the autograph, in Smith's copies, or in the earliest published scores, for the modern custom of giving the two short movements 'Since by man came death' and 'For as in Adam all die' to solo voices. In the index of Walsh's edition the four movements are all included under one title—'Chorus—Since by man came death.' Had Handel intended a solo quartet, he would certainly have indicated it, as he does in the quartets in the Funeral Anthem, where he expressly writes 'Solo' to each voice. Besides this, the two Grave movements are written for unaccompanied chorus, as is clearly shown by the rests in the bass staff of the orchestra. We have here a chorus in four short movements, corresponding in form to the chorus 'Their bodies are buried in peace' in the Funeral Anthem, in which the slow movements are also unaccompanied, the orchestra entering, as here, with the change of tempo. I have therefore removed Mozart's wind parts to the Grave movements, but retained them in the quick movements following. Beyond writing out the organ part, I have not touched Mozart's score in the two Allegros. The four movements should be given continuously, and without a pause after each.

No. 47.—Recit.—'Behold I tell you a mystery'; No. 48.—Air—'The trumpet shall sound.' In Mozart's score only a mutilated version of this air is given, which is never performed in this country. I have completed Handel's harmony, where needful, by the addition of clarinets and bassoons, to replace the harpsichord. As the second part of this air is always omitted in performance, I have not thought it necessary to complete the instrumentation, but have printed it, as in the case of No. 36, as it appears in Handel's autograph, with the addition of the figured bass given in Walsh's score.

Of the correct reading of the rhythm I have already spoken (see No. 5); it must be pointed out here that the printed editions give it in the opening symphony much oftener than Handel wrote it. After the first two bars the autograph gives continuously to the end of the symphony. Similar changes were needed in other places (trumpet, bars 36, 100, 103 and 104; voice and bassi, bar 104). On the other hand, at bar 50 the 1st violin part, printed—and at bar 183 the voice should have—not

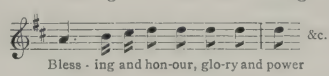
The autograph of this air furnishes one of the rare examples of an unsingable setting of the words, resulting from Handel's imperfect acquaintance with our language. At bar 51, and on repetitions of the same passage, he wrote—

The correction, as found in all editions, is already made in Smith's copies.

No. 49.—Recit.—'Then shall be brought to pass'; No. 50.—Duet.—'O death, where is thy sting?'; No. 51.—Chorus.—'But thanks be to God'; No. 52.—Air.—'If God be for us.' These numbers, being always omitted in performance, are put into the Appendix. Nos. 50 and 51 are given with Mozart's orchestration; of No. 52 his score gives only the gross caricature now known to be Hiller's work. I have therefore, as with No. 36, given this movement in its original form. The text in all these numbers happens to be unusually correct; the only point calling for remark is, that in the duet, the Dublin score has at bar 5 a cut, in Handel's writing, to bar 23; to effect this he has added the notes and words in the alto printed small in bar 5. The cut is shown in the present edition by the marks * and **.

No. 53.—Final Chorus.—'Worthy is the Lamb.' In this number, as in the 'Hallelujah,' I have restored Handel's trumpet parts, with only the modification of a few high notes. I will merely call attention to the great improvement of the effect of these parts in bars 56 and 57 as being (quite apart from any question of reverence for the composer's intention) amply sufficient to justify the restoration of the original text. I have also given his own reading:—



of which I have already spoken, instead of the far inferior—to be found in all printed copies. I have further added parts for trombones and organ, and have in the greater part of the 'Amen' replaced Mozart's oboe parts by Handel's own. There are two mistakes in the printed scores that needed correction. In bar 47 the last two notes of the viola must be—not and in bar 51 the second group of semiquavers in the first violin is not—like the first, but

I have entered very fully into details in this account of the text, first, because nothing is unimportant that concerns so great a masterpiece as the 'Messiah'; and secondly, because it was only by showing the defects and inaccuracies of existing editions that the appearance of a new one could be justified. I dare not venture to hope that everything found in this volume will meet with unanimous approval; but I can truly say that I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to reproduce Handel's intentions, as I understand them, and so far as they can be realized under modern conditions. Wherever I have added to, or altered Mozart, it has been to bring his work nearer to Handel's original; in no single instance have I arbitrarily added anything of my own. And it is as an honest effort to reproduce, as nearly as possible, both the letter and the spirit of Handel's greatest oratorio that I offer it to my brother musicians and to all lovers of the composer.

Equal temperament has so thoroughly become an accepted article of creed among musicians that the old cry of 'Wolf' is no longer heard. It was not always so. One of the most uncompromising opponents of the new method was Samuel Sebastian Wesley. The following letter, written to Dr. T. Linnington Ash, J.P., of Holsworthy, Devon, and printed by his kind permission, puts the case, from Wesley's point of view, in an interesting and amusing manner:—

Gloucester, Feb. 23 [1870].

. . . . As to equal tuning—as you speak so clearly about it I will own I do not like it. It is a long story to enter on, so I will only say that I can never enjoy playing on an organ where nothing is in tune, where simple triads produce the effect on the ear which dissolving views do to the eye before the picture has reached its full focus. All the organ builders are against it, but have had to yield to fashion, and having once taken the plunge they are like the fox in the fable and recommend all foxes to give up their tails. The fashion was, I think, set by one who was ever trying to improve English customs upon German examples—the late ——. Costa is very ignorant in many ways, and he would not have the old tuning because wolf was very bad when joined to the orchestra, but he should have known how to select his organist. The well-taught organist never would use his organ in the bad chords: no one ever did so when we had good English conductors.

Some time since I 'opened' an organ where the donor of the instrument would not have the equal tuning, and the critics for the press said that as I used the organ there was nothing bad in the old tuning. But more than this the organ sounded as no equally tuned organ could ever sound. The old tuning has many friends and I don't hesitate to recommend it. Bryceson is building a little organ for a friend of mine and the expression he uses in his letter is, you can have the sweet tuning. No doubt, it is sweet in the good chords: never sweet in the new tuning. But writers in the press may find fault with you if they know you don't adopt the fashionable practice. If nothing is said about it, they will not know anything.

I look for your kind fishing letter.

Yours very truly,

S. S. Wesley.

The composer of 'The Wilderness' had no great affection for 'writers in the press,' but he was 'mad on fishing'!

Sir Walter Parratt desires to express his gratitude to his old pupils, including those who were unable to be present at the dinner given to him on July 29. The event was the most moving incident of his life, and will never be forgotten by him.

Anyone on holiday bent who is compelled to wait for a leisurely local train at Taunton may kill time by making his way to Bishops Hull, a village near the county town of Somerset. There, in the churchyard and under the ancient octagonal tower of the church, he will find the grave of Dr. William Crotch, with its duet of tombstones. The older, a dwarf stone, standing at the side of the grave, bears the following inscription:—

Edward Thomas Crotch, born October 28th, 1854, died August 20th, 1857.
1 Thess. iv., 13-18.

William Crotch, Mus. Doc.
born July 5th, 1775, died December 29th, 1847.

The former name is probably that of a grandson of Dr. Crotch.

The lettering on the companion and more recent stone, placed at the head of the distinguished musician's grave, speaks for itself:—

To the memory of
Dr. William Crotch, born 5th July, 1775,
died 29th December, 1847.
First Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, London.
1823—1832.
This stone was erected in January, 1902, by the Professors of that Institution.

But there is yet another memorial to Dr. Crotch—three in all—at Bishops Hull. On the north wall of the church is a tablet setting forth his virtues thus:—

Sacred to the memory of William Crotch, Mus. Doc.,
Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, and sometime Principal of the Royal Academy of Music,
Born July 5, 1775—died Dec. 29, 1847.

His rare and various mental endowments, enhanced by the simplicity of his heart, and genuine humility, were all exercised in subservience to the principles of the Gospel of Christ: guided by which, he was enabled through the grace of God, to set his face against all evil, and to exhibit in a life of remarkable serenity and happiness, though not without its periods of natural sorrow, the fruits of the spirit, love, joy, peace.

"Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."—Prov. iii. 17.

It may be remembered that Dr. Crotch died suddenly while seated at dinner in the house of his son, the Rev. William Robert Crotch, head master of Taunton Grammar School. This sad event happening at Taunton caused him to be buried at Bishops Hull—not Bishop's Hull, as most of the books of reference state.

An Eisteddfod Cadeiriol is announced to be held at Queen's Hall, Llundain, Chwefror 18 fed, 1903—in other words a Grand Chair Eisteddfod on February 18, next year. Many prizes are offered in Barddoniaeth, Rhyddiaeth, and Cerddoriaeth. For the last-named—which in the more familiar tongue is 'music'—the Beirniaid (adjudicators) will be Dr. W. G. McNaught and Mr. Daniel Price. All particulars may be obtained of Mr. David R. Hughes (Ysgrifenydd Mygedol), 'Oakland,' 4, Barrow Road, Streatham Common, S.W.

The Royal National Eisteddfod meetings, held at Bangor on the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th ult., were, on the whole, successful. As usual, they focussed much that is characteristic of Welsh tradition and custom in art and cognate matters. But the Choral Competitions were the chief attraction and drew vast and keenly-interested audiences. Everybody felt that this interest was not so much in the success of this or that choir, but in the struggle for the supremacy between Welsh and English choirs. As nearly all the principal prizes fell to English choirs the results will no doubt have a far-reaching effect in Wales. The national pride, justified in the past by splendid exhibitions of capacity for choral performance, has been dealt a serious blow. It is not that the standard of Welsh choir-singing has deteriorated, but rather that English choirs, educated in another atmosphere of influence, are generally more highly trained and better led. The recent growth of the competition movement in England has keenly stimulated and sternly educated choralists, and it has given many 'born' choir-trainers a chance of exercising their capacity. Meantime, Welsh choirs generally have remained where they were years ago, and have been almost impervious to criticism. It is now for the Welsh to take counsel together and to no longer imagine a vain thing. They must bow to the necessity of treating choir-training as a science. No one will deny that Welsh singers have great capacity; their inspiration and enthusiasm are often extraordinary and electrifying. But the potter who shapes this magnificent clay needs more art, and a wider knowledge of what has been accomplished elsewhere. The fact that Welsh choirs are seldom or never heard at English competitions is significant.

The North Staffordshire Choir, under Mr. Whewall, gained the chief prize of £150 and a gold medal for the conductor. The Blackpool Choir, under Mr. Whittaker, and the Potteries Choir, under Mr. Garner, came close behind. Nine choirs competed. In the Male-Voice Choir section the Manchester Orpheus Choir, under Mr. W. S. Nesbitt, were the first of fifteen choirs that competed. The Ladies'-Voice Choir prize fell to Blackpool, and the prize in the smaller mixed-choir section went to the Waenfawr and Llanwy Choral Union, under Mr. H. T. Roberts. A fuller report might have appeared in The Musical Times if the manager of the Eisteddfod had sent an intimation and programmes of the event.

October will be a Musical Festival month in excelsis. Sheffield leads off—1st to 3rd inst.—Bristol and Cardiff follow, both 8th to 11th—and Norwich brings up the rear—21st to 25th. We have already given the outline programmes of these important music-makings. Suffice it to say that at Sheffield Dr. Elgar will now be represented by his 'Dream of Gerontius' and 'Coronation Ode' instead of his 'Variations for orchestra,' and that Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba,' Mozart's 'Requiem,' and Max Bruch's 'Frithjof' have been deleted from the original scheme and Mozart's ever-welcome G minor Symphony has been added. At Norwich the two new cantatas expected from Dr. Cowen and Dr. Elgar will not find a place; but the 'Coronation Ode' by the former composer will be performed, in addition to Dr. Horatio Parker's 'A star song,' and a dramatic cantata entitled 'Werther's Shadow,' from the pen of Mr. Alberto Randegger, Junr., for the first time in England. Not only are the Bristol and Cardiff Festivals to be held on identical days, but with a perverseness that seems incredible, the two quasi novelties of both meetings—Parker's 'St. Christopher' (at Bristol) and Franck's 'The Beatitudes' (Cardiff) are set down to be performed at the same time—the concerts on Thursday morning, the 9th inst. Such mismanagement does not reflect credit on one of the Festival Committees.

A visit to Vienna helps one to realise how close a connection with the art of music this city has had. Only one composer of the first rank, Schubert, can be styled a Viennese in the strictest sense of the word, though one is tempted to stretch a point and include in the list Johann Strauss, who was certainly of the first rank in his genre, if his genre may not be considered of the highest order. But many of the greatest composers have made Vienna their home—Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Brahms; surely no two, or even three cities in the world could make up such an array! The people of Vienna have not, as a rule, shown themselves very appreciative of their most distinguished fellow citizens, at least during their lifetime, for the Viennese temperament is not quite earnest enough to appreciate the highest art, but they have done posthumous honour to several of these great names, and statues of more than common importance and artistic distinction commemorate Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert.

The wholesale rebuilding of the city which has been going on uninterruptedly for the past twenty or thirty years, and is still in progress, tends to wipe out the dwelling-places of these composers, the more so since they were not of a class that dwelt in palatial abodes. The humble apartments in which Mozart died have made way for an 'Emporium' of commerce, and only the name 'Mozarthof' indicates its association with the musician. Schubert's birthplace, being in a comparatively poor district, is, or was till recently, in existence, and distinguished by a tablet. The suite of tiny rooms in the Mariahilf district, in which Haydn died, have happily come into the possession of a society which sees to their preservation in their original state, and has filled them with interesting memorials of the composer. The 'Schwarzspanierhaus,' in which Beethoven had his last abode, is still very much as it was in his day. Perhaps this immunity from change may be due to the fact that it is one of those institutions peculiar to Vienna, the 'Höfe' still belonging to religious houses, though now appropriated to secular uses. What is less easy of comprehension is that there is no tablet or other memorial to call attention to the fact that Beethoven dwelt and died in the building, though a neighbouring alley has been named the 'Beethovengasse.' Indeed the writer has a lively recollection of the interested surprise with which a tradesman dwelling immediately beneath the flat in which Beethoven expired greeted the 'news' of that event more than sixty years after it had taken place.

Professor Dr. Fritz Volbach, one of the composers to be represented at the Sheffield Festival, does not seem to be in any musical dictionary, and none of his compositions appear to be in the British Museum catalogue. A few particulars concerning this gifted musician may, therefore, be acceptable. Fritz Volbach was born on December 17, 1861, at Wipperfürth, near Cologne, and there his childhood was spent. In due time his father, a true lover of art, sent him to the Conservatorium of Music at Cologne, then under Ferdinand Hiller. At the end of a year his father exchanged the Conservatorium for the Gymnasium as the scene of his son's studies; and after two years of work at the Gymnasium the youth entered first the University of Heidelberg, and subsequently that of Bonn, devoting himself more especially to philosophical studies. Music, however, soon gained the mastery over other pursuits, with the result that in 1885 young Volbach became a scholar of the Royal Academy in Berlin, studying the organ with Haupt, counterpoint with Grell, and, after the latter's death, with Wilhelm Taubert. He had only been a student for a year when the directors made him a professor of the Institution in succession to his deceased teacher, Professor Franz Commer. He taught there for five years, more especially musical history, in addition to orchestration and other subjects. As a conductor of various choirs, Volbach attracted the attention of Karl Klindworth and Otto Lessmann; the latter induced him to develop his literary gifts.

In the year 1891, Fritz Volbach accepted a call to Mainz as conductor of the oratorio society, Mainzer Liedertafel und Damengesangverein. Here he conducted the Handel Festivals associated with that city and Chrysander. His symphonic poem for organ and orchestra, entitled 'Easter' (Op. 16), to be performed at the Sheffield Festival on the 3rd inst., was produced by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. It was not only favourably received, but soon became widely known. To this work succeeded the cycle of ballads, 'The Page and the King's Daughter,' which has been constantly performed in Germany and elsewhere. But his greatest success is the symphonic poem, 'Es waren zwei Königskinder,' which immediately started on its successful career through concert halls of first rank. A cantata for orchestra, organ, choir of boys' voices, with additional orchestra of brass and two groups of fanfare trumpets, was commissioned by the city of Mainz, in connection with the celebration of the Gutenberg Jubilee. A quintet for wind instruments and pianoforte, and a short 'Reigen,' for female voices, should also be mentioned. Dr. Volbach has recently composed a work for chorus and orchestra, in three extensive movements, called 'Raphael,' and suggested by three of the great master's paintings—(1) Madonna di Foligno; (2) Madonna del Granduca; and (3) Madonna Sistina. When to the foregoing may be added his literary attainments, which include a life of Handel, it will be seen that Professor Dr. Fritz Volbach has more than one claim to distinction. Two years ago he gained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy; and on the occasion of the Gutenberg Festival the Grand Duke conferred upon him the title of Professor. His future career will be watched with interest. We understand that he is to be a visitor at the Sheffield Festival: he will surely receive a cordial welcome.

Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons, Ltd., announce a series of Chamber Concerts to be given at St. James's Hall during the coming winter. Each concert, to commence at 8.30 p.m., will not last longer than an hour and a-half. It is the intention of the promoters to include in the programmes works of contemporary musicians, both British and foreign, and to bring forward some of the less frequently heard compositions of the classical masters. Not only is this an excellent scheme, but the terms of the subscription for the twelve concerts have been fixed at the moderate sum of two guineas. The list of performers announced to co-operate at these Broadwood Concerts is one that inspires confidence as to a high artistic standard and the enjoyment of pleasant evenings in listening to good interpretations. The enterprise of the great pianoforte firm should meet with all the success so commendable a venture deserves.

The following names should be added to the list of those who assisted in the music performed at the Coronation: vide Musical Times of September, p. 584:

Neil Forsyth,
H. Crouch Batchelor, } Band Stewards.
Charles Groves, Organ Blower.

The name of Mr. W. R. B. Tann was inadvertently included among those who sang tenor at the Coronation, but he was unavoidably prevented from taking part in the postponed ceremony; and for G. P. S. Crofts (a chorister of St. George's Chapel, Windsor), read Arthur Deane.

Although the important duties of the organ blower at Westminster Abbey are now in the nature of looking after the gas engine which generates the wind for the organ, this functionary occupied a prominent place in former Coronation processions. At the crowning of George II., we learn that by the side of the Groom of the Vestry, and having behind him two sackbuts and a double courtal, there marched the Organ Blower, in a short red coat, with a badge on his left breast—viz., a nightingale, silver gilt, perched on a twig. Kingsman, a youthful King's Scholar at Westminster School, thus apostrophised that eighteenth-century Organ Blower by bursting into poetry thuswise:—

Behold the Man in solemn state,
Whose scarlet mantle shows him great!
Of what new order can he be?
The King's first organ-blower he!
Oh! could I but thy praises sing,
First organ-blower to the King!
The masters of the tuneful trade
Must own thy necessary aid.
Thou in their harmony may'st claim
At least an equal share of fame.
Mute without thee the organ's found;
Their's are the notes, but thine the sound.

Nothing could have been more appropriate at the recent Coronation for the Abbey organ-blower to have donned the official badge of a nightingale perched on a twig, for is not his name Groves?

A correspondent sends us, from a South-coast watering-place, the following from the programme of a classical concert. He is not far wrong in designating it a 'gem of translation,' and the Latin seems to have exercised a spell over the local compositor.

Two interesting letters by Franz Liszt have just been brought to light in the archiepiscopal library of Eger, by Dr. Frenkel, a well-known enthusiast. They are addressed to the Abbé Danielik, author of a 'History of Saint Elizabeth.' In the first letter, dated April 10, 1858, Liszt thanks the abbé for sending him a copy of his book, adding that he himself was desirous 'of contributing his modest share to the glorification of the illustrious queen,' by writing an oratorio. In the second letter, dated June 26 of the same year, the pianist-composer says, inter alia, 'Amongst the masses, hymns and prayers having reference to Saint Elizabeth, and which you have probably consulted for the purposes of your work, there may be some rhythmical phrases appertaining to old liturgic songs which I should like to become acquainted with, in order to make use of them in the legende (for chorus, soli, and orchestra) which I am composing in honour of that saint.' The information asked for was doubtless supplied to the composer, and has probably not immaterially influenced the characteristic motivi of his noble oratorio.

The Spectator often contains stories about animals. Here is one of a musical, not to say mewsical nature, which recently appeared in the columns of our excellent contemporary:—

A CAT STORY.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'SPECTATOR.']

Sir,—Have you any space for this, a fact? An acquaintance and self in smoking-room; time, near midnight; drawing-room adjoining; conversation, occult phenomena, "violin strings being twanged by unseen agency"; sudden striking of a piano-note in drawing-room, clear and resonant. Our surprise; entry in drawing-room; turn on electric light; a cat jumps off piano-stool, and bolts through open window on to verandah. Our amusement; casual look at piano; on music-stand an open song discovered: 'Come, birdie, come, and live with me.'—I am, Sir, &c.,

Frank E. Oates.

Amongst many interesting articles in 'The Musical Times' for September we may mention the appreciative obituary of Professor Parker.

The above, not from a London newspaper, is more funereal than true, as Professor Parker is in the best of health at the time of writing. May many long years pass before his obituary has to be written.

This, from a Provincial newspaper, appears to be somewhat mixed up in its misinformation:—

Upon her next and last appearance she sang 'The Lost Chord,' with violin and soprano accompaniment. Used as Madame Sterling is to ovations, she could not but be touched by that given her when she finished Molloy's famous song.

The conclusion of the biography of Samuel Wesley is unavoidably held over till next month owing to the demands on our present space.

STRADIVARI.*

Stradivari! What magic in the name! And yet so little is known of the great artist's life. All that is ascertainable is set forth in this handsome and excellently compiled volume, written, to quote Lady Huggins, by men 'peculiarly fitted, by hereditary natural aptitude, by long expert training, and by deep love of music and of musical instruments, to deal with the problems of Stradivari's history and of his immortal services to music through musical instruments, in ways new and striking, suggestive and exhaustive.' A careful perusal of these attractive pages results in an unqualified endorsement of the foregoing words. With so satisfactory a preamble, let us cull some interesting facts concerning the greatest of violin makers from the fine crop which Messrs. Hill, after twelve years of labour, have gathered in.

THE HOUSE OF STRADIVARI, WITH HIS SUMMER WORKSHOP ON THE ROOF.
(From Messrs. Hill's 'Antonio Stradivari,' by permission.)

The birthplace and the actual date of Antonio Stradivari's entry into the world are unknown. He was doubtless born in 1644; he died December 18, 1737, aged 'about 95,' and was buried in the church of S. Domenico, Cremona. In 1869 this sanctuary was demolished, and the place where it formerly stood is now a public garden. What has become of old Antonio's bones, no one knows. That Stradivari was a pupil of Nicolò Amati (this is definitely settled by the authors), that he was twice married (in 1667 and 1699) and had children, and that he lived and worked in Cremona for the greater part of his long life, is practically the sum and substance of all that can be discovered concerning him. No authentic portrait of him exists; but we learn that 'he was tall and thin in appearance, invariably to be seen in his working costume, which rarely changed, as he was always at work.' For seventy-five of the ninety-five years of his life this unparalleled artist among instrument makers plodded on unceasingly, working with his own hands in a modest humble way till the last. 'Always at work,' even in his nonogenarian days. That he was careful of his finances may be inferred from the fact that he deducted eight lire (about £1) from the bill of costs of his first wife's funeral, which amounted (approximately) to £22 10s. 0d. This document is so curious that we venture to give it in detail.

over others.' His industry was remarkable. Always experimenting, even to his last days, we are told that:—

Stradivari's powers of production seem to become more marked as his years roll on; his energy apparently inexhaustible, and his fertility equally unfailing. . . . His sole aim in this world was his calling, and although we have but scanty knowledge concerning his daily life, we may safely assume that he was found day after day seated at his work-bench, with gauge, compass, or knife in hand, giving form to those instruments which were to prove models of perfection for future generations.

The encyclopædic nature of the book is evidenced by the range of interest covered by its twelve chapters. The history, descriptions and characteristics of a large number of Strad violins, violas and violoncellos, are not only given—one chapter being devoted to each class of instrument—but other cognate matters are ably and exhaustively treated. For instance, Chapter V., 'Stradivari's aims in relation to tone,' contains some exceedingly thoughtful remarks, of which the following may serve as a specimen:—

That the sense of beauty or distinction of tone is to-day cultivated to the same extent as formerly, is, we venture to think, more than doubtful. The custom in modern orchestral scoring of sacrificing the individuality of the instruments in order to obtain effects of greater sonority or of technical dexterity, and the abuse of the full-sized concert grand pianoforte in chamber music, seem to be largely destructive of the feeling for beauty of tone.

How true this is: surging masses of sound, strenuous in ocean strength, vitiating the ear for the enjoyment of subtler strains, the gentle ripples on the shimmering lake.

Another interesting chapter is that entitled 'Labels,' illustrated with facsimiles of thirty-seven labels, ranging from 1666 to 1737—the last of which reads: Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis Faciebat Anno 1737. D'Anni 93. The authors deal with the vexed question of fraudulent labels, and they rightly say: 'the difficulty of ascertaining what is an original instrument and what is not will be readily understood. To the casual observer, who has not

BRIDGE MADE BY STRADIVARI FOR THE 'TENORE' OF THE 'TUSCAN' QUINTET.

(From Messrs. Hill's 'Antonio Stradivari.')

It is interesting and perhaps encouraging to those who plod, to learn that Stradivari developed slowly to perfection. Messrs. Hill do not favour the division of his life-work into 'periods,' and they cannot too strongly emphasise the fact 'that amid all the finest Stradivaris still existing there is not one which can with justice claim absolute superiority had the advantage of constantly examining instruments, the task is an impossible one.' The number of instruments made by Antonio Stradivari are estimated at 1,116 by Messrs. Hill, and of these 602 are known to them. They refer in terms of righteous indignation to the acts of vandalism that have caused the ruin of not a few precious Strads; and their words of wisdom in regard to the great care that is needed for the preservation of these beautiful instruments, and the importance of giving them rest in order to obviate their premature death, are such as should be pondered and acted upon by all owners of valuable stringed instruments.

The temptation to further quotation from this fascinating volume must be resisted. Other chapters, not already mentioned, are 'Stradivari's material,' 'Stradivari's varnish,' 'Stradivari's construction,' 'The prices paid,' and 'Stradivari's supposed portrait.' These, in addition to what has been said, are sufficient to prove the wide scope and absorbing interest of Messrs. Hill's splendid achievement. If we have dwelt upon matters of general interest, we are no less appreciative of the purely technical side of that which has been so clearly set forth in these well-written pages—in fact, the literary excellence of the book calls for the highest appreciation of something attempted, something done, to the enrichment of art and the benefit of all who can appreciate good work. By no means the least attractive features of this 'Life of Stradivari' are the copious illustrations, more especially the full-page plates of violins, admirably drawn by Mr. Shirley Slocombe and wonderfully reproduced in chromo-lithography by Mr. Nister, of Nuremberg. Appendixes and a full index add to the completeness of a volume without blemish and which ought to find its way to the library shelves of all those who are interested in the art of music. The book is worthy of its subject.

Church and Organ Music.

A VETERAN LAY CLERK.

The oldest member of the Coronation Choir, and indeed the senior Vicar Choral in England both in regard to age and length of service, is Mr. Thomas Wicks, of Wells Cathedral. Born at Windsor, March 31, 1819, he became a chorister of St. George's Chapel in 1826. He sang at the funerals of the Duke of York (1827) and George IV. (1830); at the coronations of William IV. (1831), and Edward VII. (1902), these two events being separated by an interval of seventy-one years! During his chorister period at Windsor Master Wicks was frequently 'commanded' to sing before William IV., the Princess Victoria (our late Queen) often being present on those occasions. In 1844 Mr. Wicks, having reached man's estate, was appointed a tenor singer at Rochester Cathedral. A year later he became a Vicar Choral at Wells Cathedral, where he has taken part in the daily services ever since. By 'command' of Queen Victoria Mr. Wicks sang in the choir on the steps of St. Paul's Cathedral on the occasion of her late Majesty's Diamond Jubilee in 1897. As a precious memento of that ceremony he received from the Queen her portrait enriched with her autograph, accompanied by the following letter from Sir Arthur Bigge, Her late Majesty's Private Secretary:—

Windsor Castle,
November 23, 1897.

Sir,—I am to-day forwarding to you a Portrait of the Queen, which is given to you by Her Majesty in recognition of the interesting fact that you sang at the ceremonies of the Diamond Jubilee, as well as the Coronation of William IV.—Yours faithfully, Arthur Bigge.

Mr. Wicks can point to the unique circumstance that at the Harvest Festival held in Wells Cathedral in the year 1892, three generations of his family took part in the service—the grand old man himself, his son and two grandsons, choristers of the Cathedral. Within a week of the attainment of his eighty-second birthday, the veteran Lay Clerk sang the solo parts in Mendelssohn's 'My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?' 'It is one of my oldest favourites,' he says, 'and on that occasion I received the congratulations of my brother Vicars, the Precentor and the Organist.' Mr. Wicks took part in the early Handel Festivals at the Crystal Palace, and he possesses the bronze medal struck in commemoration of their foundation. In spite of his eighty-three years—more than four full scores—he still continues to discharge his daily duties by singing in the choir at Wells Cathedral. That many more years may be given to him, and that he may experience the rich joy of happiness in the eventide of his long and useful life, is a wish which will be echoed by not a few readers of The Musical Times in regard to Thomas Wicks, the Father of English Cathedral Lay Clerks.

A MANUAL OF PLAINSONG.

More than fifty years have come and gone since The Psalter Noted, edited by the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, made its first appearance. There can be no doubt that it secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship, and, moreover, that it has maintained a marked supremacy over other Psalters of the same kind. But, as the Preface to the above book (recently published by Messrs. Novello) states, 'the study of the Art of Plainsong during the last half century has undergone something like a revolution; on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing.' The urgent call for a new edition of 'Helmore'—as the Psalter is familiarly called — resulted in the work of revision being placed in the hands of such competent experts as Sir John Stainer, Mr. H. B. Briggs, and the Rev. W. H. Frere. Death, alas! called away the two first named before the Psalter passed through the press, but not before they had seen the revised proofs. The surviving editor generously says that 'whatever merits this book may have are almost entirely due to Mr. Briggs'; but his own share in the editorship, like that of Sir John Stainer's, merits full acknowledgment of conscientious work.

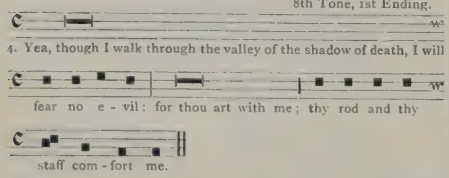
We may now refer to some points of difference between the old and the new systems, differences which are distinctly in the nature of improvements. First, it is evident that Helmore, in formulating his system of pointing, was dominated by the Anglican chant form, a method which resulted in the introduction of more accents than are necessary. Examples will be found in the Mediation of Tone iv. (Psalm x.) and the Ending of Tone viii. 1 (Psalm cxlvii.), both of which have only one accent, not two. Again, the notes of the Tones were treated arbitrarily, consequently the shape of the melody was often lost and puzzling complexity introduced. The ending of Tone i. 5 offers a good example—

The last is an indivisible group of four notes, all of them grouped to the last syllable of the verse, and should never be subdivided.

Not the least important improvement in this new Manual (which includes the Litany and Responses) is of a more general nature—typographical. Anything that will conduce to the acquirement of the 'spirit' of the thing by minimising the snares of 'letter' is good. Helmore gave a note to each syllable in the recitation, with the result that choirs gabbled on as long as the note was the same, and then pulled up short to consider what was to be done at the Mediation or Ending. Hence a meaningless gap between recitation and inflexion was invariably made. This, it need scarcely be said, though frequently practised, is the chief foe to proper Plainsong chanting, as indeed it is to the Anglican system. The Editors endeavour to get rid of this blemish by not printing a note for each syllable, but by giving the last two or three notes of the recitation, so as to bridge over the transition from recitation to inflexion and thus obviate the gap. An example will make this clear:—



8th Tone, 1st Ending.
4. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no e - vil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff com - fort me.

The 'Introduction' to the Psalter, containing practical instructions for all who use it, is both lucidly and interestingly written, and the Editors' remarks are of general application. As a specimen we give the first three of the six rules therein laid down—words of wisdom which every singer should put into practice:—

1. Do not hurry the syllables sung on the reciting note, or drag those which fall to the inflections.

2. Give every syllable its proper rhythmical accent and a very distinct enunciation.

3. Do not make any gap between the reciting note and the beginning of the inflection.

Finally, we cannot do better than give the concluding words of the Introduction to this well-planned and clearly printed Psalter: 'Good chanting is above all perfectly natural, and there should be nothing forced either about the pitch, the rhythm, or the tempo, which must vary according to the size of the building, the number of the singers, and similar conditions.' If choirmasters would only seek after the perfectly natural in chanting!

AN AMERICAN ORGAN.

The usual acceptation of the term 'American organ' is that of the household or schoolroom instrument with which we are all familiar. On the other hand the designation is one that is suggestive of a huge emitter of sound, the United States being the land of immensity in the matter of things as well as territorially. The new organ in St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, is a case in point. This instrument has been built by the Austin Organ Company, of Hartford, Conn., from the design of the organist of the church, Mr. Minton Pyne, a brother of Dr. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Cathedral. It may interest not a few of our readers if we give a full description of this immense organ; it appears to be one of exceptional interest.

The organ consists of nine distinct organs distributed over four manuals and pedal—two Great Organs, two Choirs, a Swell, Solo, Echo, and Nave and Chancel Pedal Organs having a 32-ft. open foundation. These organs are supplied with wind under varied pressure, giving to each family of stops the most favourable conditions of speech.

In the foundation work a new and special form of treatment of the Diapasons is here adopted for the first time in America. Each division of the Great Organ is a perfectly balanced organ presenting unusual possibility of grand effect. The Swell organ, enclosed in a 3-in. Swell box, is amply provided with the adjunct of modern 'string' effect, and has an open 16-ft. foundation in both flue work and reeds which are all specially winded.

The Choir Organ is unique. It is divided into two sections similar to the Great Organ. The first, a replica of the sixteenth-century organ, stands on the screen dividing the Chancel from the Lady Chapel on the south side. The second division is enclosed in a thick Swell box on the north side, the two divisions being under usual control of the Choir manual in the main organ, and in addition is controllable from a portable console of two manuals and pedals, for exclusive use in the Lady Chapel services.

The Solo and Echo Organs with the 32-ft. open Pedal Bass and a 16-ft. metal Unison, are placed in the Nave. The Solo contains a large open Diapason, specially winded, and an 8-ft. powerful Harmonic Flute. It is also provided with a fine specimen of a heavy wind Tuba.

The organ is blown by large metal feeders, or air pumps—a system of blowing by water power lately introduced by the Austin Company; five wind pressures, ranging from 3 in. to 16 in., being provided.

The control is electro-pneumatic, with but a single contact to each key, regardless of the number of couplers in use, perfect in response and repetition, and agreeable to the touch.

The main console is placed in the Choir, on the north side, and contains four manuals, from CC to C^4, 61 notes each, and the concave and radiating pedal board of 32 notes from CCC to G.

The keys are of special cut ivory, and the drawstops, working in ivory bushings in jambs of dark Spanish mahogany, are of ebony with solid ivory heads engraved in old English lettering. The pitch of the organ is A 435.

Pedal Division.

1. Sub Bass	16	3. Viole d'Amour	8
2. Dolce	16

This Choir Organ, divided, as will be seen, into these two sections, is under control of the usual single manual in the main console; but it is also controlled from a special movable console, for independent service in the Lady Chapel, the organ on the screen becoming a small Great Organ to the enclosed portion as the Swell, the whole supported by a Pedal Bass of three stops. It is a combination unique in design and in musical effect, with the following couplers and accessories:—

1. Swell to Great ...	1—3	Three adjustable pistons controlling Great and Pedal organs.
2. Great Sub. ...	4—6	Three adjustable pistons controlling Swell and Pedal organs.
3. Great Super. ...	7—8	Two Release Pistons for respective manual groups.
4. Swell Super.
5. Great to Pedal.

6. Great Diapason	8	8. Tuba Mirabilis	8
7. Harmonic Flute	8

Pedal Division.

1. Major Bass	32	2. Open Bass	16

Three wind pressures are required in this division.

The couplers affecting this organ are named in the Chancel scheme, and are prepared for in draw stops and electrical contacts included therein.

Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 are enclosed in a thick Swell box, and form the Echo Organ to be placed in the Nave of the Church.

Nos. 6 and 7 are on the open chest and over a special wind. No. 8 is supplied from a heavy wind of its own, and stands on a separate chest, with mitred tubes throughout. A distinct plant for wind supply to this organ is provided for.

PEDAL ORGAN.

Chancel Division.

3. Great Bass	16	8. Violoncello	8
4. Contra Bass...	16	9. Viole d'Amour	8
5. Violone Dolce	16	10. Bombard	16
6. Sub Bass	16	11. Bassoon	16
7. Great Flute	8	12. Tuba	8

(For 1 and 2 see Nave Organ specification.)
(Three wind pressures are used in this division.)

The form of the Great Organ is specially commended to careful criticism. The number of stops necessitates division of the chests; it is an immense gain in effect and in utility of service to place the Super Chorus over an increased wind and within a Swell box. The player can use this second section in a variety of ways, even in accompaniment, and it makes it possible to him to build up a forte as is in no other way attainable.

The Swell Organ is divided into two sections and enclosed in a 3-in. Swell box governed by blinds with bevelled edges.

We gladly insert the following appeal from the Organ Committee at Radley in aid of a memorial to the late Dr. E. G. Monk:—

The Church of England owes no small debt of gratitude to Dr. Edwin George Monk—who died at Radley on January 3, 1900—for the great service he rendered to church music. After twenty-four years of splendid work as organist of York Minster, Dr. Monk resigned that appointment in 1883, and retired to Radley, where in his early days he had been for eleven years the first precentor of S. Peter's College, to spend the last sixteen years of his life. Dr. Monk having been so long and intimately connected with Radley, and being greatly attached to its quaint old church, we feel it would be appropriate that some memorial of his life and work should be placed therein.

We have therefore decided that an organ suited for the size of the church, and costing £200, would form a fitting, though humble memorial. Thinking that many of his friends and former pupils might wish to join in this mark of respect to the memory of one whom we must ever hold dear, we venture to send this announcement of our desire, in the hope that you will kindly publish the same through the medium of your excellent paper.

Promises of help to the amount of £64 4s. have already been received from the following: Mr. Walter Macfarren, the Warden of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, Sir Walter Parratt, the Dean of Durham, Mr. F. Tuckerman, the Rev. E. C. Corfe, Messrs. Novello, and others. Subscriptions may be paid either directly to 'The Monk Memorial Fund,' London and County Bank, Oxford; or to the Rev. C. B. Longland, M.A., Radley Vicarage, Abingdon, Berkshire.

The explanation of the above will be found in THE MUSICAL TIMES for June, p. 384.

An interesting and appropriate memorial to Miss Edith Moberly (daughter of the late Bishop) has been erected in Salisbury Cathedral. It bears the following inscription:—

Ad Dei gloriam et in memoriam Edithae Emiliae Moberly pueri huius Ecclesiae hanc tabulam adfixerunt constantissimae carrissimae per plusquam triginta annos adiutricis obiit xxx Dec. mdcccci.

Miss Moberly was a local Miss Hackett in the practical interest she took in all that concerned the welfare of the chorister boys of Salisbury Cathedral, many of whom, past and present, attended at the dedication service held August 4. At a luncheon subsequently held—it appears that every August Bank Holiday sees a reunion of 'old boys'—the senior old chorister present was Mr. C. G. Pittman, 1843-50; but there is one more venerable still, Mr. John Harding, who sang from 1826 to 1832!

The twenty-ninth annual festival of the London Church Choir Association will be held in St. Paul's Cathedral on November 20th, at 7.30 p.m. The musical arrangements are under the direction of Dr. H. Walford Davies, organist of the Temple Church, and Mr. F. B. Kiddle, organist of St. Marylebone Parish Church, will preside at the organ. Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father' has been selected for the anthem; the Canticles will be sung to the setting by Robert Cooke in C, published by Messrs. Novello for the first time in octavo form, while chants and hymn tunes have been written by Dr. Walford Davies, Dr. F. J. Read, Mr. Charles Macpherson, Mr. T. L. Forbes, Mr. G. Percy Harris, and Mr. W. R. B. Tann. After the Benedition the three-fold Amen by Orlando Gibbons, included in the Coronation music, will be sung, and the service is to conclude with Smart's Te Deum in F.

Reviews.

Save us, O Lord. By Edward C. Bairstow.
Give the King thy Judgments. By Walter G. Alcock.
By Thy glorious Death. By A. Dvorák.
(Novello's Octavo Anthems.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Walter Alcock's anthem is laid out on a somewhat extended design, and is an admirable piece of church music, and worthy of the musician who holds the historical post of 'organist and composer to His Majesty's Chapels Royal.' A feature of the anthem is the boldness of its harmonic scheme. This is justified by results, the enharmonic transitions being particularly successful in intensifying the significance of the text. The accentuation of the words is also excellent. The second section opens with a soprano solo, the melody of which is subsequently set as a quartet, succeeded by a chorus ending pianissimo with solemn effect. The finale is most dignified, and the conclusion imposing.

Dr. Bairstow's anthem, composed for the festival of the Wigan and District Church Choral Association, to take place next month, is a short but interesting composition. The part-writing indicates confidence in the musical training and intelligence of the choristers, and will afford them an opportunity of proving their abilities in a pleasing manner. The anthem contains no solo, but it opens with a passage for tenors and basses in unison.

Concerning the anthem by Dvorák, it is sufficient to say that it is an English adaptation by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, for Lent or general use, of one of the most beautiful numbers of the Bohemian composer's setting of the 'Stabat Mater.'

Hark, hark, the organ loudly peals. Words by the Rev. Prebendary Godfrey Thring. Music by George J. Bennett.
With gladsome feet we press. Words by the Rev. Robert Corbet Singleton. Music by John E. West.
What can I give Jesus? Words by Arthur C. Benson. Music by Arthur M. Goodhart.
O Thou who turnest destinies to dust. Words by Claude Aveling. Music by Walter G. Alcock.
(Novello's Parish Choir Book.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The first two on the above list are processional hymns, and are excellent examples of their class. The former is designed for use at the dedication of an organ, but it is also suitable for general use. Dr. Bennett's setting of the concluding line of each verse, 'Before His throne for ever,' is very happy, and imparts notable impressiveness to the hymn. Mr. John E. West's composition is appropriately joyous in character, and the provision for brass instruments to supplement the organ in the accompaniment adds to the animation of the music. Mr. Goodhart's hymn-tune is intended to be sung by children at flower services. The melody is graceful and its accompaniment simple, but at the same time musicianly. 'O Thou who turnest' is one of the best Coronation hymns we have seen. Mr. Walter Alcock's music possesses remarkable dignity, and the change from triple to common time greatly adds to the impressiveness of the words.

Oscar Beringer Pianoforte Tutor.
[Bosworth and Co.]

In no branch of pianoforte teaching has greater strides been made than in that of technique. In this respect the reputation of Mr. Oscar Beringer stands so high that his Tutor commands not only attention, but respect. In common with all masters of their subject, Mr. Beringer places the greatest importance on the initial stages of instruction, in this case the position of the body, arms, hands and fingers, the proper positions of which are illustrated by diagrams. The book is complete in itself, and by the time the student has conscientiously worked through its pages, we agree with Mr. Beringer that he (or she) 'will be so well equipped that the easier works of classical composers will be an open book.'

Siegfried Wagner, als Mensch und Künstler. Von Ludwig Karpath.

[Leipzig: Hermann Seemann Nachfolger.]

This pamphlet, though somewhat eulogistic in tone, gives an interesting biographical sketch of Richard Wagner's only son, Siegfried. Born at Triebschen, near Lucerne, June 6, 1869, he passed the earliest years of his childhood in the charge of an English governess, and became very fond of dogs, fowls, and other associations with outdoor life. During his frequent boyhood travels in Italy, the churches so bewitched him, and his drawings were so good, that it seemed as if he would ultimately become an architect of note. As a boy he played the flute so well as to greatly please his maternal grandfather, Franz Liszt. At the age of sixteen he drew no less than forty-eight detailed plans of churches, and it would seem as if architecture was really to become his life work. After a voyage round the world with an English companion he resolved, however, to devote himself entirely to music, but he did not commence its serious study until he had entered his twenty-third year. Siegfried Wagner made his début as a conductor, using his left hand, on August 5, 1893, in the old Bayreuth theatre—not the shrine of Wagner—when he directed two Acts of 'Der Freischütz' and the 'Rienzi' overture. A conducting tour abroad was followed by his conductorship of the 'Ring' cycle at Bayreuth in 1896. The operas composed by him are duly referred to, but not the least interesting feature of Herr Karpath's monograph is an anecdote related of his hero, Siegfried. 'That was a festival,' he once exclaimed, 'when Grandpapa Liszt came to see us. There was nothing but joy in the house. And when he struck up a dance! And how affectionately he would dance with us all!' The little booklet is one that may be welcomed into the immense field of Wagnerian literature. It contains six portraits of Siegfried Wagner—one as Lohengrin!

Offertory Sentences. Set to tunes from 'The Hymnary,' by J. Powell Metcalfe.

Three-fold Amen. By Orlando Gibbons.
(Novello's Parish Choir Book.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

'The Hymnary' contains a large number of fine tunes admirably suited for the purpose to which some of them have been applied by the Rev. James Powell Metcalfe. The arrangements will be found very useful in those churches where the capabilities of the choir are limited. The 'Three-fold Amen' merits the attention of all choirmasters. It comes from an anthem 'Great King of Gods' 'made for the King's being in Scotland,' and was used after the Blessing at the recent Coronation service in Westminster Abbey.

A Bundle of Ballads. By Alex. S. Beaumont.

A Serenade. Words by R. Peck. Music by A. Norman Kendall.

An April Song. Words by Annie Matheson. Music by Frank New.

[Charles Woolhouse.]

Captain Beaumont's 'Bundle of Ballads' comprises seven songs of unpretentious but pleasing character. Story in song appeals to a large section of the music-loving public, particularly when, as in the present instance, the melodies are direct and expressive. In the pianoforte accompaniments the composer avails himself of modern methods, designed to suggest the inner meaning of the text, and consequently, while by no means difficult to play, they are interesting to the executant and impart artistic value to the compositions.

Mr. Kendall has selected words that will be familiar to many vocalists, but this will enhance rather than depreciate the attractiveness of his song, owing to the tasteful refinement of his music. It should be added that the Serenade is published in two keys, for baritone or tenor voices. Mr. New's 'April Song' is unpretentious, but the optimistic spirit of the lines is happily echoed by music eminently pleasing and expressive.

Obituary.

MR. A. C. WHITE: THE CONTRABASSIST.

A very familiar figure will be greatly missed in London orchestras by the absence of Adolphus Charles White, whose death, we regret to record, took place suddenly at his residence, 36, Parkhill Road, Hampstead, on the 4th ult., at the age of 71. Born October 10, 1830, at Canterbury, Mr. White became a chorister of the Cathedral, and studied the organ, violin, and other subjects under Dr. Longhurst, and subsequently in Ireland. On his return to his native city he took up the study of the double-bass. Half a century ago he came to London, and took lessons from that excellent performer, James Howell, for whom he deputised with much success. In the summer of 1853, White went to America as a member of Jullien's Orchestra, the repertoire of which was said (by Jullien) to have consisted of 1,200 pieces! Back again in London, he became a member of all the principal metropolitan orchestras and the provincial festivals, succeeding his old master, Howell, as chief of the double basses, in 1879. He held the professorship of the double bass at the Royal Academy of Music, and the Royal College of Music, and in 1890 was appointed Musician in Ordinary to Queen Victoria. The late Charles Severn used to say that Mr. White's manipulation of the double-bass was more like Dragonetti's playing than anyone else he knew. For twenty-two years he officiated as organist of St. Phillip's Church, Regent Street. He composed some church music, carols, songs, pianoforte pieces, and solos for the double-bass.

An enthusiastic volunteer, Mr. White held a commission in the 20th Middlesex (Artists) Rifle Volunteers, from which regiment he retired in 1887 with the rank of Major, receiving a silver sword in acknowledgment of his services. Some of the older members of the Musical Association will remember the paper on 'The Double-Bass' read by him on April 4, 1887, in which he stated that he was among the first to tune his A string to G, as he said: 'gaining something by that.' Later on he found it necessary to alter his system and to add an additional (fourth) string; 'and now that I have done so,' he added, 'I like it very much and find it very effective at times.' His bass stood tuned to DD, GG, D, G; 'the double D being a very fine note, having the vibration of its octave in addition to its own sound.' In rare cases he would lower the DD string to CC. He held that all the basses should be tuned in the same manner as the violin, viola, and violoncello invariably are. At the conclusion of this interesting and instructive paper, Mr. White played several solos on his ponderous instrument to the great delight of those who heard them; one piece especially, composed by himself,—some ingenious variations on the old German air 'Im tiefen Keller'—was a triumph of executive ability, much and amusingly appreciated. The Double-Bass Primer and the Appendix thereto in Messrs. Novello's Series of Educational Works are from the pen of the versatile, much-respected, and lamented musician, who has recently passed away. The funeral, which took place at Hampstead Cemetery, would have been more largely attended but for the absence of many of the veteran contrabassist's friends from London.

SIR CAMPBELL CLARKE.

Sir Campbell Clarke, who was born in 1830 and died on August 26 at Oatlands, near Uckfield, was better known to a former than the present generation of musicians. He began life in the musical department of the British Museum, where he picked up much information. One day G. F. Anderson, Master of the Queen's Musick, asked Thomas Oliphant (through Charles Lucas) if he would make an English translation of one of Wagner's choruses for a State Concert. Oliphant declined, but said he knew a young fellow at the British Museum who would do the work. It was doubtless the result of this introduction to Anderson that Campbell Clarke succeeded George Hogarth in the secretaryship of the Philharmonic Society, which he held from 1864 to 1866, when he was followed by Mr. Stanley Lucas, to whom we are indebted for this information. About 1866 Campbell Clarke succeeded H. F. Chorley as musical critic of The Athenæum, and he also did similar work on the Daily Telegraph. In 1870 he settled in Paris, on his marriage with a daughter of Mr. J. M. Levy, proprietor of the Daily Telegraph, and became the chief Paris correspondent of that journal, the duties of which he discharged with much ability up to the time of his death. Sir Campbell Clarke served on the musical jury at the Paris Exhibition of 1889, and was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour in acknowledgment of his services. In 1897, the Diamond Jubilee year, he received the honour of knighthood.

DR. WÜLLNER.

A sterling artist and indefatigable worker in the cause of the art, Franz Wüllner, died on the 7th ult., at Braunfels-on-the-Lahn, in his seventy-first year. He commenced his career as a pianist, achieving considerable reputation particularly as an interpreter of Beethoven. From 1858 onwards, however, he devoted himself entirely to conducting, and in 1884 succeeded Ferdinand Hiller in the directorship of the Cologne Conservatorium, where he also conducted the famous Gürzenich Concerts. These positions he occupied until his death. His compositions include several masses, motets and chamber-music.

Frau MATHILDE WESENDONCK, the friend of Wagner, and author of the poetry known as 'Vorstudien zu Tristan' (a cycle of songs, set to music by the Bayreuth master), died on August 30, at Altmünster, in Upper Austria.

THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

It seems like adding stone after stone to a great monument when one records occasion after occasion of the Three Choirs Festivals. The year comes and the year goes, but each year brings forth its Festival in this connection. The three grey cities, so firm and so assured in their past, so splendid, each in its great and monastic Cathedral memorial, remind one, in their Festival continuance, of the rising and falling of recurrent tides. Nor can it be doubted that the enthusiasm to which these Festivals give birth, makes for the utmost good in and around the centres whence they take their rise. Ecclesiastical music is only another name for a different form of the same art. Just as there is this and that school of painting, so there is this and that form of musical expression—the inspiration, the regulating laws, the form of artistic government ever remaining one in essence. Of course you always come back to inspiration; it is the fount from which the springs flow and make their way to the sea; and painting, sculpture, literature, music—these remain the four 'silent pinnacles of aged snow,' which, in the life of humanity, send the waters to the valley and turn green the great plains of art. This seems perhaps a solemn enough introduction to an article dealing with the Worcester Festival just overpast; but, as I began by saying, the building up of these events, year after year, in this connection, goes—and goes in a peculiarly exceptional, an unique, way—to the setting up of a monument in the country's endeavour after high artistic achievement. Often there is failure to record; often there is success; but the general facts, the artistic tendency, the kindling of feeling in the way of art, the renewed effort after something ideal, remain always as a landmark of encouragement and of deserved approval

The Sunday Service (September 7) does not legitimately enter within the circle of sternly judicial criticism. Stanford's Adagio and Finale from his Symphony in D ('Il Penseroso') started the opening ceremony, and its undoubted cleverness was made peculiarly evident by the singularly fresh manner with which it was played. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer had composed the first anthem, 'O praise the Lord,' specially for the Festival. It is a composition built up of sound and good stuff, and was just the kind of work which inevitably would be excellently well performed by a good and well-trained cathedral choir. The second anthem, 'Glory, honour, praise, and power,' to Mozart's music, was made exceedingly and particularly interesting by the excellence of the orchestral playing. It may be added that the Bishop of Worcester was too indisposed to preach the inaugural sermon, which was instead delivered by Canon Knox Little.

On Tuesday morning (September 9), the Festival got into full swing with a performance of the new and dignified version, by Dr. Edward Elgar, of the National Anthem. To this succeeded 'Elijah.' Who is really going to say the last, the ultimate word, the final criticism from which there will be no flight, upon 'Elijah'? He will have need to be greatly judicial, and (in some respects) greatly daring. Not in a chronicle of this nature will such an attempt be made; it would be otiose; and whatever were said, on one side or the other would ensue most unnecessary controversy. The chorus (at times even more than a trifle uneven) very often did exceedingly well under the conductorship of Mr. Ivor Atkins. Mr. Andrew Black has sung the Prophet's part so frequently and so successfully that it is not unflattering to him to say that there have been occasions when he has undoubtedly done better. Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley and Mr. William Green took the other chief solo parts, while the boy's part in the famous 'There is nothing'—and the rest—was particularly well sung by Master White; he showed a curious instinct, which some young singers manage to convey, whether by training or by genuinely spontaneous feeling, for the right fulness of a musical emotion.

On the Tuesday evening, the Festival novelty was Mr. Hugh Blair's Cantata, 'The Song of Deborah.' Madame Sobrino and Mr. Lane Wilson took the chief solo parts in the work, and did their best by it. Undoubtedly it is clever. Mr. Blair does not go to conventional springs for the sources of his inspiration; but there is a way of being unconventional which yet bears signs of imitativeness—and it is in that state of unconventionality that Mr. Blair at present to a certain extent rests. As has been said, his work is assuredly clever. Handel's Coronation anthem 'The King shall rejoice,' Percy Pitt's Coronation March, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony were also included in the programme of this concert. The Anthem, which is very personal Handel,—by which one means Handel when he preferred to rest upon his vast technical resource, and his general knowledge of effect, rather than Handel in his moments of the rarest inspiration—was sung extremely well; the choruses especially did Mr. Ivor Atkins credit in the manner of their rendering. The Symphony was well played.

The two novelties of Wednesday, Dr. H. Walford Davies's 'The Temple,' and the second part of Professor Horatio Parker's 'St. Christopher,' were preceded by a performance of the Prelude to 'Parsifal.' This was exceedingly well given; and indeed the music seemed memorably grand amongst the impressive surroundings in which it was performed.

Perhaps one of the reasons why one may have doubts about Dr. Walford Davies's new work, which (composed for this Festival) was conducted by the composer himself, is that the effect is just a little vague, oddly intangible. It was as though he were in hot pursuit to catch important phrase after important phrase and had to be contented at times with something less important. Where technically he was at his best was in the double chorus, 'O give thanks.' Nevertheless the work is clearly earnest, careful, and conscientious. Let us regard it as a stepping-stone to higher things; for Dr. Davies is a musicianly writer. Madame Albani, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Lane Wilson sang with all energy and enthusiasm in the solo portions of the work. A further hearing of this thoughtful oratorio may perhaps be afforded by a London performance.

The afternoon of the same day brought a performance of the third part of Professor Horatio Parker's Cantata, 'St. Christopher.' This is a work which contains some elements of very great beauty indeed. Dr. Parker has an extremely liberal style of composition. Without the peculiar tenseness of utterance which belongs peculiarly to certain modern musicians—and without it, possibly, because it is a method which he has never chosen to cultivate—he rather prefers the more facile methods of a pre-Wagnerian period in music. Yet he by no means suffers from any imaginative defects, even though his liberalism sometimes errs on the side of looseness. His prelude, for example, which is most pictorial in idea, indicating, as one might be disposed to think, the surging of the floods, the massive strength of the giant Christ-bearer, and the delicate crying of the little child pleading for help, is very singularly imaginative, and is remarkably well-written. A song for the Hermit, 'The story thou shalt hear,' is tenderly conceived and well wrought out; and the 'Asperges' chorus is quite beautifully inspired. A short 'Gloria' is elaborately ecclesiastical, and from this point of view is significant and interesting; all the final passages are worthy of the beginning. The soloists, who were Madame Albani, Master White, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Lane Wilson, were in excellent form, Master White and Mr. Green being especially commendable. The performance concluded with Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony.

The programme of the evening concert may be given in full:—

PART I.

Overture—"Melpomene" ... ... G. W. Chadwick.

Sea Pictures—Nos. 2, 4, and 5 ... ... Edward Elgar.
Miss Muriel Foster.

Orchestral Poem—"The Witch of Atlas" Granville Bantock.
First Performance. Conducted by the Composer.

Orchestral Song—"The Soldier's Tent" C. Hubert H. Parry.
Mr. Plunket Greene.
Conducted by the Composer.

Overture—"Cockaigne" (In London Town) ... Edward Elgar.
Conducted by the Composer.

PART II.

"Tod und Verklärung" (Symphonic Poem) ... Richard Strauss.
The first appearance of the name of this Composer at an English Festival.

Songs—{(a) "All through the night" (Welsh) arranged and orchestrated by Arthur Somervell.
{(b) "Trottin' to the fair" ... ... C. V. Stanford.
Mr. Plunket Greene.

Overture—"Die Zauberflöte" ... ... Mozart.

Aria—Che farò ... ... Gluck.
Miss Muriel Foster.

Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1 (in F) ... ... Liszt.

The outstanding feature of the evening's music was the first performance of Mr. Granville Bantock's Orchestral Poem 'The Witch of Atlas,' a work assuredly poetical in idea and clever in the working, but at times striking one as inclining (though the poem here justifies this position somewhat) a little to a vagueness that was not always felicitous.

Thursday morning saw what was on the whole an admirable performance of Dr. Elgar's magnificent setting of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' The libretto had been purposely mutilated to suit Anglican tastes: but that was surely a deplorable blunder; at this rate how many works of art, when given in cathedrals, would 'escape a whipping'? Surely this thing was too narrow and childish—as though the work were given from any sectarian standpoint! Mr. John Coates took Mr. Green's place—and took it very well—in the part of Gerontius, and Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Plunket Greene worked very creditably indeed. The chorus (under Dr. Elgar himself) began wonderfully well; but the tremendous strain of the work told somewhat upon them in the end. In the afternoon we had Bach's cantata 'The Lord is a Sun and Shield,' which was extremely well sung, the chorus having recovered its tone after the strain of the morning; the day's work was brought to a close by an excellent performance of Brahms's Symphony in F.

The usual performance of the 'Messiah' brought the week's work to an end. Here Mr. Atkins was seen at his best. His direction of the choir was resolute, masterful and musicianly. The soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. William Green and Mr. Andrew Black; it is scarcely necessary to particularise the individual performance of the soloists, which are familiar enough; at times the best will not sing up to the mark altogether; Mr. William Green, however, sang with exceptional sweetness and power. To sum up the whole Festival, it is as nearly the best as any I have heard at the Three Choirs Festivals during a fairly (if not exceptionally) long experience. Mr. Atkins has enormously improved since three years ago; he has got the grip of the thing well in hand now, and will develop assuredly into a really admirable conductor.

THE PRESTON GUILD MERCHANT.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

In so far as the Guilds Merchant of this country, dating from mediæval times, continue in existence at all at the present day, it is of course only as picturesque and benevolent institutions, the last remnants of their power having been lost in 1835. Why the Preston Guild in particular should celebrate itself so very elaborately once in twenty years is a complex question; but I suspect that the prevalence of Catholicism in the neighbourhood has had something to do with it. The Fylde District of Lancashire, having never accepted the Reformation, is to this day prevalently Catholic, and Preston, situated at the south-east corner of the Fylde, is the chief town of the district. This, perhaps, goes some way towards accounting for the remarkable extent to which the taste for open-air shows and processions, with banners and emblems carried aloft,—a taste which the Protestant spirit tends to repress—is found to persist among the Preston people. Certainly the ceremonial part of the celebrations held during the first week of September, though secular in character, was apt to remind one of experiences in Catholic countries. The principal day was the Wednesday, when the trades' procession paraded the town. Fishergate—the ancient 'gate' or way of the fishers from the river Ribble to the market—was as densely thronged with sightseers as if a coronation had been toward, and for quite three hours the marching and countermarching continued to the cheery strains of innumerable brass bands, playing 'Stanley for ever,' with occasional interludes of 'See, the conquering hero' and 'When Johnny comes marching home again.' The procession was in three main divisions, the first representing general trades, the second, building and engineering, and the third, textile trades. Together they formed a moving industrial exhibition, old methods and new being illustrated in juxtaposition on the huge lorries and motor-cars which bore along not only machines, tools, materials and specimens of fine workmanship, but, in many cases, also men and women engaged in their own proper processes of manufacture. Of course a great deal of it was mere advertisement, but there was some trace of the 'Meistersinger' spirit in the show, the actors in which seemed to care as little as did the crowd either for rain or for boisterous and dust-laden wind. On other days there were processions of Anglican Sunday Schools, of Non-conformist Schools, and of Catholic Schools and Societies. There were also Guild Courts, a mayoral luncheon, the opening of a new wing to the infirmary, an agricultural show, athletic sports, balloon ascents, fireworks, concerts, a torchlight parade, and balls for children and grown-ups.

But for all the crowding, jostling, and elbowing in the streets and parks, though window seats along the route of the Wednesday procession cost five shillings and beds £1 per night, it remains the painful duty of the musical chronicler to state that the serious music was the solitary failure of the week's proceedings. Of the crowds that attended the ceremonies of presentation, inauguration, and aërial navigation, the emblematic and pyrotechnic displays, no tolerable contingent was to be lured to the Public Hall by the charms of a fine choir and orchestra, or by soloists of resounding fame, such as Madame Albani and Lady Hallé.

The concerts were four in number, all of them orchestral, and the choir—furnished by the Preston Choral Society—was in its place at all four, though on Tuesday and Thursday it had not much to do. Mr. Risegari, who is conductor of the Preston Society and also leader of the great Manchester orchestra, was thoroughly master of the situation, so far as his forces were concerned. After the singing of the National Anthem according to Stanford's arrangement, he opened the concert on Tuesday with a finished rendering of Weber's 'Oberon' Overture. Other purely orchestral pieces given in the course of the week were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, Sullivan's 'Di Ballo' Overture, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and the Ballet and Hungarian March from Berlioz's 'Faust.' It gradually became clear that the orchestra was strongest in the strings, but highly efficient on the whole, the number of instrumentalists being about seventy. Mr. Risegari's well-known qualities as a conductor—clearness and simplicity, striking rhythmical neatness and precision—were once more demonstrated. The choir was heard only in 'God save the King' and in a brief and unimportant motet by Gounod at the first concert, but in the cantatas given on Wednesday afternoon—'The Spectre's Bride' and the first part of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha'—and in the 'Elijah' on Friday, there was ample opportunity to judge of its quality. The only fault to be found was that the tenors and basses were not quite strong enough to balance the sopranos and altos. In all other respects the choral singing was admirable. Lady Hallé, who was the only instrumental soloist, seemed to be somewhat affected at first by the depressing influence of empty benches, but that influence she soon shook off, and, in Max Bruch's A minor Romance and G minor Concerto, and Beethoven's F major Romance, she was quite at her best. Miss Agnes Nicholls seems for the present to have become rather intimately associated with 'Ocean, thou mighty monster.' That air she sang with all due mastery of the tremendous difficulties at the first concert. The special charm of her voice and art was, however, more distinctly perceptible in the 'Spectre's Bride.' Mr. Andrew Black sang airs by Handel and Sullivan and the bass solos in the 'Spectre's Bride.' He was not to be depressed or harassed, and did full justice to the music and to himself from beginning to end. Mr. William Green was also in thoroughly good voice, and his rendering of the tenor solos in the Dvorák Cantata and of the one tenor song in 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' was entirely satisfactory. Madame Albani appeared at two of the concerts. On Thursday she sang Mozart's 'Non mi dir' and the 'Ave Maria' from Max Bruch's 'Feuerkreuz,' besides the solo in Gounod's motet 'Gallia.' When the 'Ave Maria' was encored, Madame Albani added 'Home, sweet home,' with harp accompaniment, but I am not sure that the contrast between that domestic ditty and the ensuing C minor Symphony was quite of the artistic order.

On Friday afternoon, when the 'Elijah' was given, with Mesdames Albani and Ada Crossley, Messrs. William Green and Charles Santley as principal soloists, the state of things in the auditorium was a little better. But there is no disguising the fact that in regard to the musical part of the week's proceedings a serious miscalculation was made. Twenty years ago, when the last Guild celebration was held, the crowding is said to have been so tremendous that on one occasion some thousands of persons found themselves wedged into the station enclosure and unable to move. The memory of such incidents may have had something to do with turning the heads of the Town Council and causing them to think that they could safely fix the price of seats at a somewhat exaggerated figure. Though the price in some parts of the hall was hurriedly reduced when it was found that the excellent performances were taking place before a wilderness of empty benches, the situation was not to be saved. The municipality will have to pay for the mistake, and I should expect to find the sum not far short of four figures. Those innkeepers who were getting a pound a night each for exiguous beds ought really to come down with something handsome towards the covering of the deficit.

THE SCARBOROUGH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The advantages to a chorus of careful selection and assiduous drilling can rarely, if ever, have been more plainly manifested than by a comparison of the first Scarborough Musical Festival, in 1899, with the second, which took place from the 17th to the 19th ult. On the former occasion there was a large but ill-selected body of vocalists, many of whom had obviously been admitted without the formality of any test, while the relative proportions between the parts had been not too carefully observed. The results were admittedly unsatisfactory, but this time it was soon made apparent that an energetic attempt had been made to improve matters. The numbers had been reduced, but there are occasions when, despite Euclid, a part is greater than the whole, and this was one of them. Though the number was smaller, and the hall not so favourable acoustically as that in which the first festival was held, the volume of tone was larger, while the quality was much more brilliant and sonorous, the sopranos being quite excellent. The programme was not exacting, for though the 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and Stanford's 'Revenge' present many difficulties, they are not unknown to most choralists, so that familiarity has taken off the edge of their awkward points. Perhaps the most striking proof of the efficiency of the new chorus was afforded by 'The Revenge,' which requires careful vocalisation in each individual part, considerable dramatic intelligence, and accurate intonation. In one or two unsupported passages the choir did sink in pitch, a failing which may be excused them in view of their possession of the other two qualifications mentioned. Their phrasing was good, their method unforced, and their knowledge and appreciation of the music and its moods quite above the average. To Dr. Cowen's plain and careful beat some of their success is undoubtedly due, but a large share of the honour must be accredited to the chorus-masters, Dr. Ely and Mr. Patman, for the vast improvement that has been effected. For the sake of accuracy it may be added that a small contingent of experienced singers from Bradford strengthened the chorus, adding no doubt to both its weight and its confidence.

The programme was of local rather than general interest, as may be gathered from the list of choral works already given. It was doubtless designed to attract a public which has yet to be accustomed to the idea of a musical festival, and should naturally incline towards the familiar in art. Unfortunately the policy did not meet with unqualified success, and from the large amount of vacant space in the hall at each concert, it seems at least doubtful whether the festival will, in a commercial sense, have justified its existence.

Little need be said of the performances of the more familiar works, which went well—'Faust' quite brilliantly—under so experienced a chief, and with soloists as capable as Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black. The more interesting features of the festival were to be found in the two miscellaneous programmes, especially of that which took place on Thursday afternoon. It was distinguished by the prominence which it gave to native art—Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony and an air by Gluck were the only pieces not of British origin. In addition to Stanford's 'Revenge,' there was Cowen's 'Butterfly's Ball' overture, Mackenzie's 'Coronation March,' one of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches (in D), and the almost too-often-heard contralto song from Goring Thomas's 'Nadeshda.' The selection had this in its favour, that not one of these compositions was desirable simply from motives of patriotism, but was on its intrinsic merits well worth a place in the scheme. The brilliant cleverness of the 'Butterfly's Ball,' the masculine force of Mackenzie's March and the vivacity of Elgar's, were all sympathetically interpreted by the excellent band,—mostly of well-known London players, with Mr. Edward O'Brien as leader—and though it would be easy to find points for criticism in all these compositions, they gave one, on the whole, a good impression of contemporary native art. The second miscellaneous concert reminded one of a 'Wagner night' at the Promenade concerts, the programme consisting of a series of popular pieces from Wagner's works, from 'Rienzi' to 'Meistersinger,' to which Beethoven's Seventh Symphony was added by way of ballast. The performances of these selections, and of the Symphony, were uniformly good, and in many cases brilliant. The very refined singing of the sopranos and contraltos in the 'Spinning' chorus from the 'Flying Dutchman' also deserves mention.

ENGLISH OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

It is really a matter of serious congratulation that the English opera season should, under the ægis of the Moody-Manners Opera Company, have been so amazingly successful in the recent and popular Covent Garden enterprise. That ancient tag,—how many remember, one wonders, that the line comes from Addison's 'Cato'?—'Tis not in mortals to command success, but we'll do more, Sempronius, we'll deserve it,' has been particularly emphasised during this season. It is, of course, a thing not avoidable in criticism to note that Covent Garden Theatre is far too large for an enterprise set upon other than grandiose foundations; but it has, nevertheless, to be recorded that, even upon that basis of things, this company has managed to secure a chorus which, from every point of view—grouping, acting, dancing, singing—has really put the Grand Season chorus to shame. The house has been filled night after night; and on the majority of occasions the last comers for unbooked seats have been sent empty away.

Altogether (dating from August 25) thirty-five performances were arranged for. Among these, 'Faust' and 'Carmen' run in a dead heat, with the mystical number seven to be accounted to the score of each. 'Tannhäuser' comes in not a bad second with five performances to its credit; 'Pagliacci' and 'Cavalleria'—those earthly twins that, whether their creators like it or no, seem destined to run in couples—stand next in the list in company with 'Il Trovatore,' four performances standing to the credit of each, the same number—but one chooses to assert the fact with a somewhat greater respect of language—of performances having been allotted to 'Lohengrin.' 'Siegfried,' 'Maritana,' and 'The Lily of Killarney,' complete the tale with a single performance each. But, as the lady in Fielding's wonderful account of Jonathan Wild might have exclaimed, not without clamour—'Why "Maritana"? Why "The Lily of Killarney"?' if only on one occasion their popular beauties were to be displayed. But perhaps these are matters mysterious, which are secret to all but the immediate management.

It is by chance a little difficult to look upon such an undertaking as a complete whole. When one has for long been watching the little waves 'move towards the pebbled shore,' one possibly gets into the habit of looking too minutely into details—a view-point which, at the end of a season, naturally becomes uninteresting and without memorial value. Nevertheless, already it has been said that the chorus has been particularly praiseworthy; already emphasis has been laid upon the intention, the excellent intention, which has left no stone unturned towards the furtherance of a real and artistic success; and it may be now added, as has already been suggested, that the financial results have been more than satisfactory.

Madame Fanny Moody, Madame Blanche Marchesi, Miss Zélie de Lussan, Miss Anna Hickisch, Miss Marie Alexander, these are among the chief names of the ladies who have worked hard and well for the success of the season; while Mr. Joseph O'Mara, Mr. John Coates, Mr. Philip Brozel, Mr. Manners, Mr. G. A. Fox, Mr. Magrath, and Mr. Dever rank again amongst the names of others who have done their duty with extreme energy and vigour.

The season has been, one may be led to believe, something of an experiment; but it is a pleasure to record that the experiment has been successful. Part of that success has undoubtedly been owing to the fact that the company has had particular advantages in coming directly, as it were, into the inheritance left by the Syndicate in matters of scenery and appointments. One does not overrate the Syndicate by making the very definite assertion that, under most trying circumstances, it has done exceptional work in surmounting obstacles that were very grave and very hard to conquer. It is due to some extent, then, to that body of men (chief among whom one reckons, of course, Mr. Higgins and his able and clever manager, Mr. Forsyth) that an English season of opera has again been given free from any taint of cheapness, vulgarity, and second-rate opportunities for laughter. One's only prayer now is that a competent reviser should be allowed a free hand upon the English texts of the operas that have been given in the native tongue, and that the indignity of hearing the language used, as it were, by pot-house politicians and not by educated English gentlemen should, once and for all, be abolished from our lyric stage.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Further artistic advance has been made in the programmes of the eighth season, which commenced on August 23, at Queen's Hall, under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction.

Amongst first performances in London, great interest naturally pertained to those of Tchaikovsky's first and second symphonies, which were played respectively on August 27 and the 3rd ult. The former in G minor (Op. 13) was written in 1866-7, and was first played in its entirety in Moscow in the following year in 1868. It is entitled 'Winter dreams,' and the two first movements have the respective sub-titles of 'Dreams on the high road in winter,' and 'Dreary-land—land of fruits.' The last-named is the most satisfactory number of a work possessing pathetic and poetical suggestiveness. The second symphony in C minor (Op. 17) is a much more interesting composition, partly owing to its employment of the folk-tunes of Little Russia, the most notable being variants of 'Down by Mother Volga,' and 'The Crane.' The latter is used with inspiriting effect in the last movement, which is strongly impregnated with the characteristics of Russian music.

On August 30 was played the Overture to Franz Erkel's opera 'Hunyady Laszlo,' one of the most popular works of this Hungarian composer. The overture does not possess great musical interest, but the melodies are spirited and engaging. We believe that an Andante and Allegretto piacevole, entitled 'Dream Children' (Op. 43), by Dr. Edward Elgar, had not previous to the 4th ult. been played in London. These pieces are based on a passage from Charles Lamb's Essay, from which the music takes its title, and they illustrate the poetic delicacy and naïvety of the text with singular felicity. Mr. Joseph C. Holbrook's tone-poem, based on Longfellow's version of the Legend 'The skeleton in Armour,' was played on the 6th ult., and proved a work of lively imagination and considerable strength.

The following first performances in England must be recorded:—On August 28, Herr Anton Averkamp's symphonic ballad 'Elaine and Lancelot,' a work possessing melodious themes and tasteful orchestration, but diminishing in interest as it proceeds. A composition of greater intensity, on the 13th ult., was the overture to Herr Enna's opera, 'Cleopatra.' The scheme of this work would seem to be chiefly an endeavour to musically illustrate the complex temperament of the famed queen, but be this as it may, the overture, which was written some time after the opera, is strong music, testifying to great imaginative power and remarkable command of contrapuntal resource and orchestral effects. On the 18th ult. were produced a symphonic poem, entitled 'Korsholm,' by the Finnish composer Armas Järnefelt, and a violoncello concerto in C minor (Op. 38), by the French musician Jules de Swert. The symphonic poem has for its basis the conquest of Finland by the Swedish Crusaders, and the establishment of the Christian religion in the country. These incidents are illustrated by themes of folk-song-like character at the commencement of the work, a section of military suggestiveness, and a conclusion in which effective use is made of the Lutheran hymn, 'Ein feste Burg,' the last-named being emblematical of the triumph of the Christian Faith. The work is interesting and well scored. The violoncello concerto also proved attractive, its chief theme being expressive and developed in an engaging and musicianly manner. The solo part was excellently played by Mr. Bertie Withers. At the same concert was produced for the first time the suite formed from M. Gabriel Fauré's incidental music to Maeterlinck's tradegy 'Pelléas et Mélisande.' The work consists of three movements, the first being the prelude to the play, the second the spinning-wheel number which precedes Act III., and the third chiefly consisting of an arrangement of the death music in the fifth Act. The whole of it is overshadowed by 'pale melancholy,' but it is expressive and refined music that appeals to the musician.

On the 20th ult. the second and third portions of M. Vincent d'Indy's trilogy 'Wallenstein' were played. The work was inspired by Schiller's poem, and the sections are severally headed 'Wallenstein's Camp,' 'Max and Thekla,' and 'The Death of Wallenstein.' The opening was first heard in England on April 16, 1896, at one of the concerts at the Queen's Hall conducted by the late M. Lamoureux. The music is inclined to be rhapsodical, but the themes are significant and well contrasted, and the writing is masterly and full of subtlety.

THE COMING SEASON.

The Royal Choral Society

has now issued its prospectus, and the most important features would appear to be the revival of Berlioz's 'Faust' and Sullivan's oratorio 'The Light of the World'; the latter work has not been performed by this Society for twenty-five years. The scheme of concerts, which commence on November 6, includes also a repetition of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy, 'The Golden Legend,' Cowen's 'Coronation Ode,' 'Elijah,' and the usual New Year's Day and Good Friday performances of the 'Messiah.' The final concert, on April 30, will include, it is hoped, a new composition from the pen of Sir Hubert Parry. Among the singers engaged is Miss Margaret Macintyre, who will make her reappearance on the oratorio platform.

St. James's Hall

has been entirely renovated and redecorated during the recess. Three Richter concerts will be given therein—on November 3, 10, and 18. The Saturday Popular Concerts will recommence on November 1, and be continued on alternate Saturdays with the St. James's Hall Ballad Concerts, starting on November 8. The series of Twelve Chamber Concerts initiated by Messrs. Broadwood start on November 6, and the Saturday Popular Orchestral Concerts, directed by Mr. Edward O'Brien, will open the season on the 4th inst. The celebrated Meiningen Orchestra will give a series of three evening and two afternoon concerts, under Musik-Director Fritz Steinbach, commencing November 17. The only individual concerts at present announced are Mr. Vert's annual concert on the 29th inst., and recitals by Kubelik on the 25th inst., and Paderewski on November 11.

Queen's Hall.

Eight Saturday afternoon symphony concerts are announced, commencing on the 25th inst., and the Sunday Concert Society's Sunday afternoon concerts will be resumed on the 12th inst., both series being as before conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. The National Sunday League evening concerts will be continued as of yore.

At Steinway Hall, Mr. Percy French and Mr. Harrison Hill will give a second series of Musical Recitals on Saturday afternoons, commencing on the 4th inst., and at the same Hall Mdlle. Berta Oeder will give Three Song Recitals, the first being announced for the 9th inst.

At Bechstein Hall, Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. Charles Phillips announce their Ninth series of Chamber Concerts, beginning November 4. A Vocal Recital will also be given at this Hall, on the 10th inst., by Madame Nancy Stevenson.

The Mozart Society resume their interesting series of concerts, at the Portman Rooms, on the 11th inst.

Suburban Societies.

The Alexandra Palace Orchestral and Choral Society announce the resumption of the year's work on the 18th inst., with 'Elijah,' followed on November 15 by 'The Golden Legend,' and on December 6 by 'Israel in Egypt.' Conductor, Mr. Allen Gill.

The Battersea Choral Society will start their season with MacCunn's 'Lord Ullin's Daughter' and Gaul's 'Ruth.' Conductor, Mr. W. Lowe.

The Bermondsey Settlement Choral Society will perform 'The Death of Minnehaha' and 'Hiawatha's Departure' from Coleridge-Taylor's trilogy, together with Mackenzie's overture, 'The Cricket on the Hearth,' on November 13. Other works to be given during the season are W. H. Speer's cantata 'The Jackdaw of Rheims,' Sterndale Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria,' Lee Williams's 'Gethsemane,' and a concert of English Choral Music covering the product of five centuries (madrigals, &c.). Conductor, Mr. John E. Borland.

The St. Peter's Choral Society, Brockley, will give Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Randegger's 'Fridolin,' Gounod's 'Mors et Vita,' and Schubert's 'Song of Miriam.' Conductor, Dr. C. J. Frost.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society will give five concerts in the Crystal Palace Concert Hall, and the programmes will include Sullivan's 'Ivanhoe' and 'Golden Legend,' Costa's 'Eli,' 'Elijah,' and 'Acis and Galatea.' Conductor, Mr. Arthur Fagge.

The Finsbury Choral Association will perform 'Elijah,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' and Elgar's 'Caractacus.' Conductor, Mr. Allen Gill.

The Highbury Philharmonic Society announces Berlioz's 'Faust,' the 'Messiah,' 'Maritana,' and a miscellaneous concert, including Sullivan's 'Kenilworth,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony. Conductor, Mr. G. H. Betjemann.

The South London Choral Association commence their concerts next month with Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' Later in the season they will give Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch,' and Sir F. Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clampherdown'; also a Violin Recital under the direction of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. Conductor, Mr. L. C. Venables.

The West Ham Choral Society will perform 'Elijah,' 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' and the 'Messiah.' Conductor, Mr. W. Harding Bonner.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, September 15.

During the summer months no performances of serious music are taking place with us, as a rule, but this year is an exception. Mr. Gabor Steiner, the managing director of 'Venice in Vienna,' has had the happy and plucky idea to get up a series of grand concerts in the open air, with excellent programmes, calculated to attract earnest music-lovers, and at the same time to provide something more than mere entertainment to the general frequenters of the establishment. For this purpose he engaged a large orchestra (described in the advertisements 'the Riesen-Orchester'—or Giant-Orchestra!), which he placed under the able direction of Professor Hermann Grädener, who, in a short time, succeeded in converting this hastily-gathered body of instrumentalists into a thoroughly efficient organism. In the programmes of these concerts, classical music preponderated, and the most highly-favoured numbers, perhaps, were Schubert's grand C major Symphony and Weber's 'Aufforderung zum Tanz.' But the management had also provided some personal and individual attractions. Thus we had Richard Strauss, the leader of the advanced German school, conducting works by Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner, as well as some of his own symphonic poems, and a symphonic prologue to 'König Œdipus' of Sophocles and the prelude to the opera 'Ingwelde,' by his equally 'advanced' countryman, Max Schillings. The three concerts, under Strauss's direction, were indeed most successful, and elicited much popular interest, some of which being no doubt owing to the interesting personality of the distinguished conductor.

Quite a different aspect was presented by the several performances conducted by Louis Ganne, the popular French composer. The programmes mainly and naturally consisted of compositions by French masters, Gounod and Ambroise Thomas amongst others, and consequently appealed to a different section of the public. Ganne conducted no less than six concerts, and fully justified the good reputation which he enjoys in his native France. The French musician was succeeded at the conductor's desk by a Viennese artist, Richard Heuberger, well-known as a composer and musical author. His operettas have achieved great popularity during the last few years, and he shares with Dr. Hanslick the responsible duties of musical critic of the Neue Freie Presse. He is, moreover, the conductor of the Vienna Maennergesang-Verein, and has recently been appointed to a professorship for dramatic composition at the Conservatorium. He favoured us with the works of the romantic school,—Weber, Mendelssohn, Bizet, Wagner, and others—and also introduced a composition of his own, an orchestral suite entitled 'From the Orient,' which was exceedingly well received. It is a very interesting, characteristic, and not too lengthy work, in three parts. Oscar Nedbal, the well-known excellent viola player of the Bohemian Quartet, was the next amongst the specially-engaged conductors, and as such furnished additional proof of his sound and thorough musicianship, and of the magnetism of his artistic temperament. His programmes were devoted entirely to Czech composers, and revealed to us in a special manner the importance of that nationality in modern musical art. We were made acquainted, for the first time on this occasion, with the entire suite, superscribed 'My Fatherland,' by Smetana, consisting of six movements of ample proportions, some of which have already become tolerably well known. They represent a series of characteristic tone-pictures, in which musical expression is given to various distinct moods, while the production of mere colour effects is in no wise attempted Among other interesting numbers from the Czech repertory were a dramatic overture by Joseph Suk (another member of the Bohemian Quartet), a symphonic poem, 'My Youth,' by J. B. Foerster, two Slavonic dances by the most famous of Czech composers, Antonin Dvorák, an overture to Vrschlicky's comedy 'The Night on the Karlstein,' by Zdenko Fibich, and a festal march, valse, and polonaise from the ballet 'Der faule Hans,' by Nedbal himself.

The remaining concerts of the 'Venice in Vienna' series were under the conductorship of Carl Komzák, one of the most popular conductors in Austria, and a successful composer of music of a lighter order. Thus, to sum up, these concerts, though taking place at an unaccustomed time of the year, have proved a complete success, owing to their general excellence, the diversified character of their programmes and the pleasant surroundings of the locality in which they were held.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(from our own correspondent.)

The Philharmonic Society promises an attractive musical season with programmes arranged to suit many varieties of taste. The main work of the Society will be Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Wagner's 'Lohengrin.' At a miscellaneous concert, Mons. Ysaye will make his first appearance in Belfast; while at other miscellaneous concerts Mesdames Ella Russell, Kirkby Lunn, Louisa Sobrino, Misses Evangeline Florence, Muriel Foster, Lucie Johnstone and Gleeson White, and Messrs. Kelly Cole, Ivor Foster, John Childs, Charles Knowles, John Coates and other artists of note, including Mr. W. H. Squire, violoncellist, will be heard. It is understood that recitals will also be given by Messrs. Paderewski and Kubelik.

The Ulster Hall, now fortunately the property of the city, will be available for concerts, &c., although its much needed restoration and modernisation cannot be carried out till next year.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(from our own correspondent.)

As a sort of anticipation of the forthcoming musical season, we had a week's visit of the Carl Rosa Opera Company at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, beginning on the 1st ult. The operas presented were 'Tannhäuser' (twice), 'Carmen,' 'Il Trovatore,' 'Faust,' and 'Cinq Mars.' The principal artists were Miss Lucile Hill (for the Wagner opera and 'Cinq Mars'), Miss Lilian Coomber (successful in 'Il Trovatore'), Miss Lizzie Burgess and Miss Toni Seiter (a new Carmen), soprani; Miss Winifred Ludlam, contralto; Mr. Hedmondt, Mr. Robert Cunningham, and Mr. Edward Davies (a new Faust, small in figure, but painstaking and fairly successful), tenori; and Mr. Alex. Bevan, Mr. Ludwig, Mr. Arthur Deane, and Mr. W. Chapman, bassi. Mr. E. Goossens and Mr. Walter van Noorden conducted. There were good houses throughout, and the performances were of quite average merit. For the rest, there is nothing beyond the note of preparation; but we are promised a record season, so far as the number of concerts can make it so.

Mr. George Halford has resigned the conductorship of the Birmingham Amateur Orchestral Society, and Mr. Granville Bantock has been elected his successor. The Society has reached its fortieth year and has done good work in its time.

On the retirement of Mr. H. M. Stevenson, honorary conductor for twenty-two years of the Midland Musical Society, Mr. A. J. Cotton was appointed to that office. Mr. Cotton has for some time been assistant chorus-master to the Festival Choral Society, and he will doubtless soon improve the prospects of the Midland Society. Mr. Stevenson has rendered long and faithful service, but as an amateur he could not compete with the skilled professional conductors now becoming so prominent here.

The Festival Choral Society held their fifty-sixth annual meeting on July 30. The report showed a surplus on the year's work, and this was a vindication of the spirited policy of the Committee. The programme for the coming season embraces Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Max Bruch's 'Lay of the Bell,' Horatio Parker's 'A Star Song,' Beethoven's 'Mass in D,'—not heard in Birmingham since the Festival of 1861—Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' Stanford's 'Revenge,' and the usual Boxing-night performance of the 'Messiah.' Dr. G. R. Sinclair was re-elected conductor.

The City Choral Society propose to give at the first concert Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' which was such a great success last season. Handel's 'Messiah' is promised, with the original accompaniments and the harpsichord for the recitatives. Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' with miscellaneous selections, will complete the programme.

Many novelties are to be produced by the Halford Concerts Society, including the symphonic poems 'Dante' and 'Lalla Rookh,' by Granville Bantock, a work of the same kind, 'Sintram,' by Mr. Halford, a new Concert Overture by Dr. Elgar, Sir Charles Stanford's Irish Rhapsody (a few days after its production at Norwich), and works by Rutland Boughton, Norman O'Neill, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and others.

The Birmingham Choral Union, the Choral and Orchestral Association, and the Midland Musical Society will minister to the wants of the Saturday-evening audiences, and the various Chamber Concert organisations will continue their work.

The Hallé orchestra, with Dr. Richter, conductor, and the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Henry J. Wood, will visit Birmingham.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At last there are signs that music is awaking from her summer slumber. The indications of returning activity are few, but full of promise. Messrs. Paterson are early in the field with their scheme of orchestral concerts. They have again engaged the Scottish Orchestra for their series, with Dr. Cowen as conductor-in-chief; and considerable interest attaches to the fact that the scheme embraces the appearance, for the first time here, of the great conductors, Richard Strauss and Felix Mottl. The number of concerts has been extended, and will consist of nine orchestral and two choral-orchestral concerts.

The larger choral societies announce each their bill-of-fare for the coming season, as follows:—The University Musical Society, Mozart's 'Requiem' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea'; Mr. Moonie's Choir, Verdi's 'Requiem' and the Banquet Scene from Max Bruch's 'Odysseus'; Mr. Kirkhope's Choir, the 'Messiah' (Prof. Prout's edition); and the Choral Union, the 'Messiah,' Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' and 'Judas Maccabæus.' Vocal recitals are announced by Mr. Robert Burnett, Miss Stuart Reid, Madame Albani, Madame Clara Butt, Miss Neill Fraser, and Miss Adelina Feria; and a pianoforte recital by Mr. Julian Clifford.

Excellent programmes are in preparation by the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society, Mr. Winram's Pupils' Orchestra, and the Saint Cecelia Orchestra (of which Mr. Gerald Crawford is the conductor).

Mr. Denhof's scheme of chamber music concerts promises to be of greater importance even than formerly. Among the collaborators whom he has engaged are Lady Hallé, and Messrs. Ysaye and Kubelik.

Three separate series of popular concerts are announced—one by the People's Entertainment Society, another by Paterson and Son, and a third by the proprietors of the Central Halls.

Mr. Edward German's opera, 'Merrie England,' has met with distinct success on its first appearance here.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The various musical organisations are now showing signs of activity in preparation for the coming season. The executive committee of the Choral and Orchestral Union announce their arrangements for a season of twelve weeks. Four choral and ten orchestral concerts will be given, with, as usual, the series of popular orchestral concerts on Saturday evenings. The choral works to be presented are Handel's 'Messiah,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Richard Strauss's 'Wanderer's Storm Song,' Cowen's 'Coronation Ode,' and Brahms's 'Requiem,' the last three being novelties so far as Glasgow is concerned. The Scottish Orchestra will number eighty performers, with Dr. Cowen as conductor-in-chief, and the committee have been fortunate in securing the services of those eminent conductors, Herr Richard Strauss and Herr Mottl, to direct on the occasion of Dr. Cowen's absence from two concerts. The choral concerts will, as formerly, be conducted by Mr. Joseph Bradley.

The programme being prepared for the first concert by the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society (Mr. W. T. Hoeck, conductor) includes Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto No. 4, in G, Cowen's 'Welsh' Symphony, Mackenzie's Overture, 'The Cricket on the Hearth,' and MacCunn's 'The Dowie Dens o' Jarrow.' Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, under Mr. John Cullen, have in hand Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride' and Haydn's 'Creation.' The choral classes in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, taught by Mr. R. L. Reid, are again studying the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah,' the latter work being also the subject of study by the Sabbath School Union Choir (Mr. Alec Steven, conductor).

The musical associations connected with many of our churches have almost entirely superseded the choral societies which flourished in the city a decade ago. One of the largest and most active of these associations is that of John Street United Free Church (Mr. George Taggart, conductor). An oratorio or cantata, complete or in part, is given each month, and during the early part of the coming season Bach's 'God's time is the best' and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens' will be performed. Handel finds favour with Caledonia Road Church Association (Mr. Robert Turnbull, organist and choirmaster) and Pollokshields West Church Choir (Mr. D. S. Eadie, organist and choirmaster), the former preparing 'Samson' and the latter the 'Messiah.'

Of choral societies outside the city the following arrangements are announced:—Coatbridge Choral Union (Mr. William Harvey, conductor), the 'Messiah,' Part 1 of the 'Creation,' and Mr. More Smieton's 'King Arthur'; Johnstone Choral Union (Mr. Allan Craig, conductor), 'Judas Maccabæus'; Kirkintilloch Choral Union (Mr. Alec Steven, conductor), the 'Creation' and Balfe's 'The Bohemian Girl.' Clydebank Choral Union (Mr. W. J. Clapperton, conductor), Gade's 'The Erl King's daughter,' the 'Messiah' and 'Samson.' Among the pieces being rehearsed by the Paisley Philharmonic Society (Mr. Hopkins Ould, conductor) are Haydn's 'Clock' Symphony, Gade's Symphony in B flat, Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, and short works by Elgar, Cowen, and Tchaikovsky.

Mr. Herbert Walton concluded his Autumn series of organ recitals at the Cathedral on the 15th ult., when he gave a brilliant performance of the introduction and fugue from Reubke's Sonata in C minor. The Cathedral choir sang Stanford's service in B flat with fine effect.

On the occasion of taking up his duties at the Athenæum School of Music, Dr. Edward E. Harper, the newly-appointed principal, was entertained at a complimentary banquet held under influential auspices on the 5th ult. The School, now entering upon its thirteenth session, is in a flourishing condition, and should afford the new principal ample scope for the exercise of his skill and energy.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The prospects for the season are as bright as need be, and are fully equal to those of last year—one of the busiest, if not the busiest, in the history of Liverpool. The premier society, the Philharmonic, commences operations on the 14th inst. with a strong miscellaneous programme, M. Van Rooy making his reappearance, and M. Kocian his first appearance in Liverpool. The Society's scheme includes Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' the 'Messiah,' and on March 24, 1903, for the first time in Liverpool, Dr. Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' with Madame Brema, Dr. Ludwig Wüllner, and Mr. Andrew Black as principals. Dr. Cowen will again direct the orchestra, and Mr. Broadbent remains Secretary of the Society—a position he has occupied with distinction for many years.

Great interest is being engendered by the promised appearance on the 18th inst. of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, with Mr. Henry J. Wood, of course, directing. Dr. Richter is to lead his wonderful orchestra through four programmes—an increase of one concert on last season's arrangements. I hear, too, that the Societa Armonica is to engage in a time of unusual activity under the baton of Mr. V. Akeroyd.

The Liverpool Orchestral Society, under the enlightened direction of Mr. A. E. Rodewald, will be responsible for their usual number of concerts, half of which will take place in the large Gymnasium, and the remainder in the Philharmonic Hall. Mr. Theodore Lawson is busy with the arrangements for his series of chamber concerts; and a series of concerts will also be given by Mr. Ernest Schiever, by the Wirral Amateur Orchestral Society, by the Liverpool Musical Society, by the Liscard Orchestral Society, by that splendidly-drilled body, the Goossen's Choral Union, by the Aintree Musical Society, by the North Liverpool Choral Society, by the Liverpool P. O. Choral Society, and by Mr. Thomas Shaw, whose popular ballad programmes never fail to please his large clientèle. Generally speaking, the promise is of a good average season, nothing more, and certainly nothing less.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Manchester musical season will begin in a few days, and will be in full swing before the end of this month. Two of our concert institutions take obvious precedence of all others. These are the Hallé concerts, conducted by Dr. Richter, and the concerts of the Brodsky Quartet, the one representing orchestral and choral music, the other chamber-music at its best. Thursday evenings are inseparably connected in the minds of Manchester music-lovers with the mighty orchestra founded, and for a very long term of years guided, by Sir Charles Hallé, and now entering upon its fourth season of work under Richter. The feast of good things promised to the Hallé subscribers includes the following choral and orchestral works:—Bach's Great Mass (given for the first time by the Hallé Choir last year and repeated this year by general desire); Berlioz's 'Faust' (established in the favour of the Manchester public ever since the first British performance of it here in Hallé's time, and to be given this year on December 11 with special reference to the composer's hundredth birthday); the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah,' as a matter of course; the 'Golden Legend'; the 'Dream of Gerontius'; and a group of shorter works making up the programme of a miscellaneous choral evening. These shorter works will be Stanford's Latin 'Te Deum,' Brahms's 'Triumphlied,' and possibly Richard Strauss's 'Wanderer's Sturmlied.' Besides Beethoven's Ninth Symphony—which is, as usual, to form the crowning work of the whole season—there is to be another much less familiar symphonic work with choral finale, namely, Liszt's 'Faust Symphonie.' Other symphonies to be heard in the course of the season are Mozart's so-called 'Jupiter'; Beethoven's 4, 6, and 7; Brahms's 1 and 2; Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique'; and a new work by an unknown composer named Glass. With the Symphonies may be grouped Elgar's Orchestral Variations. The Symphonic Poems are Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini'; Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung'; and Smetana's 'Vysehrad'; and the Overtures are Beethoven's 'Leonora No. 1' and 'Egmont'; Weber's 'Ruler of Spirits'; Wagner's 'Meistersinger' and 'Tannhäuser'; Mendelssohn's 'Fair Melusina'; Glazounoff's 'Carneval'; Dvorák's 'Mein Heim'; Brahms's 'Tragic'; and Berlioz's 'Francs Juges.' Among other orchestral works, Dvorák's first 'Slavonic Rhapsody' and Liszt's second 'Hungarian Rhapsody,' appear on the amended syllabus.

The concerts of the Brodsky Quartet will be five in number; the programmes are not yet announced. Among other performances of chamber-music by resident musicians, a series of three pianoforte recitals by Mr. W. H. Dayas—the brilliant and distinguished teacher at the Royal Manchester College—may be mentioned; also two pianoforte recitals by Mr. Isidor Cohn, and the usual two concerts of chamber-music with pianoforte by Mr. Max Mayer. Six concerts on Saturday evenings will be given by Mr. Brand Lane, conductor of Lane's Choir—a large and efficient body of singers on something like the same scale as the Hallé Choir; and the work of the smaller choir, conducted by Dr. Henry Watson, will be continued as usual. The ancient institution of the Gentlemen's Concerts continues in a highly flourishing state. There are to be four orchestral evenings, with Dr. Richter as conductor, and four recital concerts. The soloists include Messrs. Kreisler, Sapellnikoff, Willy Hess and Andrew Black, Misses Fanny Davies and Alice Nielsen.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union announces, in all, five concerts, to be given in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Two of these will be orchestral, the first, on the 20th inst., given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, at which Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique' Symphony and Richard Strauss's symphonic poem 'Don Juan' will be played; and the second, on February 11, by the Hallé Orchestra, under the conductorship of Dr. Hans Richter. On December 3, Dr. Edward Elgar's 'Caractacus' will be performed for the first time in Newcastle, and on March 25, Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' will be revived. The Hallé Orchestra has been engaged for both of these concerts, and Mr. James M. Preston will conduct. The usual Christmas performance of the 'Messiah' will be given on December 17.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society will give two concerts. At the first, on December 11, Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' will be given; and at the second, on March 19, there will be a recital of Gounod's 'Faust.' Mr. N. Kilburn will conduct both concerts.

The South Shields Choral Society, of which Mr. M. Fairs is the conductor, announce for December 10, 'Spring,' from Haydn's 'Seasons,' and Stanford's 'The Last Post'; and on March 18, Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' with Madame Brema in the principal part.

The Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society, which Mr. Fairs also conducts, will produce Sullivan's 'On Shore and Sea' and Gounod's 'Gallia' on December 17.

The Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society will present Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' on December 18, and a new oratorio, entitled 'The Annunciation,' by Mr. J. E. Jeffries, the conductor of the Society, on April 2.

The Bishop Auckland Musical Society, under Mr. N. Kilburn, will perform Haydn's 'Creation' on December 17, and probably Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis' and Cowen's 'Coronation Ode' at a future date.

A very interesting concert will be given in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 27th inst., under the auspices of the Northern Musicians' Benevolent Society. The programme will consist entirely of works by Sir A. C. Mackenzie, who will conduct.

The Newcastle Chamber Music Society will resume its excellent series of chamber concerts on the 28th inst.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A noticeable and praiseworthy feature of the programme of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society is the strong element of English work which it proposes to perform during the coming season. With the exception of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' the works are by representative English composers, and include Parry's 'Judith' and 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch,' not forgetting Handel's 'Messiah.' Mr. Allen Gill, who succeeds Mr. Henry J. Wood as conductor, will also direct the two orchestral concerts, at which will be heard two or three works new to this city. Of local importance is the effort of the West Bridgford Society, who propose to perform Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha.'

In instrumental music, Miss Cantelo will provide the public with an opportunity to hear the best in chamber-music, besides giving a pianoforte recital on October 14, with a most comprehensive and attractive programme.

At Leicester, the New Musical Society's first programme (December 4) is purely Handelian, including 'The King shall rejoice' and 'Acis and Galatea,' with the 'Water Music' (for orchestra). A later effort will be a performance of Mendelssohn's 'First Walpurgis Night' and Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron.'

The Choral Society at Grantham are preparing the 'Elijah' for their first concert, and hope to give Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore' at a more advanced period of the season.

The Mansfield Society have decided on 'The Messiah' for their first concert, and at Southwell the Choral Society undertake the same work; at the latter place the Orchestral Society are rehearsing Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave' Overture as principal items.

The Melbourne Glee and Madrigal Society have placed Bennett's 'May Queen' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' in rehearsal.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The triennial Musical Festival, which is to be held on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd inst., though for the time absorbing all the attention and energies of the local musical world, has by no means swamped concert enterprise in the city and district, and the outlook for the coming season is encouraging.

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society announces a repetition of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' complete, which was given last winter. This old-established society is usually looked to as the medium for the introduction to the city of the leading novelties in choral music, and it is expected that later in the season a new work will figure on their programme. As heretofore, the conductor is Mr. F. Schöllhammer.

The Sheffield Musical Union (Dr. Coward) is first in the field with its conductor's festival novelty 'Gareth and Linet,' which is sure to be in great request in the city and district. The Sheffield Choral Union (Mr. S. Suckley) is contemplating a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' The Male Glee and Madrigal Society announces a strong English glee programme including Goss's 'O Thou whose beams.' A number of church and chapel oratorio performances are being projected, commencing with 'Elijah,' at St. Mary's Church, on the 13th inst. Of the district choral societies, the Barnsley St. Cecilia (Dr. Coward) promises Sir Hubert Parry's 'A Song of Darkness and Light' and Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana'; the Chapeltown and District Sacred Harmonic Society (Mr. T. Bool), Benedict's 'St. Peter'; the Hoyland Common Choral Society (Mr. C. R. Senior), Handel's 'Samson'; and the Worksop Choral Society (Mr. Hamilton White), Stanford's 'The Revenge' and 'Elijah.'

Foreign Notes.

Algiers.—At the instigation of the society 'Petit Athénée,' a Philharmonic Society has been formed, which has already received numerous applications for membership. The 'Petit Athénée' itself has its own orchestra and choir, and there is an excellent musical academy connected with it.

Berlin.—The new Training School for the Opera Chorus, instituted at the initiative of the Emperor, was formally opened last month.——An opera founded upon the late Du Maurier's popular novel 'Trilby,' the music by Victor Holländer, is shortly to be brought out at the Royal Theatre.——The Royal Academy of Arts has awarded the Meyerbeer prize of 4,500 marks to Felix Nowowjeski, for an oratorio, 'The Return of the Prodigal Son,' for chorus, soli, orchestra, and organ, a composition, it is said, of remarkable promise.——Madame Sophie Menter, the well-known pianist and favourite pupil of Liszt, is about to establish a school for pianoforte playing in Berlin.

Béziers.—The recent open-air performances at the Théâtre des Arènes of Madame Dieulafoy's drama 'Parysatis,' with the music by M. Camille Saint-Saëns, have been witnessed by vast and highly-appreciative audiences. The most successful numbers of the score were the prelude and the grand finale of the first act, with its very effective Oriental choruses and picturesque ballet.

Cologne.—The new Stadt-Theater was inaugurated with much solemnity on the 7th ult., the musical portion of the performances including Beethoven's overture, 'Zur Weihe des Hauses,' Mozart's overture to 'Die Zauberflöte,' and the third act from 'Die Meistersinger.' The new house is a very handsome structure, and its acoustic conditions are excellent.

Düsseldorf.—The house inhabited by Mendelssohn in 1833, and where he wrote his oratorio, 'St. Paul,' is in course of being demolished, to make room for a modern erection.

Gmunden.—A Brahms museum has just been opened to visitors at the villa owned by Herr Victor von Miller, where the composer frequently resided. One of its rooms is an exact reproduction, including the original furniture, of a corresponding one occupied by him during his frequent stays at Ischl. The museum contains, besides, a number of manuscripts, letters, portraits, medals, and other personalia, as well as the grand pianoforte used by Brahms when at Ischl.

Haelbeke.—A commemorative tablet was unveiled last month at the house where the founder of the modern Flemish School of Music, Peter Benoit, was born. A large and representative assembly from all parts of Belgium attended on the occasion.

Hanover.—The Court Theatre celebrated on the 1st ult. the fiftieth anniversary of the completion and opening of its present stately home. The theatre was originally founded by King George III., of England (who was also King of Hanover), in 1814, and amongst its musical directors was Heinrich Marschner, the composer of 'Templer und Jüdin.' The new building was erected by George V., of Hanover, and has numbered not a few distinguished artists amongst its members. Thus, Dr. Joachim was for a number of years the leading violinist in the orchestra, Albert Niemann was its principal tenor, and for two years, from 1877, Hans von Bülow occupied the post of musical director of the institution.

Kissingen.—Much favourable notice was attracted by a concert of Russian music, given by the St. Petersburg musician, Nicolai von Kasanli, with the co-operation of the Munich Kaim Orchestra. The most important numbers of the programme were a new symphony (Op. 12) by Liapounow, and the tone-picture 'Sadko,' by Rimsky-Korsakow.

Leipzig.—The old 'Thomas-Schule,' the historical building inhabited up to about the year 1750 by the cantors of St. Thomas, including Sebastian Bach, is about to be demolished, unless the municipal authorities should be prevailed upon at the eleventh hour to preserve so interesting a relic of the past.

Milan.—The nearly completed score of an opera in four acts, 'I Mori di Valenza,' has been discovered amongst the posthumous papers of Almicare Ponchielli, the composer of 'Gioconda.' The libretto, from the pen of Ghislanzoni, deals with the expulsion of the Moors from Spain in 1530, and its musical setting dates some twenty-four years back. The work is to be shortly produced at Cremona.

Munich.—Some interesting performances of compositions by Italian masters were given last month by the members of the 'Roman Vocal Quintet for Sacred Music.' The selection included portions of a Requiem by Pio di Pietro, the conductor of the Quintet, and musical director of the Pantheon, of Rome.——There is every probability of Wagner's early opera, 'Das Liebesverbot,' which has never been produced on any stage, being shortly mounted by the directors of the Royal Theatre. The libretto of the work, it may be remembered, is founded upon Shakespeare's comedy 'Measure for Measure'; it was set to music by the poet-composer during his Capellmeistership at the Magdeburg Theatre.

Paris.—The entire collection of autograph scores of Hérold—operas, cantatas, chamber music, &c.—has been presented by the grandson of the composer of 'Zampa' to the National Library. It includes an interesting early work, 'La gioventú di Enrico Quinto,' produced in 1813, at Naples.——M. Camille Saint-Saëns has nearly completed the score of incidental music to Racine's 'Andromaque,' which is to form a companion to Massenet's music to 'Phèdre,' and like it will be included in Madame Sarah Bernhardt's repertory.

Pesaro.—In consequence of long-standing differences between Signor Mascagni and the administrative council of the Liceo Rossini, the former has ceased to be director of that institution. The maestro has been offered the sum of £2,000 for conducting a series of concerts in the United States.

Prague.—Schumann's rarely heard and only opera 'Genoveva' was produced at the German Theatre last month. The performance, under Herr Blech's direction, was a very satisfactory one, and was followed with much interest by a numerous audience.

Rome.—The maestro Domenico Mustáfa, director of the music at the Sistine Chapel, has resigned his post, owing to advanced age. He will be succeeded by Don Lorenzo Perosi, the young composer of oratorios who so quickly obtained fame in Italy and elsewhere, and who has for some time acted as Mustáfa's deputy.

Siena.—The first performance took place last month of Perosi's oratorio, 'La Risurrezzione di Cristo,' under the composer's direction. The work was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

Skalitz (Bohemia).—Fräulein Magda Dvorák, the talented daughter of the distinguished composer, gave a song recital last month, accompanied on the pianoforte by her brother-in-law, Joseph Suk, with considerable success.

Soden.—A tablet was recently affixed to one of the houses here, bearing the following inscription:—'In this house Richard Wagner spent the first night on German soil after his exile of eleven years: August 12-13, 1860.'

Trient.—The new three-act opera, with a prologue, 'La Contessa d'Egmont,' by Raffaele Lazzari, met with complete success on its first performance recently, at the Municipal Theatre. The libretto is founded upon Jules Janin's fascinating story.

Trouville.—A most successful performance devoted entirely to compositions by Mr. Louis Hillier, and with the co-operation of Mdlle. Gillard, of the Paris Opéra Comique, took place recently at the neighbouring seaside resort of Cabourg. In the second part, the charming ballet-légende, 'Fatalidad,' was produced with admirable effect. Mr. Hillier, who conducted, was loudly applauded and repeatedly 'called' at the conclusion of the performance.

Weimar.—The new 'Jahrbuch' of the German Shakespeare Society contains an interesting and most painstaking article from the pen of Dr. Max Friedlaender, entitled 'Shakespeare's Works in Music.' Amongst other curious facts, it appears that there are more operas founded upon Shakespeare's plays than upon those of all other poets put together.

Würzburg.—The musically gifted Prince Ludwig Ferdinand of Bavaria, who during the recent Wagner performances at the Prince Regent Theatre assisted amongst the first violins in the orchestra, is engaged upon writing an opera, 'Ullranida,' to which a drama by the Queen of Roumania, 'Carmen Sylva,' has suggested the libretto.

Correspondence.

WORDS, WORDS, WORDS.

Dear Sir.—With reference to the letter of 'Plain Spoken' in your September number, re pronunciation of words in singing, no doubt the failure of vocal composers to preserve the identical accent of words and music has something to do with obscuring the intelligibility of the words sung. By this treatment a divorce is effected of that union expressed by the poet as 'Music married to immortal verse.' Again, some singers articulate badly from carelessness, bad tuition, or insufficient appreciation of the part the words play in a song. But many, I think, are unintelligible owing to want of criticism. We all labour under the disadvantage of not being able to 'hear ourselves as others hear us.' A singer needs careful criticism, as to his words, from outside. Many think their words are quite distinct, but they deceive themselves. I had an amusing illustration of this recently. I was in conversation with a gentleman who said that he thought nothing of a song if he could not tell what the singer said. Shortly afterwards this same gentleman himself sang a song, of which I could hear scarcely a single word! No doubt he thought every word was intelligible. The candid critic should be employed in this and similar cases.

Dudley Hill,
Bradford,
Sept. 3, 1902.

Yours faithfully,
William Croft.

Brief Summary of Country and Colonial News.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

Brecon.—The Baroness Cederström (Madame Adelina Patti) generously gave a brilliant and successful concert on the 3rd ult., at the Market Hall, in aid of the Infirmary. Madame Patti, Mr. Trevor Evans (who received a well-merited encore for one of his songs), and Mr. Santley, the trio of vocalists, were in splendid voice, while Miss Marianne Eissler, Miss Clara Eissler, and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz were at their best on their respective instruments.

Glasgow.—The sixth annual Diocesan Festival took place on the 13th ult. in St. Mary's Church. The service was originally intended to be held as an act of thanksgiving in connection with the Coronation on June 28. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to music by Bruce Steane, the anthem was Barnby's 'All Thy works praise Thee,' and the Te Deum was the setting in G by John E. West. Twenty-two choirs, numbering about 450 voices, took part. Mr. F. Pugh was at the organ, and Mr. W. G. Martin, organist of St. Mary's, conducted.

Toronto.—At the closing concert of the fourteenth season of the Toronto College of Music, directed by Dr. F. H. Torrington, the programme included Chopin's Spianata and Polonaise in E flat, Weber's Concertstück, Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, Liszt's Concerto in E flat, and the first movement of the Concerto by Moscheles, all for pianoforte and orchestra, besides a number of vocal solos. The concert, which was largely attended, gave undoubted evidence of the efficiency of the College training.

A choral competition and musical festival was inaugurated at Nottingham on the 20th ult. The scheme is to be an annual event. A silver challenge shield has been given to the Committee by Mr. Jesse Boot. The entries on the present occasion showed that there is plenty of life and musical ability in the district to support this educational movement. Mr. Woolley's Choral Society gained the shield. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. The Committee sustained a severe loss in the death, in August, of their chairman and the chief promoter of the Festival, Mr. William Riley, who, as conductor of the Nottingham Temperance Choir, had achieved many striking successes in Crystal Palace and provincial competitions. Mr. Riley was choirmaster of the Nottingham Tabernacle for many years. He will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends.

The Brixton Oratorio Choir (conductor, Mr. Douglas Redman) proposes to continue its successful oratorio services, some of which will be accompanied by full professional orchestra, at Brixton Parish Church during the coming winter. The following works are announced to be performed: 'Creation,' 'Zion' (Gade), 'Song of Victory' (Hiller), 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'God, Thou art Great,' 'Daughter of Jairus,' 'Song of Miriam' 'Stabat Mater' (Rossini), and Gounod's 'Out of Darkness,' 'Messe Solenelle,' and 'Redemption' (selection). Full information concerning this excellent organization may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Ivybank, Thetford Road, New Malden, Surrey.

The formation of an Amateur Chamber Music Society, for the practice and public performance of the many works written for combinations of wind instruments or strings and wind, is under consideration. It is expected that Mr. George A. Clinton, whose wide experience in this class of music makes him peculiarly fitted for the post, will act as musical director, and his extensive library of music will be at the disposal of the Society. Further particulars may be obtained from Mr. T. R. Croger, 114, Wood Street, E.C.

Mr. Allen Gill has been appointed conductor of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra.

Answers to Correspondents.

A Subscriber (Ohio).—Your difficulty in regard to the 'Course of Harmony' by Bridge and Sawyer—re the chant containing chromatic sevenths on p. 81 of that book—will probably be met by the following explanation, kindly furnished by one of the authors:—'The authority for the resolution of the dominant seventh on the tonic seventh is found on the last two lines of p. 81—"some of these resolutions peculiar to chromatic sevenths are sometimes applied to the dominant seventh." Hence the third chord of the chant, a dominant seventh on A, is resolved as if it were a supertonic seventh on A in the key of G. As to the definition of Fundamental Discords, at the bottom of p. 58 (note) of the above book: "Fundamental discords are those derived from roots, in distinction to discords by suspension, which arise through the delaying of a note."' Compare the sevenths in par. 105 with those in par. 122.'

H. B.—(1) In regard to the key of the Prelude (or Toccata) and Fugue in C, by J. L. Bach, in vol. viii. of the Bridge and Higgs edition, there are more copies in C than E, but notwithstanding this, Dr. Rust, editor of the German Bach Society, came to the conclusion that E was the authentic key. Although Spitta is in favour of C, it is possible that one of the organs played upon by Bach was a third higher than the normal pitch; in that case he would play the composition in the key of C. In the latter key it sounds dull when performed on present-day instruments. (2) Chopin's Op. 65 is the Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello in G minor.

W. H. B.—For biographical information concerning Sir Arthur Sullivan, see the 'Life,' by Arthur Lawrence (James Bowden), 'Souvenir of Sir Arthur Sullivan' (George Newnes), Willeby's 'Masters of English Music,' Fitzgerald's 'Savoy Opera and the Savoyards,' in addition to the article on the composer in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' You may also gain some information from the articles which appeared on Sullivan in The Musical Times shortly after his death—viz., in our issues of December, 1900; January, February, March and April, 1901.

W. W. H.—Handel's 'Occasional' Oratorio was composed in 1745 or 1746, and was performed at Covent Garden Theatre on February 14, 19, and 26 of the latter year. The choruses are written for the usual voices, and some of the material is used by Handel in other works, by no means an uncommon practice of the composer. The 'Occasional' Oratorio does not form one of Messrs. Novello's octavo edition, but they publish some of the songs separately. The fine overture to the oratorio is one of Handel's most characteristic and inspiring instrumental compositions.

Llwyd.—No, it is not lawful to print or arrange music that is copyright without having previously obtained the permission of the owner of the copyright. The fact that a composer has been dead ten years does not of necessity imply that the music composed by him is non-copyright. Consult the article 'Copyright,' in Stainer and Barrett's 'Dictionary of Musical Terms.' For permission to print, in any form, copyright tunes in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern, application should be made to the Chairman of the Committee, addressed to the publishers of the book.

C. R. B.—There is no reason why you should not take up the violoncello, the more especially if, considering your age, you are content with becoming an executant of moderate attainments. The sum of three guineas is certainly not exorbitant for 'a fair 'cello.' You would do well to enlist the services of a teacher. In the meantime you might with advantage study Jules de Swert's violoncello primer. The double-bass would, of course, be more useful in orchestral work than as a solo instrument played at the domestic hearth.

Scherzo.—As to 'the usual price to pay a poet' for copyright lyrics to set to music, the basis of remuneration would probably depend upon the reputation of the poet. Permission to use poems is often granted to composers for a consideration.

A. H. A.—The following recitations with music come under your definition 'good': 'Recitation Music' by Stanley Hawley, including many popular pieces, e.g., 'The Bells,' 'Story of a Faithful Soul,' 'The Raven,' 'The Legend Beautiful,' published by Messrs. Bosworth and Co. A new series, by the same author, published by Messrs. Boosey and Co. Six recitations, with music, by Sir A. C. Mackenzie, issued by Mr. J. Williams: Bergliot, music by Grieg; and three recitations, with music by Schumann.

J. D.—We regret we are unable to draw up a specification for the manufacture of 'a cheap, rough, dummy keyboard of seven octaves.' One would fain be spared a musicless machine of a cheap and rough type, unless an instrument of torture is desired. Why not try the Virgil Clavier?

Basso.—Sing your upper notes softly and in one breath, to the sounds oo-oh-ah, taking long breaths, and keeping the notes quite steady. Your suggestion, for which we are obliged, necessitates our putting a question to you: 'What are the best methods for teaching singing—on paper?' It can't be done; but we will certainly bear in mind your request for an article in the nature of some practical hints, in order, as you say, 'to give singers a chance.' We are by no means unmindful of their interests.

P.—(1) You are not too old to learn the viola, though you would stand a better chance of becoming a more efficient executant if you had thought of commencing its study earlier. The advantages in being able to play the instrument are very great, both in the orchestra and quartet ensemble. See the recently-issued Primer of the viola by Berthold Tours, and put yourself under a good teacher. (2) Yes, he has a very good reputation.

Bassoon.—You would be very foolish to put your bassoon into cold water and soak it for a week, and soaking in oil would not do either, for you would have fearful trouble with the pads sticking. The instrument evidently requires re-padding. Send it to Messrs. Rudall Carte & Co., or some equally reliable manufacturers.

A. B.—(1) Riemann's 'Dictionary of Music,' English Translation by Mr. J. S. Shedlock (Augener), will doubtless answer your purpose. (2) Professor Prout's 'Harmony' (Augener) is furnished with a key to the exercises. (3) The intervals you give are doubly-diminished fifths.

Constant Subscriber.—For duets (contralto and bass) 'not too classical,' try the following:—'Spring of Love' (Sieber); 'Gardener, thy tree am I' (Schumann); 'It was a lover and his lass,' in D (Walthew); 'Sous les Étoiles,' in C (Goring Thomas); and, 'When the wind blows in from the sea' (Henry Smart).

L. R.—The Wagner literature is enormous. The best life of the composer, however, is that by Glasenapp, of which two volumes in the English language (translation by W. Ashton Ellis) have been published by Messrs. Kegan Paul and Co.

An Old Reader.—The violin concertos by Dubois, Damrosch (in D minor), Lassen, and Jacques-Dalcroze are all published with violin accompaniment; prices from 6s. to 10s. net.

H. V. M.—We are sorry to be unable to give the names of teachers. Why not write to the secretary of the Conservatoire in the city you mention?

B. M. C.—The Degree of Bachelor of Music can be obtained at all English Universities, and at those of Edinburgh and Dublin.

L'investigateur.—We regret that we cannot express an opinion as to the relative standards of the examinations you mention: both Institutions are deserving of your confidence.

C. D.—Grieg's Bergliot music has been performed in England on many occasions.

Brighton.—We are making inquiries and will let you know.

A correspondent writes:—'I have been told that the setting of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's Recessional, sung at Pretoria on June 8, is by a composer named De Koven.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)
(Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral.)

"Elijah."—"Mr. J. Coleman achieved brilliant successes in the powerful dramatic air, 'Is not his word like a fire,' and his treatment of the pathetic passages in the air, 'It is enough,' was extremely sympathetic and affecting."—Tamworth Herald, April 19, 1902.

"Bride of Dunkerron."—"Mr. Coleman was the favourite of the evening. The spirit, delicacy and feeling with which he sang, contributed largely to the successful giving of the work."—Hednesford Advertiser, April 26, 1902.

West Bromwich.—"Mr. J. Coleman gave a fine rendering of 'The young Royalist,' and was re-called; but in his second effort, 'Till Death' (Mascheroni) with violin obbligato by Mr. W. H. Henley, he excelled himself. This, indeed, from an artistic point of view, was the song of the evening, and the audience appreciated it to the full, an encore being insisted upon."—Chronicle, December, 1901.

Address, The Cathedral, Lichfield.

THE SWANTON £50 CHALLENGE IS STILL UNACCEPTED.

See current No. Musical Opinion.

The superiority of the Swanton Organ-Blowing Engines and Apparatus is not disputed even by my Competitors.

My £50 Challenge has now been open for over twelve months, but no firm has the courage to pick up the glove.

The obvious inference is that a contest on impartial lines is not desired by other makers.

A DAINTY BROCHURE IS YOURS FOR THE ASKING.

New Christmas Music, &c.,

COMPOSED BY

CALEB SIMPER.

RIGHTEOUSNESS AND PEACE. Price 4d.

A new, fascinating Christmas Anthem. It contains a variety of most interesting movements, and is intensely expressive and very effective.

SIX NEW CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Each 1d.

Nos. 61 to 66 of Carol Series. All most attractive and taking.

No. 6. KILBIRNIE SERIES. Contains a New Benedicite, Two sets of Chants for Te Deum, with Chants for other Canticles, and a new Kyrie. Complete, price 2d.

Every Choirmaster should see these New Compositions; ready about October 10.

The Composer, "Kilbirnie," Barnstaple, will send free specimens of all the above for a few weeks.

THE NATIVITY OF CHRIST.

5th 1,000.

A Christmas Cantata, which the average Church Choir can render without outside help. Price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

The Rev. Canon —— writes:—"I like your 'Nativity' very much Please send 40 O.N. and 20 Sol-fa copies."

A Curate writes:—"'The Nativity' is splendid, and a great success. Please send 19 more copies for another Choir in the Parish."

An Organist writes:—"Our Choir are delighted with your Christmas Cantata. Kindly forward 30 copies."

Another Organist writes:—"Kindly let me have 3 dozen copies each of 'The Nativity of Christ' and 'The Rolling Seasons,' with Orchestral parts to the latter."

THE ROLLING SEASONS.

14th 1,000.

A favourite Sacred Cantata. Price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Time, about 35 minutes.

An Organist writes:—"We have rendered your 'Rolling Seasons' five times to crowded congregations, who were delighted with the music and loud in their praises. I have used many Cantatas, and can truly say it is 'one of the best.'"

A Rector writes:—"Our first performance of the 'Rolling Seasons' was so popular that we are obliged to have it again; but this time as a 'Service,' and not as a Sacred Concert. We shall probably give it at three neighbouring places."

VERY POPULAR VOLUNTARY BOOKS.

Written on Two Staves, for Organ, Harmonium, or American Organ.

Book 1. 13th Edit. ... net 1s. 6d. | Book 3. 7th Edit. ... net 1s. 6d.
Book 2. 9th Edit. ... ,, 1s. 6d. | Book 4. 6th Edit. ... ,, 1s. 6d.
Book 5. New. 4th Edit. nearly exhausted already.

A Cathedral Organist who has purchased copies writes: "I must congratulate you. They are wonderfully melodious, and so different from the 'machine-made' stuff that is so often issued as substitutes for Voluntaries. I shall recommend them to my pupils."

Another Organist who has bought the four Books writes: "The Voluntary Books are splendid, and I am highly delighted with them. Each piece in Book 4 is worth the money for the whole Book, and I sincerely hope I may soon have the pleasure of purchasing another set."

Hundreds of similar expressions of satisfaction and delight have been received.

THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD.

New Anthem. Price 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.

One of the most beautiful Anthems of the Series, and wonderfully popular. The 13th 1,000 already issued.

HYMN TUNES

COMPOSED BY THE LATE

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

SOME HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The fifty-six tunes, with the twelve arrangements, in this volume have been gathered from various sources, and so far as can be ascertained, the collection is complete.

For eleven years (1861-1872) in the early part of his career, Arthur Sullivan held the organistships of two London churches—St. Michael's, Chester Square, Pimlico, and St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, Kensington. To this practical experience of a congregation's needs and capabilities, his success as a hymn-tune composer is in a large measure due. "One of the brightest and last-risen stars of our English musical hemisphere," wrote John Hullah of him. . . . These words, charged with the sincerity of honest conviction, if somewhat prophetic at the moment they were written, have been indelibly endorsed by the hand of Time.

HYMN TUNES AND LITANIES

(276)

COMPOSED BY THE LATE

REV. J. B. DYKES, Mus. Doc.

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

MANY HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

The Rev. J. B. Dykes was well known to most people as a writer of beautiful hymn-tunes, but it will come as a surprise to some to find that he had written such a large number as this volume contains.

On looking through the book one is struck by the many tunes that are known and loved by all religious-minded persons—tunes so successfully wedded to the words, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get on without them. . . . They are "on the lips of thousands," and are associated with the most solemn moments of life. But because Dr. Dykes was happy in expressing emotions in a way that was intelligible to the masses, we must not overlook the real difficulty and merit of discovering a musical way to the hearts of men—for not every great composer has been successful with hymn-tunes.

The world is richer for Dr. Dykes's music, and his memory deserves to be loved and honoured by all those who, like himself, strive to follow in the footsteps of the Divine Master.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal Symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

MENDELSSOHN'S ORATORIO
"ELIJAH"
BY
F. G. EDWARDS.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.
And a number of Portraits, including a hitherto unpublished one of the COMPOSER.

"Another work of distinct value to musical historians. . . . The temptation to gossip over the incidents of the first performance has been quite successfully resisted, and the author lets Mendelssohn's own letters tell the story for the most part. . . . There are several portraits of those who took part in the original performance, and one most interesting portrait of Mendelssohn from a drawing in the possession of Mrs. Victor Benecke. The work of compiling the necessary information has been excellently done, and the publication comes as a fitting celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the production of the work."—The Times, April 16, 1896.

"Mr. Edwards's book contains, of course, much that is familiar to students of Mendelssohn, and even to the casual readers of musical biography, but the author is able to set forth no little which fairly claims attention as new. There are, for example, various letters from the composer not heretofore made public, and full of interest for those to whom the details of a great work are attractive."—Daily Telegraph, April 15, 1896.

A MANUAL OF PLAINSONG

FOR DIVINE SERVICE

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES NOTED

THE PSALTER NOTED

To Gregorian Tones

TOGETHER WITH THE LITANY AND RESPONSES

A NEW EDITION

PREPARED BY

H. B. BRIGGS and W. H. FRERE

UNDER THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE OF

JOHN STAINER

(Late President of the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society).

PREFACE.

The first edition of The Psalter Noted was published in 1849 under the supervision of the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, and secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship. Subsequently Mr. Helmore's scheme was enlarged by the issue of The Canticles Noted, of A Brief Directory, and of three Appendixes to the Psalter; and the whole collection was issued in one volume under the title of A Manual of Plainsong. The Manual had also two companion books, one of Words only, containing The Canticles and Psalter Accented, the other a collection of Accompanying Harmonies. Thus complete provision was made for the musical performance of the regular services of the Prayer Book. Practical objections, however, to the monotony of the recitation of several Psalms to one Tone without the relief of Antiphons, added to certain difficulties in the pointing, led to the issue of other Psalters which have competed with The Psalter Noted, but without obtaining, any of them, a marked supremacy; and nothing has been issued which covers the whole field so completely as Mr. Helmore's Manual.

Study of the art of Plainsong during the last half century has, however, undergone something like a revolution; on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing. In consequence of repeated demands for a new edition of the Manual, the work of revision was entrusted to the late Sir John Stainer. He readily undertook the task, and called into collaboration Mr. H. B. Briggs and the Rev. W. H. Frere, with the result that before his death he had passed for the press the greater part of the revised proofs prepared by them for the new edition. He had also devoted much time to the consideration, with Mr. Shebbeare, of the Organ Accompaniments, so that the complete work may be considered as his last contribution to the music of the English Church.

His was not the only loss that this book had to undergo in the course of revision, for on the eve of its completion, Mr. Briggs was suddenly called to his rest. So the foregoing words which he had written about Sir John Stainer have now become his own epitaph. Without competing with Sir John Stainer in the wider domain of Church Music he had, in the narrower department of Plainsong, an influence and a competence which were unrivalled; and whatever merits this book may have are due almost entirely to him.

The Manual thus appears in a New Edition, revised in accordance with modern standards of taste and science; it does not cover quite so large a field as formerly, for it contains no music for the Holy Communion; but it has the same counterparts as before in the shape of The Canticles and Psalter Accented, and The Accompanying Harmonies prepared by Mr. Shebbeare, which include accompaniments for the Responses, Te Deum and Litany, as well as for the Tones.

THE VILLAGE TUNE BOOK

CONTAINING

ONE HUNDRED POPULAR HYMN TUNES.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The one hundred hymn-tunes forming this collection have been selected from various sources, old and new. As the earliest can be traced to the year 1551, and the most recent was composed in 1901, they cover a period of three-and-a-half centuries.

In selecting these tunes, care has been taken to provide for all the metres in general use, and the index of first lines may be found useful as a guide to the selection of suitable tunes for particular hymns.

Clergymen and Organists of most Village Churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overladen volumes; therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.

CHORAL ODE

Written by HENRY BRANCH.

This Ode may be commended with confidence to the attention of Choral Societies. It supplies exactly what is so often required, viz.—an interesting and musicianly short work to make up a programme with a cantata only occupying a part of the evening. The poem by Mr. Branch is a picturesque presentation of its subject, and Mr. Challinor has found in it inspiration for what is undoubtedly one of his finest works.

TWELFTH THOUSAND.

ESPECIALLY SUITABLE FOR THE SEASON OF ADVENT.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

(Op. 42.)

COMPOSER OF "THE HOLY CITY," "RUTH," "PASSION SERVICE," "JOAN OF ARC," &c.

"Philharmonic and St. Paul's Choral Union.—Two of Mr. Alfred R. Gaul's Cantatas, 'Joan of Arc' and 'The Holy City,' have been previously performed in Leamington. The verdict on 'The Ten Virgins' must be that it quite fulfils the rich promise of these former musical essays. There are the same excellent orchestral writing, the same melodious solo numbers, the same massive choral effects; and in some respects there is a noticeable advance on the previous works—a still greater unity of design, the finer touch of the true artist-musician. The libretto of 'The Ten Virgins' has been compiled with admirable taste from the Scripture narrative of the parable, and from other portions of the sacred writings. To these there are some happily selected additions, of which the most noticeable are Miss Winkworth's translation of the German chorale 'Sleepers, Awake,' and Lord Tennyson's 'Too Late,' one of the pearls of song that stud the jewelled verses of 'The Idylls of the King.' The composer has made use of the chorale in the happiest manner imaginable, while the chorus from Lord Tennyson has received a musical setting which it is the highest compliment to say is in every way worthy of the poetry. There is a pleasant absence of musical pyrotechnics and tricky effects in 'The Ten Virgins,' and a welcome return to the first musical principles which gave us the great compositions which are always likely to stand unrivalled before the world. The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata. . . . The soprano air 'Sun of my soul,' one of the gems. . . . The soprano air 'Wisdom crieth in the streets,' a truly beautiful composition. . . . The contralto air 'God willeth not the death of a sinner,' a strikingly dramatic air. . . . The tenor air 'Thy kingdom come,' one of the 'purple patches' of the work. . . . The quartets contain not a little very charming music."—Leamington Chronicle.

"A new work from the pen of the composer of 'The Holy City' and 'Joan of Arc' will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."—Newcastle Journal.

"Mr. Gaul is to the fore with a new Sacred Cantata, and Choral Societies are pleasantly concerned thereat, for they admire the Midland composer because he gives them good music without putting too great a strain upon executive means. The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly soon be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers. . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner. . . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A very large audience assembled in the Town Hall (Newcastle-on-Tyne) on Monday night. . . . The first part of the programme was devoted to Gaul's new Cantata 'The Ten Virgins.' The opinions expressed on the occasion of its production at South Shields we still maintain, further acquaintance only serving to confirm them. The Cantata is replete with charming music of that school which every one can appreciate, and which found so distinguished a master in Mendelssohn. If composers would have their works popular with choral societies, it is only reasonable to expect that they will bestow a fair share of their attention upon the choruses. The old masters knew this, and there is no doubt that the fact has much to do with the long-continued popularity of their works; and there is equally little doubt, we think, that the principal cause of the failure of so many works produced now-a-days is the uninteresting nature of the choruses. Compare the choruses of the three most popular works ever produced—'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' and 'Elijah'—with a large number of modern works, and our meaning will be clear. If we mistake not, such thoughts as these passed through Mr. Gaul's mind when he set himself to compose those works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins'—and that the public endorse his views is proved by the enormous sale which these works have had."—Newcastle Daily Journal, Dec. 17, 1890.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' . . . Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader, Dec. 16, 1890.

"Bow and Bromley Institute Choir.—On the 22nd ult. this Society came forward with the first performance in London of Mr. Gaul's new Cantata 'The Ten Virgins.' The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's 'Holy City' may be predicted for 'The Ten Virgins.' That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—Musical Times, Dec. 1, 1890.

"Not only full of good music, but displays individuality of style. Mr. Gaul's powers of melodic invention still flow on, and his treatment of the voices is as noteworthy as ever for neatness of workmanship and knowledge of effect. . . . a distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The above Cantata has been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral, including three numbers for Sopranos and Contraltos (The Virgins). In the matter of the Orchestral parts, the following plan has been adopted—i.e., when the Strings are tacet, instead of employing rests, anything that is written for other instruments will appear in small notes in the String parts, and a similar plan has been adopted with regard to the reed instruments—i.e., any Clarinet or Oboe Solo will be expressed in small notes in the Flute part. This arrangement, it is hoped, will make it possible to give a fair rendering of the work with a limited orchestra.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; Cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each, 1s.
Words only, 5s. per 100.

The gratuitous loan of instrumental parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform this Cantata and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.

THE TEMPLE

AN ORATORIO

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE BIBLE

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS, ORCHESTRA & ORGAN

BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

(Op. 14.)

Price Four Shillings. Paper boards 5s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

THE TIMES.

The concluding number, "King of Kings!" in which the three solo voices take part with a double choir, is really magnificent in breadth and invention, and most impressive all through. Very few things in oratorio are finer than the point at which the climax, "The Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands," given out with all imaginable pomp and force, is followed by the group of soloists in the words, "Brethren, know ye not that ye are the temple of God?"; and so the work is brought to a close in perfect keeping with the truly devotional character of what has gone before. The workmanship, as might be expected from the highly-gifted composer, shows a thorough knowledge of all resources, vocal and instrumental, and, as has been said, there are passages of great and remarkable beauty.

STANDARD.

"The Temple" is a full-sized oratorio, laid out on established lines, and chiefly remarkable for the solidity of its choruses and the reverential treatment of the text. . . The work opens with a choral overture, which may be said to declare the purpose of the composer. The music is instinct with reverential and devotional feeling. . . . the most important section is "Solomon's Prayer," which is laid out on an elaborate design. Dramatic perception is shown by the interjections of the people, and the climaxes are firmly worked up. On the finale the composer has manifestly lavished much thought and care. . . The effects are imposing, and the setting of the concluding words, "Brethren, know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" are allied to music that testifies to the composer's sincerity and intellectuality, and to his ability to give significant expression to the mysteries of life.

MORNING POST.

Of skilful writing many a page of his oratorio gives evidence, but in this closing movement there is not only skill but a nobility and fervour which savour of inspiration.

DAILY NEWS.

The section devoted to King Solomon, starts in great simplicity, with the brief narrative of how Solomon built the House of God in Jerusalem, is followed by a processional and almost martial chorus, "Arise, O Lord, into Thy resting place," words traditionally associated with the circumvention of the Ark. This comprises some of the best music in the oratorio, and the measure of excellence is fully sustained in the Psalm of Praise for double chorus, with the burthen, "For His mercy endureth for ever," a number in which both the great and the semi-chorus are employed, often with very happy effect. The most elaborate and, in its way, perhaps the most successful number of this section is, however, the setting of the noble prayer of King Solomon at the dedication of the temple. . . . The work certainly made a deep impression.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The work, which is throughout solid and substantial, begins with "a choral overture" . . . This opening is unquestionably striking, and duly prepares the mind for what is to follow. . . . The Narrator's announcement of David's death and the accession of Solomon is succeeded by an orchestral piece described as "a solemn interlude," a species of funeral march replete with dignity and feeling. . . . Processional strains naturally mark the arrival of the priests with the ark, and the subsequent two choruses, "We will go into the tabernacle of the Lord," and the still more exultant "O give thanks unto the Lord," the latter being an eight-part number, the vigour of which, alike in the vocal and instrumental elements, is maintained to the final bar. . . . The finale starts with an inspiriting burst in unison, "King of kings! Lord of lords!" for full chorus, and much scholarly as well as interesting writing follows.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The form, however, is throughout full of interest in its general lines, and affords some evidence of originality in its novel application and combination of the constructive lines associated with sonata variation, fugue, and the like. Neither has the composer disregarded modern ideas of allowing the text to suggest the music, for he has many themes associated with particular personalities or sentiments, and in no case can it be said that the words are forced unnaturally into the procrustean bed of an absolute form that does not suit them.

OBSERVER.

Dr. Davies has always evinced a lively reverence for the classics, which has imparted to his works a solidity and importance otherwise rarely obtainable by young writers. . . . certain passages are very beautiful, others most imposing, and in all the important numbers there is manifested a loftiness of aim, an earnestness of spirit, and an intense religious reverence that exact respect and esteem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The music is permeated by such earnestness of purpose, spiritual reverence, and command of the resources at the disposal of the composer of to-day, that the work excites great esteem for the writer, and points to abilities of a high order. Some of the music is very beautiful in its calm repose and broad dignity, and several passages in the choruses are commandingly grand. At such times it is borne on the listener that Mr. Walford Davies is a composer who should accomplish great things for his art.

REFEREE.

The lofty conception and intense reverence of the music are apparent on every page, and the work greatly increases esteem for the gifted and earnest young organist of the Temple

CHURCH TIMES.

As the work is altogether too long to individualize each movement, only those numbers can be touched upon that seem to demand notice. One of these is No. 12, "O give thanks unto the Lord," a grand and difficult double chorus, with a remarkably chromatic independent accompaniment. Another is the very lengthy finale, "Kings of kings! Lord of lords!" much of which is in seven and eight parts, and the accompaniment thereto is very exacting. It would seem that in these two numbers chromaticism is carried to its utmost limits. The composer has shown that he possesses unusual abilities.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

By far the larger portion of the oratorio is made up of choruses, of a full and an elaborate character, written with much strength and highly imposing and effective.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

Dr. Walford Davies has shown in his work erudite musicianship, a mastery of form and melodic inspiration.

YORKSHIRE POST.

This is a highly interesting work, in spirit a direct descendant of the church oratorio as perfected by Bach in the great Passion Music; in form showing the influence of a later period, when Haydn and his immediate successors developed the modern "Sonata." . . . This is the most extended work Dr. Davies has yet attempted, and it would be premature to attempt to appraise it. Its perusal, however, convinces one not only of its learning, which is considerable, but also of exceptional thoughtfulness and independence of view. Its merits are not superficial, but those who are able to judge not merely from a single hearing, but with the advantage of some preliminary study of the music, cannot fail to do justice to the qualities which we are convinced it possesses.

THE SONG OF DEBORAH AND BARAK

A SHORT ORATORIO

FOR SOPRANO AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.
He writes boldly, his rhythms, harmonies, and progressions are not borrowed from any outside source, but are all his own. So are the qualities that make his music very difficult, or give to it a certain weirdness that compels attention.

STANDARD.
The soprano solo, "I, even I, will sing unto the Lord," is a well-balanced and spirited number, and several of the choral passages show dramatic perception and command of orchestral resource to suggest and emphasise the inner meaning of the words.

DAILY CHRONICLE.
Mr. Blair's latest composition is thoroughly straightforward in character; not a page of the score is open to misconstruction, and both vocally and instrumentally it is within the means of most amateur societies in the habit of performing cantatas. A great recommendation is the spirit—not to say liveliness—of the composition. . . . Undoubtedly the work possesses the elements of popularity.

OBSERVER.
There is much in Mr. Blair's music that excites esteem. It is melodious, reflects the fierce spirit that animates the text, and is well written. The solos are effective, particularly that for the soprano, "I, even I, will sing unto the Lord," the opening phrase of which may be said to be the motto of the work.

O PRAISE THE LORD

(A DEDICATION ODE)

FOR ORCHESTRA AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE PSALMS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price One Shilling.

THE TIMES.
It is marked by excellent workmanship, and is a vigorous and devotional composition of earnest aims and sterling merit.

MORNING POST.
It opens with a bright, dignified chorus, which is followed by an expressive andante chorus, "O how amiable are Thy dwellings"; the final movement, "Arise, O Lord, into Thy rest," showing some scholarly writing, and, moreover, being of bold, decisive character.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.
Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's anthem, "O Praise the Lord," was excellently performed, and is a good stout piece of work.

CHURCH TIMES.
It is most suitable for church use, and is written somewhat in the worthy style of Henry Purcell. . . . This piece would serve as an excellent afternoon anthem for Cathedral use.

DAILY CHRONICLE.
At once it may be pronounced an excellent example of Mr. Brewer's long recognised skill in the expression of devotional feeling in an interesting instead of "dry-as-dust" manner. . . . There are several passages in this smooth composition that will be grateful both to executants and to listeners.

DAILY GRAPHIC.
A brief "Dedication Ode," by Mr. Brewer, the Gloucester organist. "O Praise the Lord," is not only a musical, but a thoroughly practical piece of work, vocal and effective, and being for chorus and orchestra, without any solo parts, well suited for church use.

Stafford.—Choral Union, "Judas Maccabæus," March 31, 1903.

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY,
October 14, 1902.
FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.
Extract from The Irish News and Belfast Morning News, October 15, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters sang 'Walther's Preislied' from Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger' with orchestral accompaniment, and his rendering of the song was in every respect worthy of his reputation. Possessed of a remarkably clear tenor voice, which reveals in every note long and careful training on the part of its fortunate possessor, he could not have failed to evoke the enthusiasm of an audience, no matter how critical it might be. . . . The second part of the concert was brought to a close by the Recit. and Air 'Lend me your aid' (Gounod), in which Mr. Samual Masters repeated his initial triumph of the evening. . . . In a selection from Longfellow's 'Hiawatha,' 'Onaway, awake, beloved' (Coleridge-Taylor), which followed, Mr. Masters was heard to even better advantage than in either of his previous songs."

Extract from The Northern Wig, October 15, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters won favour at once with his fine, pure, bright tone, his declamatory powers and vigorous style. He gave first 'Preislied,' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and showed a mastery and power over Wagner's trying vocal music that was admirable. . . . . 'Lend me your aid' suited the artist's voice and style to perfection, and he gave a capital rendering of it. . . . . At the close of the second part Mr. Masters sang 'Onaway, awake, beloved' with great expression."

Extract from The News Letter, October 15, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters, a tenor with fine conception of composition and excellent range, made his first appearance before a Belfast audience in Wagner's 'Preislied,' from 'Die Meistersinger,' and there could be no manner of doubt as to his ability. The clear, bell-like tone was well brought out, and although he made a much better impression in 'Lend me your aid,' which was sung in excellent style, he did himself full justice in the song 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' from Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.'"

MOSSLEY VOCAL SOCIETY.

Extract from The Mossley and Saddleworth Herald, October 11, 1902.

"Mr. Samuel Masters possesses a fine tenor voice, which has evidently been well trained, and he knows how to use it. For his first song he gave S. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Onaway, awake, beloved' ('Hiawatha'), in the rendering of which he gave abundant evidence of the marvellous power which he possesses as a vocalist, and will always prove welcome before any audience. Both his other songs were encored."

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).
(Assistant Lay Clerk Westminster Abbey)
Mr. Henry J. Wood (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—
"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.

"Henry J. Wood."

"Elijah."—Bromley.—"The title part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionalism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).
Address, 56, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE),
Soloist, Leeds Musical Festivals and of the leading English, Scotch, and Irish Concerts. Extensive répertoire of over 100 works. Many dates already booked for season 1902 and 1903

"Elijah," at Sheffield, October 13, 1902.—"Of the many times he has sung the part of the Prophet, he has perhaps never given it with more impressive effect."—Telegraph.

"Sang the music of the Prophet very finely."—Independent.
Address, Marlbro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. ROBERT BURNETT

(BARITONE)
Of the Scottish Orchestral Concerts, and of the leading Scotch and North of England Concerts.

"Elijah."—"The baritone has by far the most important solo work, and Mr. Robert Burnett, whose artistic singing we have frequently had occasion to notice, did it ample justice. He excelled in the dramatic portions, which, as we have indicated, are the most characteristic, and, therefore, the most important portions of the work. His recitatives were grandly given, with conspicuous point and fire, and with evidently the utmost familiarity with and thorough appreciation of the work. Mr. Burnett also, as was to be expected, gave the great solos with every possible success. His treatment of 'It is enough,' was instinct with feeling and sympathy, and in the scene with the Priests of Baal, he sang with exciting dramatic fervour."—Dundee Courier, March 14, 1902.

Edinburgh Choral Union.—Elgar's "Caractacus."—"Mr. Robert Burnett, who took the minor baritone parts, also made a fine appearance. He was obviously familiar both with the music and with the spirit of it; and even in the presence of Mr. Andrew Black, his cultured and effective style of intonation and delivery made his singing an outstanding feature of the performance."—The Scotsman, December 18, 1900.

Ballads.—"Mr. Burnett's Edinburgh recital in the Freemasons' Hall last evening drew out a large audience. The programme submitted was excellently chosen with a view to showing the range of his style and his rare gifts of expression. The first set of songs included two examples of old Italian melody, two songs of sentiment of German and Hungarian origin, two Biblical pieces by Dvorák, and the powerfully dramatic 'Lament' from Dr. Elgar's 'Caractacus.' In such a variety of style and sentiment Mr. Burnett proved once again not only the excellence of his vocal method, but that fine artistic sense which enables him to grasp and realise the feeling appropriate to the moment."—The Scotsman, October 16, 1902.

"He was in capital voice last night, and an appreciative audience manifested the greatest pleasure in his singing. Specially fine were Robert Franz's 'Widmung,' the 'Lament of Caractacus,' and Dvorák's 'God is my Shepherd,' the latter being marked by impressive devotional feeling. After a powerful rendering of 'What would I do for my Queen,' from Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda,' Mr. Burnett wound up with a string of half-a-score of ballads, lyrics, and folk-songs, all of them, happily, in the vernacular. Among the most noteworthy, both for their musical value and for the vivid manner of their interpretation, were two striking Freebooter's Songs by William Wallace, and 'Love is a Bubble,' by Frances Allitsen. These, and the English, Scotch, and Irish folk-songs, carried on the delight of the audience to the close."
Address, c/o. N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork Street, Burlington Gardens, W.

TO CONDUCTORS, SECRETARIES OF CHORAL SOCIETIES, AND CONCERT GIVERS.

MR. FRED LIGHTOWLER

(BARITONE).

"Mr. F. Lightowler's singing has afforded me very great satisfaction, the beauty of tone and extensive compass of his voice, and the highly artistic and sympathetic feeling with which he sings, make the remembrance of his performance extremely pleasant."—Dr. Edward Elgar.

Terms and Vacant Dates, The Cathedral, Worcester.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

Richter Concert, Oct. 17, 1902.—"Presented a fine selection of songs, including 'Der Wanderer,' 'Liebestreu,' and 'Pilgrim's Song.' A resonant voice of great power and range, combined with well-developed talents and an exceptionally good method."—Southport Visitor.

"Sang with true artistic feeling: A voice of excellent quality, and an expressive and attractive style."—Guardian.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)

(Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral.)

"Creation."—"Mr. Coleman was once more prominent in the air 'Now heaven in fullest glory shone,' and he skilfully adapted himself to the different aspects arising, confirming the good opinions which were early formed."—Newark Herald, April 19, 1902.

"St. Paul."—"Mr. Coleman was in fine voice, and scored a great success. Particularly fine was his rendering of the beautiful 'O God, have mercy.'"—West Bromwich Chronicle, April 25, 1902.

"Elijah."—"Mr. J. Coleman, on whom fell the bulk of the solo work, was in splendid voice, and his rendering of the various parts allotted to him was faultless."—Derby Express, March 21, 1902.

Banbury.—"Mr. Coleman gave a remarkably fine and artistic rendering of 'The Deathless Army.' It was really a tone picture, and seldom have we heard this song so dramatically—we may say graphically—rendered. Mr. Coleman was most deservedly recalled, when he gave 'Star of my soul,' which was characterised by expressiveness and power throughout."—Banbury Guardian, October 16, 1902.

Address, The Cathedral, Lichfield.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS),

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

"Messiah" (Todmorden).—"Mr. Sunman, too, sang with great distinction and success, and probably carried off the honours of the evening, taking the plaudits of the audience for the standard. The rendering of 'Why do the nations?' and 'The trumpet shall sound' readily roused the audience to loud demonstrations of appreciation, and all his other solos were as well rendered in their own proper manner and method.—Todmorden Advertiser, December 20, 1901.

THE WORDS BY SIR LEWIS MORRIS
THE MUSIC BY
F. H. COWEN.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.
Vocal Parts, 6d. each; String Parts, 5s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

STANDARD.
The work is simple in design, and the music direct in expression and dignified, as befits the subject. After a few bars of orchestral prelude, the chorus enters with an emphatic invocation, "Sing soaring voices, sing a joyous tune." The choral writing shortly afterwards becomes more animated and contrapuntal, and is carried up to an imposing climax. A very effective section begins with the words, "Crown him, the seventh of his Kingly name," set in march rhythm, and accompanied by the brass, softly and staccato. The soprano solo, the words of which refer to the Queen, is most sympathetic, and the subsequent final chorus into which it leads is worked up to a gorgeous and imposing conclusion.

OSCAR BERINGER
NEW PIANOFORTE TUTOR.

"In his valuable work the able professor deals with both the theoretical and practical sides of pianoforte playing, and students must needs derive much benefit from the instructions that he sets down in a manner that is clear and easily to be comprehended. The tome in question is divided into chapters, each being provided with its own finger exercises and studies, and there is likewise a good selection of pieces, comprising excerpts from the classical masters, examples from the works of modern composers, and several folk-songs."—Daily Telegraph.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH:

SOME NOTES ON ITS HISTORY AND FIRST PERFORMANCE.

Majora Canamus—(Virgil, Pollio).

And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory. (1 Timothy iii., 16.)

In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. (Colossians ii., 3.)

Handel was fifty-six years old when he composed his magnum opus, the 'Messiah.' The sixth oratorio set by him to English words, it had been preceded by 'Esther,' 'Deborah,' 'Athaliah,' 'Saul,' and 'Israel in Egypt.' To these succeeded a dozen other noble settings of Scriptural subjects, the whole constituting a magnificent range of musical mountains, of which the 'Messiah,' like some majestic peak, towers high above the rest in the sublimity of its theme and the loftiness of its conception.

The genesis of the oratorio known as the 'Messiah' is unfortunately very obscure. There is a period of four months in the year 1741, during which history is perfectly silent in regard to Handel. On April 8 he gave his last opera performance at the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields, thus terminating an operatic career which had proved to be disastrous. The next known date is that of August 22, written by his own hand on the first page of the 'Messiah' autograph score. It has been stated that Handel passed the summer months of the year 1741 in the quietude of Gopsall, in Leicestershire, the seat of his patron and librettist, Charles Jennens, of whom we give some particulars in another column. There is, however, no definite proof of this rural sojourn of Handel's, nor, indeed, that the 'Messiah' was composed at Gopsall. Jennens compiled the word-book of the 'Messiah,' to which he prefixed the mottoes, now seldom printed, which appear at the head of this article.

The autograph manuscript of the 'Messiah' is the property of His Majesty the King, and is preserved in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace. It is written on oblong folio paper, $9\frac{3}{4} \times 12$ inches, and fills 275 pages. The first page of the autograph bears this inscription:—

Messiah. An Oratorio Part the first ℔ angefangen den 22 August 1741.

At the end of Part I. the manuscript is dated:—

August 28 ℔ 1741.

at the end of Part II.:—

℥ Septembr 6 1741:—

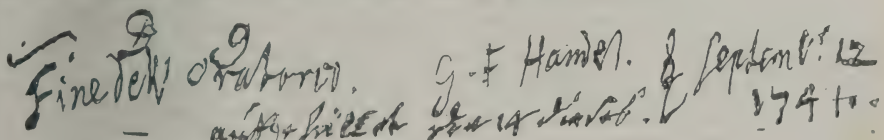
On the last page of all is found the following, which we give in facsimile:—



The use of the astrological signs will be observed. The third date shows that Handel composed the 'Hallelujah' chorus on a Sunday! This is an interesting fact which, we believe, has never before been pointed out.

In the early days of November, 1741, Handel set out for Dublin in response to an invitation he had received from the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland that he should pay a visit to the capital of the Emerald Isle. It is certain that Handel was in London on October 31, as he attended a performance of a pasticcio, entitled 'Alessandro in Persia,' at the Haymarket Theatre on that date—a performance which made him, as he tells us, 'very merry all along his journey to Dublin.' In those days the packet-boats for Dublin usually started from Parkgate, on the north bank of the Dee, twelve miles from Chester. Contrary winds, however, compelled Handel to make an enforced stay in the cathedral city. Charles Burney, then a boy of fifteen at school in Chester, records that he saw the great composer 'smoke a pipe over a dish of coffee, at the Exchange Coffee-house.' The distinguished musical historian is also the author of the oft-told story of Handel's wishing 'to prove some books that had been hastily transcribed, by trying over the choruses which he intended to perform in Ireland.' He applied to Edmund Baker, the cathedral organist and a pupil of Dr. Blow, for the aid of some of the lay clerks who could sing at sight. One Janson, a good musician and the possessor of an excellent bass voice, who also followed the avocation of a printer, was selected, and had to attend a private rehearsal at the 'Golden Falcon,' where Handel was staying. The remainder of the story may be related in Burney's quaint words:—

> Alas! on trial of the chorus in the Messiah, 'And with his stripes we are healed,' poor Janson, after repeated attempts, failed so egregiously, that Handel let loose his great bear upon him; and after swearing in four or five languages, cried out in broken English: 'You shcauntrel! tit not you dell me dat you could sing at soite?' 'Yes, sir!' says the printer, 'and so I can; but not at first sight.'

Handel was not the only musical stranger within the gates of Chester at that time. Faulkner's Journal (a Dublin newspaper) of November 17-21, 1741, contained the following information concerning one Maclaine (or Maclean), an organist whom Handel had engaged to play at his concerts in Dublin. This extract is probably a reprint from a Chester newspaper:—

> Chester, November 5.—Yesterday arrived here on his way to Dublin, Mr. Maclaine, who was invited to play on our Cathedral Organ this Day, on which he performed so well, to the entire Satisfaction of the whole Congregation, that some of the best Judges in Musick said, That they had never heard that Organ truly plaid on before: and his Performance was allowed to be very masterly and in the finest Taste.

Handel's movements on the other side of the Irish Channel can be traced through the Dublin newspapers of the day. The first reference is to be found in Faulkner's Journal, November 17-21, 1741, from which quotation has already been made; it reads thus:—

> And last Wednesday [i.e., the 18th] the celebrated Dr. Handell arrived here in the Packet-boat from Holyhead, a Gentleman universally known by his excellent Compositions in all Kinds of Musick, and particularly for his Te Deum, Jubilate, Anthems, and other Compositions in Church Musick (of which for some Years past have principally consisted the Entertainments in the Round Church, which have so greatly contributed to support the Charity of Mercer's Hospital) to perform his Oratorios, for which Purpose he hath engaged the above Mr. Maclaine, his Wife, and several others of the best Performers in the Musical Way.

Faulkner's Journal of November 24-28 contained the following Handelian information:—

> Last Tuesday [i.e., November 24] arrived in the Yatcht from Parkgate, Signiora Avolio, an excellent Singer who is come to this Kingdom to perform in Mr. Handel's Musical Entertainment.

To quote again from the same informing journal, in its issue of December 8-12, 1741:—

> On Monday next being the 14th of December (and every Day following) Attendance will be given at Mr. Handel's House in Abbey-Street, near Lyffey-Street, from 9 o'clock in the Morning till 2 in the Afternoon in order to receive the Subscription Money for his Six Musical Entertainments in the new Musick-Hall in Fishamble-Street; at which Time each Subscriber will have a Ticket delivered to him, which entitles him to three Tickets each Night, either for Ladies or Gentlemen.

Handel gave his first concert in Dublin on December 23. The programme consisted of L'Allegro, with two concertos for several instruments and a concerto on the organ, and Faulkner's Journal duly records the event:—

> Last Wednesday Mr. Handel had his first Oratorio, at Mr. Neal's Musick-Hall in Fishamble-Street, which was crowded with a more numerous and polite Audience than ever was seen upon the like Occasion. The Performance was superior to anything of the Kind in this Kingdom before; and our Nobility and Gentry, to show their taste for all kinds of Genius, expressed their great Satisfaction and have already given all imaginable Encouragement to this grand Musick.

A few days after this concert had been given, Handel wrote the following long and intensely interesting letter to his friend Charles Jennens, already mentioned. Through the kindness of Earl Howe, the lineal descendant of Mr. Jennens, we have been permitted to examine this fine specimen of Handel's epistolary style. The letter is in a most beautiful state of preservation, and we give it literatim:—

Dublin, Decembr. 29, 1741.

Sr.,

It was with the greatest Pleasure I saw the Continuation of your Kindness by the Lines You was pleased to send me, in order to be prefixed to your Oratorio Messiah, which I set to Musick before I left England. I am emboldned, Sir, by the generous Concern you please to take in relation to my affairs, to give you an Account of the Success I have met here. The Nobility did me the Honour to make amongst themselves a Subscription for 6 Nights, which did fill a Room of 600 Persons, so that I needed not sell one single ticket at the Door, and without Vanity the Performance was received with general approbation. Sigra. Avolio, which I brought with me from London, pleases extraordinary. I have found another Tenor Voice which gives great Satisfaction, the Basses and Counter Tenors are very good, and the rest of the Chorus Singers (by my Direction) do exceeding well, as for the Instruments they are really excellent, Mr. Dubourgh being at the Head of them, and the Musick sounds delightfully in this charming Room, which puts me in such Spirits (and my Health being so good) that I exert myself on my Organ whit more then usual success.

I opened with the Allegro, Penseroso, and Moderato, and I assure you that the words of the Moderato are vastly admired.

The Audience being composed (besides the Flower of Ladies of Distinction and other People of the greatest Quality) of so many Bishops, Deans, Heads of the Colledge, the most eminents People in the Law as the Chancellor, Auditor General, &c., all which are very much taken with the Pöetry so that I am desired to perform it again the next time. I cannot sufficiently express the kind treatment I receive here, but the Politeness of this generous Nation cannot be unknown to you, so I let you judge of the satisfaction I enjoy, passing my time with Honour, profit, and pleasure. They propose already to have some more Performances, when the 6 nights of the Subscription are over, and My Lord Duc the Lord Lieutenant (who is allways present with all his Family on those nights) will easily obtain a longer Permission for me by His Majesty, so that I shall be obliged to make my stay here longer than I thought. One request I must make to you, which is that you would insinuate my most devoted Respects to My Lord and my Lady Shaftesbury, you know how much their kind Protection is precious to me. Sir Windham Knatchbull will find here my respectfull Compliments. You will encrease my Obligations if by occasion you will present my humble service to some other Patrons and friends of mine. I expect with Impatience the Favour of your News, concerning your Health and wellfare, of which I take a real share, as for the News of your Operas, I need not trouble you for all this Town is full of their ill success, by a number of Letters from your quarters to the People of Quality here, and I can't help saying but that it furnishes great Diversion and laughter. The first Opera I heard myself before I left London, and it made me very merry all along my journey, and of the second Opera, called Penelope, a certain nobleman writes very jocosely, il faut que jedise avec Harlequin nôtre Penelôpe n'est qu'une Sallôpe, but I think I have trespassed too much on your Patience.

I beg you to be persuaded of the sincere veneration and esteem with which I have the Honour to be

Sr.

Your most obliged and most humble servant

George Frideric Handel.

Handel had resided in Dublin and given oratorio concerts for a period of five months before he produced his 'Messiah.' The following advertisement from Faulkner's Journal of March 23-27, 1742 (and subsequently), is unusually interesting, as in it the word Messiah, as applied to Handel's oratorio, appears in print for the first time :—

For Relief of the Prisoners in the several Gaols and for the Support of Mercer's Hospital in Stephen's Street and of the Charitable Infirmary on the Inns Quay, on Monday the 12th of April will be performed at the Musick Hall in Fishamble-Street, Mr. Handel's new Grand Oratorio called the Messiah, in which the Gentlemen in the Choirs of both Cathedrals will assist, with some Concertos on the Organ by Mr. Handel.

Tickets to be had at the Musick Hall and at Mr. Neal's in Christ Church Yard, at Half-a-Guinea each.

N.B.—No person will be admitted to the Rehearsal without a Rehearsal Ticket, which will be given gratis with the Ticket for the Performance when pay'd for.

An account of the rehearsal appeared in Faulkner's Journal, April 6-10, 1742, as follows :—

Yesterday Mr. Handel's new Grand Sacred Oratorio, called The Messiah, was rehearsed at the Musick-Hall in Fishamble-Street, to a most Grand, Polite and Crouded Audience; and was performed so well, that it gave universal Satisfaction to all present, and was allowed by the greatest Judges to be the finest Composition of Musick that ever was heard, and the sacred Words as being properly adapted for the Occasion.

N.B.—At the Desire of several Persons of Distinction, the above Performance is put off to Tuesday next. The Doors will be opened at Eleven, and the Performance begin at Twelve.

Many Ladies and Gentlemen who are well-wishers to this Noble and Grand Charity, for which this Oratorio was composed, request it as a Favour, that the Ladies who honour this Performance with their Presence, would be pleased to come without Hoops, as it will greatly encrease the Charity, by making Room for more Company.

Not only feminine garb, but implements of warfare exercised the minds of the Stewards, who evidently expected a crush. Faulkner's Journal must again be quoted (April 10-13) :—

The Stewards of the Charitable Musical Society request the Favour of the Ladies not to come with Hoops this day to the Musick-Hall in Fishamble-Street: The Gentlemen are desired to come without their Swords.

This Day will be performed Mr. Handell's new Grand Sacred Oratorio, called the Messiah. The Doors will be opened at Eleven, and the performance begin at Twelve.

The first performance of the great oratorio—an event of the greatest importance in the history of music—is thus described in the invaluable Faulkner's Journal of April 13-17, 1742 :—

On Tuesday last Mr. Handel's Sacred Grand Oratorio, the Messiah, was performed in the New Musick-Hall in Fishamble-Street; the best Judges allowed it to be the most finished piece of Musick. Words are wanting to express the exquisite Delight it afforded to the admiring crouded Audience. The Sublime, the Grand, and the Tender, adapted to the most elevated, majestick and moving Words, conspired to transport and charm the ravished Heart and Ear. It is but Justice to Mr. Handel, that the World should know, he generously gave the Money arising from this Grand Performance, to be equally shared by the Society for relieving Prisoners, the Charitable Infirmary, and Mercer's Hospital, for which they will for ever gratefully remember his Name; and that the Gentlemen of the two Choirs, Mr Dubourg, Mrs. Avolio, and Mrs. Cibber, who all performed their Parts to Admiration, acted also on the same disinterested Principle, satisfied with the deserved Applause of the Publick, and the conscious Pleasure of promoting such useful, and extensive Charity. There were above 700 People in the Room, and the Sum collected for that Noble and Pious Charity amounted to about 400*l.*, out of which 127*l.* goes to each of the three great and pious Charities.

It will be observed that this account specially mentions Mr. Dubourg, the leader of the orchestra, and Mrs. Avolio and Mrs. Cibber, two of the solo vocalists. To Mrs. Cibber, sister of Dr. Arne, fell the first rendering of 'He was despised,' which she sang with a pathos indescribably touching. It is said that Dr. Delany, the friend of Swift, on hearing Mrs. Cibber sing this air, said: 'Woman, for this be all thy sins forgiven.' In regard to the 'Gentlemen of the two choirs'—i.e., of Christ Church and St. Patrick's Cathedral—there is in the British Museum Library an original word-book of the oratorio bearing this title:—

MESSIAH
an Oratorio
Compos'd by Mr. HANDEL,

[Texts as given at the head of this article]

Dublin: Printed by George Faulkner, 1742.
(Price a British Six-pence.)

No names of singers are printed in this rare publication, but a former owner has, with a blunt-pointed pencil, written against the songs, &c., the names Bailey, Mason, Lamb, Hill, and Ward, all of whom were gentlemen on the musical staffs of the two cathedrals in Dublin. It is possible that this book was not used at the first performance, as these names do not fully agree with those written by Handel on the Dublin autograph score, but the point is not material. The name of M'Lean (Mrs. Maclaine, or Maclean) also appears in this old word-book, but her name is not mentioned in the report of the first performance.

A repetition performance of 'Mr. Handel's new grand Sacred Oratorio called Messiah, with concertos on the organ,' took place on June 3. A primitive system of ventilation is recorded in the advertisement of the concert:—

In order to keep the Room as cool as possible, a Pane of Glass will be removed from the Top of each of the Windows.

N.B.—This will be the last Performance of Mr. Handel's during his Stay in this Kingdom.

Handel's visit to the Irish capital covered a period of nine months. He left on August 13, 1742. 'Last week,' records Faulkner's Journal, 'the celebrated Mr. Handel, so famous for his excellent compositions and fine performance with which he entertained this town in the most agreeable manner, embarked for England.' It may be mentioned that another musical celebrity was also in Dublin during a portion of Handel's sojourn there, in the person of Dr. Arne, of 'Rule, Britannia' fame.

Before making reference to the first performance of the 'Messiah' in London, it may be well to quote further from the Handel-Jennens correspondence in regard to the great oratorio. Shortly after his return to London, Handel wrote the following letter, in the possession of Earl Howe, addressed:—

'To Charles Jennens, Esq., Junior, at Gopsall, near Atherstone, Coventry bag':—

London, Sept^r. 9th, 1742.

Dear S^r.,

It was indeed your humble Servant which intended you a Visit in my way from Ireland to London, for I certainly could have given you a better account by word of Mouth, as by writing, how well your Messiah was received in that Country, yet as a Noble Lord, and not less than the Bishop of Elphin (a Nobleman very learned in Musick) has given his Observations in writing of this Oratorio, I send you here annexed the contents of it in his own words.

I shall send the printed Book of the Messiah to Mr. Sted.*

As for my success in general in that generous and polite Nation, I reserve the account of it till I have the Honour to see you in London. The report that the Direction of the Opera next winter is committed to my Care, is groundless. The gentlemen who have undertaken to middle with Harmony cannot agree, and are quite in a confusion. Whether I shall do something in the oratorio way (as several of my friends desire) I cannot determine as yet. Certain it is, that this time 12 month I shall continue my Oratorio's in Ireland, where they are going to make a large subscription allready for that Purpose. . . .

Pray let me hear meanwhile of your Health and Wellfare, of which I take a real share being with an uncommon Sincerity and Respect

S^r.

Your most obliged humble servant
GEORGE FRIDERIC HANDEL.

On July 19, 1744, Handel wrote to Jennens as follows:—

Be pleased to point out these passages in the Messiah which you think require altering.

A letter from Jennens to an unknown correspondent, dated 'Gopsall, August 30, 1745,' shows that Handel and his librettist, as is so often

* This name is approximately transcribed: it is the only doubtful word in Handel's beautifully written letter.

he case. did not see eye to eye in their joint production. Jennens says:—

> I shall show you a collection I gave Handel call'd Messiah, which I value highly, and he has made a fine Entertainment of it, tho' not near so good as he might and ought to have done. I have with great difficulty made him correct some of the grossest faults in the composition, but he retain'd his Overture obstinately, in which there are some passages far unworthy of Handel, but much more unworthy of the Messiah.
>
> Your most affectionate Friend and Servt.
> C. Jennens.

The 'Messiah' was first performed in London on March 23, 1743. The following advertisement—by the way, its insertion cost only two shillings—announces the event. It is from The London Daily Post and General Advertiser of March 19, 1743:—

> Covent Garden.
> By subscription. The ninth night.
>
> At the Theatre-Royal in Covent Garden, Wednesday next, will be perform'd A new Sacred Oratorio, A Concerto on the organ, and a solo on the violin by Mr. Dubourg.
>
> Tickets will be deliv'd to Subscribers on Tuesday next, at Mr. Handel's House in Brook-Street.
> Pit and Boxes to be put together, and no Person to be admitted without Tickets, which will be deliv'd that Day, at the office in Covent Garden Theatre, at Half a Guinea each. First Gallery 5s. Upper Gallery 3s. 6d.
> The Gallery will be open'd at Four o'clock. Pit and Boxes at Five.

The reader will notice that the words 'The Messiah' do not appear in the above advertisement—the work is simply designated 'A new Sacred Oratorio.' This reticence may possibly have been due to the sacredness of the title.

It is recorded that at this, or at one of the earliest performances of the 'Messiah' in London, the audience were so moved at the words 'For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth,' that they all, with the King (George II.), who was present, rose to their feet and remained standing till the conclusion of the chorus. This incident initiated the custom of a standing posture in listening to this pæan of praise.

A few words may now be said in regard to the history of Mozart's additional accompaniments to the 'Messiah.' They were written in the year 1789 for a performance of the oratorio in Vienna, which took place in an organless concert-room. The original manuscript is lost, and considerable doubt has been cast upon the genuineness of some, at least, of these additions attributed to Mozart. One thing is certain, they were not published until the spring of 1803, fourteen years after they were written, and when Mozart had been twelve years in his grave. The additional accompaniments made their way into England soon after their publication in Germany in 1803, being introduced to English audiences by Ashley at one of his 'Lenten Oratorios,' given at Covent Garden Theatre on March 29, 1805. A thoughtful criticism upon these 'additional accompaniments' from the Sun, a leading London journal of the day, deserves quotation:—

> The Oratorio.—The Messiah was last night performed at Covent Garden Theatre, with new accompaniments composed by Mozart. We entertain a very high respect for the genius of Mozart, but we also hold the unrivalled powers of Handel in due reverence, and therefore must enter our protest against any such alterations in works that have obtained the sanction of time and of the best musical judges. There is an integrity in the productions of this great Master, the result of the most powerful talents in his art. His harmonies have a firm and united character. The accompaniments of last night, though manifesting taste and feeling, did not assimilate with the grandeur and energy of the original subject. We trust, therefore, that when The Messiah or any other work of Handel is performed it will appear without change or interpolation. Handel is an Englishman by adoption; he produced all his works in this Country, and is still very little regarded in his own. We should therefore guard him in Music, as well as Shakespeare in the Drama, from daring innovation. Such as The Messiah was, however, in its improved state last night, it was well supported by Braham, Miller, Miss Munday, Mrs. Bland, and Mrs. Ashe. (The Sun, March 30, 1805.)

The 'Messiah' was not published in its complete form during Handel's life-time. The Overture is said to have appeared in 1743, as one of a set of overtures published by Walsh, who, between the years 1749 and 1759, also issued eighteen of the vocal solos in a collection of 'Handel's songs (400) from the oratorios.' It is significant that while these 400 songs bear the titles of the oratorios from which they are taken, those from the 'Messiah' are printed without such headings.

The actual date of the publication of the 'Messiah' in its complete form has not hitherto been definitely known. This information we are now able to supply—the result of certain research among some old London newspapers. The Public Advertiser of December 4, 1766, contains the first announcement, so far as we can discover. But one issued nine days later, and giving fuller information, may be quoted. It forms the concluding portion of a newspaper advertisement inserted by Messrs. Randall and Abell, successors to John Walsh (father and son bearing that name), of Catherine Street, Strand, Handel's original publishers. The advertisement, which appeared in The Public Advertiser of December 13, 1766, began with an announcement of the publication of 'The Accomplished Maid,' a comic opera, and, as if by way of contrast, it concluded thus:—

> Proposals for Printing by Subscription, The complete Score of the Oratorio called Messiah; composed by Mr. Handel, with his additional Alterations. The price to Subscribers is One Guinea and a Half; One Guinea to be paid at the Time of subscribing, and Half a Guinea more on the Delivery of the Book, which will be in May next. It is desired that those Gentlemen and Ladies who are willing to encourage the Work, will send in their Subscriptions that the Proprietors may be secured of a sufficient Number to answer the Expence of so great an Undertaking.

The same journal, in its issue of July 4, 1767, announced that the copies would be ready to deliver to subscribers 'on Tuesday next, the 7th inst.'; therefore we get the actual date of the first publication of Handel's 'Messiah,' which is July 7, 1767, eight years after its composer's death.

The original title-page stands thus:—

an Oratorio in score
As it was originally Perform'd composed by
Mr. Handel to which are added
His additional Alterations

London: Printed by Messrs. Randall & Abell, Successors to the late Mr. John Walsh, in Catherine Street, in the Strand.

A copy of this original full-score edition is in the possession of Dr. W. H. Cummings. From it we find that only 127 copies were subscribed for, and those by 90 people, of whom no fewer than 19 hailed from Cambridge. The list includes the King and Queen, and T.R.H. the Dukes of York, Gloucester, and Cumberland. Mr. Charles Jennens is set down for three copies; and in addition to the foregoing, the following familiar names are included in the list of subscribers:—

Mr. Attwood, of Bath.
Mr. Samuel Arnold.
Mr. Theodore Aylward.
Mr. C. R. Burney.
Mr. Cooke, organist of St. Peter's, Westminster [i.e., the Abbey], and Master of the boys.
Mr. Samuel Howard.
Mr. Hague.
The Madrigal Society, at the Queen's Arms, Newgate Street.
Dr. John Randall, organist of King's College and Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge.

In conclusion, a new edition of the word-book, 'corrected by the compiler,' was announced in The Public Advertiser of March 25, 1768, but the author's name (Charles Jennens) is not given. A collation of this—now the current version—with the original Dublin publication of 1742 shows a few verbal changes of no very great importance.

For assistance kindly rendered in the preparation of these historical notes on Handel's masterpiece the writer is indebted to Earl Howe; Dr. James C. Culwick, of Dublin; Dr. W. H. Cummings; Mr. Andrew Deakin, of Birmingham; and Dr. A. H. Mann, of Cambridge.

THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY AND ITS MUSIC.

The eighth day of November, in the year 1602, is a memorable date in the history of English literature and the University of Oxford. On that eventful occasion the Vice-Chancellor opened, in great state, the famous Library known the world over as the Bodleian. Like all deep-rooted institutions it sprang from small beginnings—a collection of some 2,500 volumes. Built on the ruins of the old University Library, with which the name of Duke Humphrey, of Gloucester—Shakespeare's 'good Duke'—is associated, it stands to-day a splendid monument to the memory of its munificent founder, Sir Thomas Bodley. This worthy benefactor, born at Exeter, March 2, 1545, was a shrewd, businesslike man, who had obtained fame in the diplomatic world. But his burning ambition was the foundation of a library in the University of which he had been a distinguished student. Bodley was not only a man learned in the ancient and modern tongues, but as he had married a rich lady, he had 'some purse-ability to go through with the charge,' in addition to 'special good leisure to follow such a work and honourable friends to further the design.' He made the wise stipulation that no book should ever be removed from the Library; and among other conditions, since considerably modified, were these: that the librarian should be a celibate, and that he be paid a salary of £5 15s. per quarter. Among the donors to the library since its foundation, honourable mention may be made of such names as Cromwell, Milton, Robert Burton, Laud, the non-juring Bishop Rawlinson, and Francis Douce, who gave a splendid collection of French and Flemish painted Missals. There are also the important collection of manuscript music bequeathed by the Rev. O. Wight in 1801, and that formerly deposited in the Music School, but which came by statute to the Bodleian in 1885.

James I. conferred on Bodley the distinction of knighthood, and in 1604 granted letters patent styling the Library by its founder's name. In this gracious act the king paid a distinction to Bodley that was well deserved, in that he had founded practically the first public library in Europe. In 1610 Bodley—it is said in consideration of £50 worth of plate—made an agreement with the Stationers' Company, confirmed by the Star Chamber, to the effect that the Library should receive 'one perfect copy' of every book printed by the members. By this decree the Bodleian became 'the first repository of national literature,' and, under various Copyright Acts, the Library can claim a copy of every book published in this country, a privilege it enjoys in common with the libraries of the British Museum, the Cambridge University Library, the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, and Trinity College, Dublin. The Bodleian is not only the oldest University library in Europe, but the largest; moreover, it is second largest in size of all the libraries in the Empire, that of the British Museum holding the premier place. Some 600,000 volumes are deposited within these venerable walls at Oxford, in addition to 30,000 MSS., and the increase is at the rate of 64,000 items per annum. Not only are there books and manuscripts of priceless value, but the Library is rich in its collection of coins, charters, maps, &c.—a veritable storehouse of learning and precious possessions.

In ascending the unguarded and quaint wooden staircase of shallow steps of the venerable building one has a horrid dread of that great enemy of books, fire, but doubtless every precaution is taken against so dire a calamity. The exquisitely-panelled oak ceiling of the Library, divided into square compartments, each richly coloured and bearing the arms of the founder and those of the University (as shown in our illustration), is one of the sights of Oxford. And what shall be said of those inviting and calm-environed alcoves, where readers may enjoy that peace which the British Museum cannot give? The very atmosphere of the place is charged with serenity made perfect, and the earnest-minded student experiences the feeling that it is good to be there, 'remote from the noise of the world.'

The Tercentenary of the Bodleian Library, celebrated at Oxford last month, affords a convenient opportunity for calling attention to some of the music in the vast collection stored within those walls. When it is stated that volumes might be written on the treasures of music therein preserved, one begins to realize the difficulty of the task in even touching the surface of the subject within the limits of a short article. Therefore, reference must be limited to a few specimens in that great storehouse of learning, these and their descriptions being such as will appeal to the general reader rather than to the learned don, or deep-dyed bibliophile.

First, in regard to the musical manuscripts. Here, without being an expert palæographist, one has every facility for studying the evolution of notation. In a thin, narrow book the student may see the earliest known specimen of neums—a name derived from the Greek pneuma, breath—the writing being probably that of a ninth century scribe. And then as to their successors, the notes, one can trace them from the oblong form, on to the thorn-shape, modified from an earlier diamond-shape; the spoon-shape, rounded off from an earlier thorn-shape; and from the spoon-shaped signs in use at the end of the fifteenth century to our modern notes is an easy transition. The busy man and ordinary mortal is indeed fortunate in being able to seek the aid of such skilled cicerones in this matter as the late Sir John Stainer, his son and daughter, Mr. J. F. R. Stainer and Miss C. Stainer, who, with Bodley's librarian, Mr. E. W. B. Nicholson, have collaborated in the production of a monumental work entitled 'Early Bodleian Music' (Novello, 1902). These two magnificent volumes bear testimony to the unwearied enthusiasm and ripe scholarship of the compilers deserving of all praise. The letter-press, facsimiles and transcriptions into modern notation, no less than the general appearance of the volumes, vie with each other in producing a work of the highest importance and interest.

Here we find the earliest known musical composition in the English language. Its date is 'about 1225,' as the notes are still neums, whereas in 'Sumer is icumen in' (of the middle of the thirteenth century) they are square-headed. Bodley's librarian must be quoted for further notational information:—

All the staves are of 4 brown or brown-black lines. The first song has the pitch-signature ♮, b quadratum[1]—i.e., b natural, against the second space in the first six staves, but in the body of the fifth and sixth it is shifted to the space above, which it also occupies in the seventh and eighth staves. The third song has the pitch-signature c against the second line in each stave.

SIR THOMAS BODLEY
(1545-1613),
FOUNDER OF THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY.

The two illustrations from 'Early Bodleian Music' which we reproduce on pages 722 and 723, form a song in a French epic poem, copied in 1338, probably at Bruges. This interesting manuscript came into the Library between 1598 and 1605, and was probably presented by Sir Thomas Bodley himself. The first recorded owner of this volume was Richard Wydeville, Lord Rivers (father-in-law of Edward IV.), who (according to a French note on the last leaf) bought it in London on New Year's Day, 1466.

[1] Before this date the 'squared b' had assumed very much the shape of a long-tailed h—whence the name H given to b natural in Germany. From this form ♮ is derived our modern sign for all naturals.

We give the modern notation form of this ancient ditty as transcribed by Mr. J. F. R. Stainer and Miss Stainer in the second volume of 'Early Bodleian Music':—

'ENSI VA QUI AMOURS.'

This little song is in the form which Eustace Deschamps, in his 'L'Art de dicter et de fere chançons' (dated 25 November, 1392), describes under the name of 'Rondel Sangle,' and which is termed by later writers a 'Triolet.' The melody is very sweet, and, in the hands of a modern musician, would form a charming theme for development or variation.

Minim = Semibreve of original. Date of MS., 1338.

En - si va qui a - mours de-maine à son com-mant. A qui que soit do - lours, en - si va qui a - mours, As mau - vais est lan - gours nos biens, mais non por-quant En - si va qui a - mours de-maine à son com-mant.

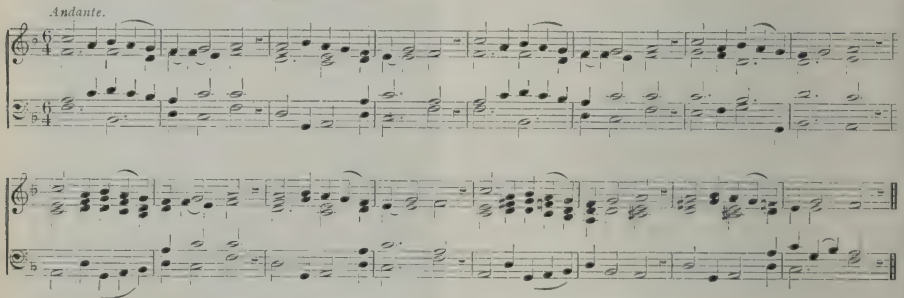
A simple harmonisation is here given:—



* Brevis plica descendens. † Brevis plica ascendens.

Sir John Stainer contributed to this Volume (II.) an Introduction, written in that luminous, attractive style which reflects so admirably his genial personality. The following extract therefrom is no less interesting than it is educationally valuable:—

In the realm of art it will be found that successive and continuous attempts to break through conventional barriers and limitations, even when resulting in disastrous repulse, leave some permanent beneficial effect behind them. Beneath the accumulated wreckage of frequent defeat there lies hidden a little residue of priceless value, like the dust of some precious metal, earned after much toil, and after casting aside much dross. This residue conveys to us moderns a valuable lesson on the laws of right and wrong methods, of true and false ideals. By such means men learn what is the highest they should strive to reach, and how they should direct their efforts in order to attain it. It may be quite true that the man of genius seems to learn this lesson instinctively; he grasps without effort the slow growth of others' experience, and dashes forward in the path which leads to true ideals. The life of a genius may be a very pleasant story to write, but he who wants to trace the steady evolution of an art must sift the evidence gained from the labours of the ordinary thinker and everyday worker. The popular ballads of a country are just as truly a symptom and gauge of its mental and æsthetic activity as the noblest outpourings of the epic or lyric poet, perhaps more. The people's favourite melodies, the carol-tune, the dance and the commonest form of descant, will be found a necessary stepping-stone to the due understanding of those national tendencies and leanings towards certain special melodic, rhythmic and harmonic forms, which may eventually become a distinctive feature of their future productions.

A companion book to 'Early Bodleian Music,' also due to the erudition and industry of the Stainer family, is 'Dufay and his contemporaries,' with a learned introduction by Bodley's librarian, of which an account, with facsimiles and copious extracts, appeared in The Musical Times of August, 1899.

We may now glance at one or two manuscript volumes of later date. A volume of 186 pages, written in 1654, bears the quaint title of:—

Pavanes, Galliardes, Ayres, Almains, Coranto's Sarabrands, Morisca's, Maskes, and Contry-Dances, composed occasionally by excellent moderne Musick-Masters: and now methodically digested into theyre proper and distinct Keys, for the Base & Treble Violls. [Bassus part only.]

Herein we find a 'Suite of languages.' It begins with a movement headed 'English humor,' which is followed by French, Spanish, Irish, and Scottish, the whole composed by Theo. Lupo. The volume contains 'A Jegg,' by Christopher Coleman, and 'An humour in suite,' by Mr. Cook. Two compositions, 'Saint Peter's Bell,' and 'A Joye' are by John Jenkins, who, according to Anthony à Wood, 'was esteemed the prime composer living in the latter end of the raigne of K. Ch. I, in ye raigne of Oliver and K. Ch. 2,' and 'he was highly valued and admired not only in England, but beyond the seas for his rare compositions, especially Fantazies.'

If 'The Months and Seasons,' pieces of instrumental music by Christopher Simpson (1668), do not appear to have any poetic import, they bear this curious note :—

Thes 4 Bookes were prickt by Mr. John Lillye, who had of mee 5*l*. for the prickinge them 29th of December 1668 : besides my Charge of paper & bindeinge. Ed. Lowe.

Edward Lowe here mentioned was organist successively of Christ Church and of the Chapel Royal, and University Professor of Music.

An interesting volume, by reason of its associations, is a transcript of Corelli's Twelve Sonatas for four-stringed instruments. It contains a note to the following effect :—

These Lessons are the hand writing of old Thomas Britton, the famous musical small-coal man, & used at his Assembly for many years.

May not Handel have turned over these identical pages at some of Thomas Britton's music-makings in the room above his coal-shop at Clerkenwell ? An imposing manuscript—measuring nearly 3 feet across and about 2 feet in depth—is a setting of the 'Benedicite' in the key of B flat, by Henry Purcell, and in his own handwriting. This large folded sheet is signed 'H. P.' No one could challenge the appropriateness of its press mark : it is 'MS. Mus. A1 '! Giovanni Buononcini, the rival of Handel, is best known as a composer of operas, but we find him here, in the Wight collection, as the author of a 'Kyrie eleison' and 'Gloria in excelsis' written for sixteen voices and instruments, the full score bearing his signature. In the way of choice tinkerings we may quote the heading to a manuscript written by Dr. Philip Hayes in 1783 :—

Purcell's Te Deum and Jubilate in D, with additional parts added by Dr. William Boyce : full score as shortened by Phil. Hayes.

The Music School Collection—which has grown from the nucleus of a library provided by Dr. William Heather, the founder of the Professorship of Music in 1626—was transferred by a statute to the Bodleian in 1885. From the excellent summary catalogue prepared by Mr. Falconer Madan, the sub-librarian, we learn that 'the manuscript portion is especially rich in English music from the Restoration to the end of the eighteenth century, including a complete set of Boyce's Odes for the King's Birthday and the New Year, 1775—79. Foreign composers, especially Italian, are well represented.' Among these musical manuscripts are eighteen Masses by various composers—John Tavener, Avery Burton, John Marbeck, Robert Fairfax, W. Rasar, Hugh Aston, Thomas Ashwell, Christopher Tye and others ; a collection of 'In Nomines,' in four and five parts, by English composers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries ; vocal compositions by William Lawes and Orlando Gibbons ; many anthems and services ; collections of rare instrumental music and French and Italian songs.

In regard to musical literature, one's attention is naturally drawn to an invaluable work by that eminent Oxford antiquary and amateur musician, Anthony à Wood (1632-1695). The morocco volume which contains Wood's memoranda is lettered 'Biographical Notes on Musicians,' and its title reads :—

Some materials towards a history of the lives and compositions of all English Musicians drawn up according to alphabetical order by Anthony à Wood.

A few specimens of Wood's industry and quaint form of expression may be given. The first extract from his 'Materials' relates to Tho. Baltzar, who, according to Wood, 'became the most famous Artist for ye Violin yt the world had yet produced.'

Dr. Wilson the Musick Professor, the greatest Judge of Musick yt ever was and a great Humorist did, after he had first of all heard him play, stoop down to Baltzars feet to feel whether he had a Huff on, yt is to see whether he was not a Devill.

The biographical information sometimes takes this form :—

Blagrave (Thomas) of the family of those of Berks, one of the Gentlemen of the chap. of K. Ch. 2. & a player for the most part on the cornet there, & a gentile and a honest man.

Brewer (Thomas) originally a blew-coated-boy of Ch. Ch. Hospital within Newgate in London, taught by the Music Master of the Boyes there on the viol & became excellent for it.

An example of those conceits beloved by old composers is given under the name of Dr. William Child :—

Dr. Will Child did make a vocal composition to An Hymne to the Triune, exprest in A Canon of three parts in one, wch Hymne was made by Tho. Pierce, beginning—

Thou, who when all was into rudeness hurl'd
Bidst it come forth a world.

Wood tells us that one Edward Dyer was 'a Dancing-master who lived in Shoe-Lane neare Holborne in the suburb of Lond. several year's after the restoration of K. Ch. 2d.' Shoe Lane is a very appropriate thoroughfare for a dancing-master to have his dwelling-place, but Holborn and the suburbs of London have long ago parted company.

A Commonwealth funeral is thus described by Wood, the reference being to the interment of John Hilton, organist and parish clerk of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster:—

He died in the time of Oliver, & was buried in the Great Cloysters at Westminster; at wch time the singing at burials being silenced, as popish, the Fraternity of Musitians who intended to sing him to his grave, sang the Anthem in the House over the corps before it went to the church, & kept time on his coffin.

If the Bodleian is not so strong in printed music as some private libraries that could be named, it contains some interesting treasures. It may serve if the sampling begins with a book published eight years after the Library was opened, and that is nearly three centuries ago. Its title reads thus:—

A Musicall Banquet. Furnished with varietie of delicious Ayres, Collected out of the best Authors in English, French, Spanish and Italian.

By Robert Dowland.

London: Printed for Thomas Adams. 1610.

The preface is decidedly more appetising than the title, and too curious not to be quoted in full:—

TO THE READER.

Gentlemen: Finding my selfe not deceived in the hope I had of your kinde entertayning my collected Lute-lessons which I lately set foorth, I am further encouraged to publish unto your censures these Ayres, being collected and gathered out of the labours of the rarest and most judicious Maisters of Musick that either now are or have lately lived in Christendome, whereof some I have purposely sorted to the capacitie of young practioners, the rest by degrees are of greater depth and skill, so that like a careful Confectionary, as neere as might be I have fitted my Banquet for all tastes; if happily I shall be distasted by any, let them know what is brought unto them is drest after the English, French, Spanish, and Italian manner; the assay is taken before, they shall not need to feare poysoning. You Gentlemen and friends that come in good-will, and not as Promooters into a Country Market, to call our viands into question, whatsoever here is, much good may it doe you, I would it were better for you: for the rest I wish their lips such Lettuce as Silenus Asse, or their owne harts would desire.

Thine, Robert Dowland.

The following title furnishes evidence of the 'usuall recreations' in the year 1614:—

A Briefe Discource of the true (but neglected) use of Charact'ring the Degrees, by their Perfection, Imperfection, and Diminution, in Measurable Musicke, against the Common Practise and Custome of these Times. Examples whereof are exprest in the Harmony of 4 Voyces, Concerning the Pleasure of 5 usuall Recreations. 1. Hunting. 2. Hawking. 3. Dauncing. 4. Drinking. 5. Enamouring. By Thomas Ravenscroft, Batchelor of Musicke.

London . . . . 1614.

One of the 'drinking' songs, composed by Ravenscroft, is entitled 'Tosse the pot, let us be merry,' and the first of the 'enamouring' section is a setting, by John Bennet, of 'What seekes thou, foole?'

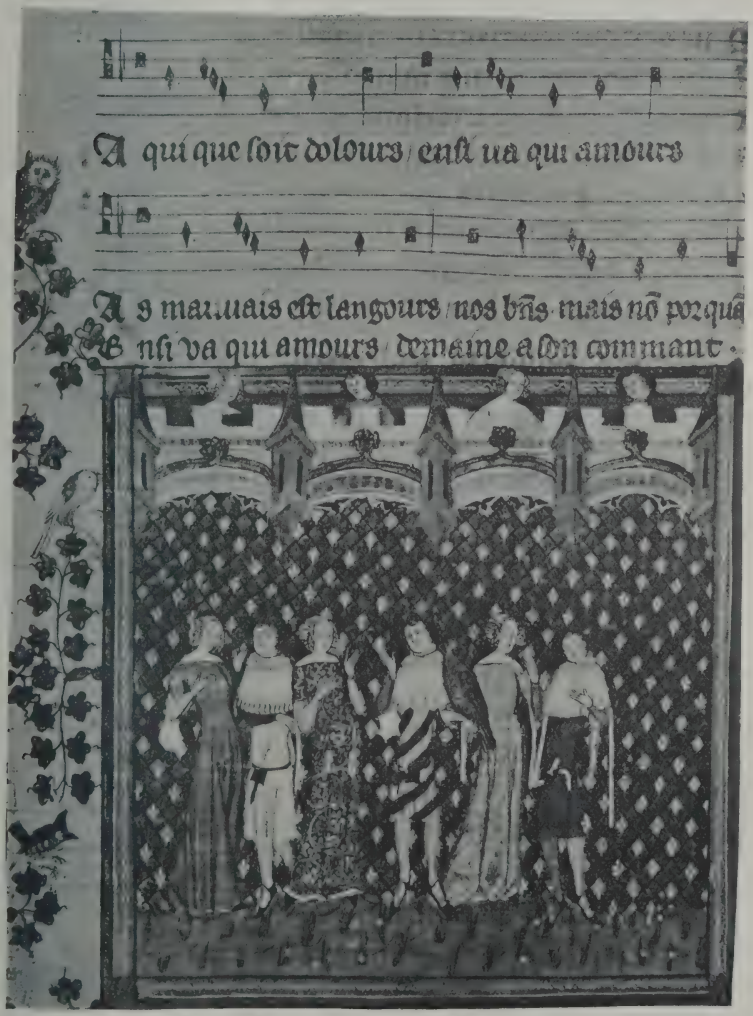
The next book, almost unique in its complete state, strikes one as being of an accommodating kind, as the subjoined designation will show :—

Private Musicke or the First Booke of Ayres and Dialogues. Contayning songs of 4, 5, and 6 parts of several sorts, and being verse and chorus is fit for voyces and viols, and for want of viols they may be performed to either the virginall or lute, where the proficient can play upon the Ground, or for a shift to the Base viol alone. All made and composed according to the rules of art by M.[artin] P.[eerson] Batchelar of Music.

London : Printed by Thos. Snodham 1620.

The dedication is signed 'Martin Peerson and dated from Bassing-Shaw in London this 15 of May, 1620.' The last of the twenty-four pieces in the book is for six voices ; and it is entitled : 'See, see who is heere ?' and bears the following note :—

This song was made for the King and Queenes entertaynment at High-gate on May-day, 1604.



A qui que soit dolours / enst ua qui amours
A s mauuais et langours / nos bns mais nō porqui
E nsi va qui amours / demaine a lon commant

A Bodleian Manuscript of the 14th Century (see pages 719 and 720).

The Restoration called forth this rare book by Edward Lowe, organist of Christ Church, Oxford, and published in that city :—

A short direction for the performance of Cathedral Service. Published for the information of such Persons as are ignorant of it, And shall be call'd to officiate in Cathedrall, or Collegiate churches, where it hath formerly been in use. By E. L.

Oxford . . . . 1661.

The next example deserves to be referred to by reason of its Preface, which tells an oft-told story in a most amusing way:—

Musick's Delight on the Cithren, Restored and Refined to a more Easie and Pleasant Manner of Playing than formerly; And set forth with Lessons A la Mode, being the Choicest of our late new Ayres, Corants, Sarabands, Tunes, and Jiggs. To which is added several New Songs and Ayres to Sing to the Cithren.

By John Playford. Philo-Musicæ.

London: Printed by W. G. and are sold by J. Playford at his Shop in the Temple. 1666.

Preface.

It is observed that of late years all Solemn and Grave Musick is much laid aside, being esteemed too heavy and dull for the light Heels and Brains of this Nimble and wanton Age; Nor is any Musick rendered acceptable, or esteemed by many, but what is presented by Forreigners; Not a City Dame though a Tap-wife, but is ambitious to have her Daughters taught by Mounsieur La Novo Kickshawibus on the Gittar.

Another book, in three volumes, published in Oxford, is entitled:—

Cheerful Ayres or Ballads. First composed for one single Voice and since set for three Voices. By John Wilson, Dr. in Musick. Professor of the same in the University of Oxford.

Oxford: Printed by W. Hall for Ric. Davis.
Anno Dom. M DC LX.

The shortcomings of the printer of this volume are so nicely referred to by Dr. John Wilson, that his words may be quoted as a model of apologetics:—

This being the first essay (for ought we understand) of printing musick that ever was in Oxford, and the printers being unacquainted with such work, hath occasioned the faults hereafter mentioned in this single Book, the greater number whereof are the omission of Moods, which are supplyed in the other two Parts, and will be easily mended with a pen in this. The consideration of what is here premised, with assurance that the other two parts are more correct and a promise of better care in what shall issue from this Presse for the future will (doubtlesse with unprejudic'd Persons) procure pardon for the present Errata.

The following book was also printed in Oxford:—

Musica Oxoniensis. A Collection of Songs (by J. Welldon and R. Goodson) for one or two Voices with the Thorough-Bass. Published by Francis Smith and Peter de Walpergen, Letter Founder, by whom 'twas Cut on Steel, and Cast by the Directions of the Former.

Oxford: Printed by Leon Lichfield for the Undertakers: And are to be sold by the Widow Howell.

Judging from the title-page, one might assume that these songs were of a funereal nature, and that Widow Howell had recently been deprived of her dearly-beloved spouse.

The following book is interesting by reason of the title-page reference to '5 lines.' It is undated, but may be assigned to the opening years of the eighteenth century:—

The Harpsichord Master Improved, containing The most Perfect Rules and Easiest Directions on 5 lines For Learners, With a Choice Collection of the newest and most air'y Lessons With Variety of Passages by Mr. Babel.

To which is Added A Choice Collection of Psalm Tunes As they were Play'd with their Interludes By Mr. Daniel Purcel, Late Organist of St. Andrew Holbourn They Being fit for the Use of all Young Organists.

London: Printed by and for Daniel Wright Musical Instrument Maker next the Sun Tavern the Corner of Brook Street Holbourn and John Young Musical Instrument Maker at the Dolphin and Crown in St. Paul's Church Yard.

These pleasant excursions among the treasures in the Bodleian Library must be brought to a conclusion. Before bidding a reluctant farewell to the subject, we must return to the Music School MSS. This collection includes a large number of exercises written for University degrees by musicians bearing such well-known names as Burney, Callcott, Corfe, Crotch, the two Elveys, William Horsley, E. G. Monk, Ouseley, William Russell and many others. We miss that of S. S. Wesley; but special reference may be made to the two exercises for the degree of Bachelor of Music, both compositions being by Ouseley's successors in the Professorship of Music. One has only to look at the neat penmanship of the first of these manuscripts to discover its author. But here is the title:—

Part of 103rd Psalm. By John Stainer, organist of St. Michael's Church, Tenbury. October 19, 1858.

Attached to the work, which is fully orchestrated (four horns and three trombones), is a programme of its performance at Oxford, on Thursday, June 9, 1859.

The other manuscript is thus described in Mr. Madan's invaluable catalogue:—

Anthem, words from Ps. lx. &c., music by Charles Hubert Hastings Parry, with pencilled criticisms, 1866; for Mus. Bac.

What are the 'pencilled criticisms'? the reader may be disposed to ask. The first is 'all good'; the last, at the end of the exercise, reads: 'All very good indeed, F.A.G.O.' When Sir Frederick Ouseley pencilled this commendation on the Eton boy's manuscript, he little thought that he was setting the seal of his approval to the work of a candidate who would one day worthily occupy the chair of music in the University of Oxford.

For kind help generously rendered in the preparation of this chit-chat article, the best thanks of the writer are due to Mr. T. W. Taphouse, of Oxford, and to Mr. Falconer Madan, sub-librarian of the Bodleian Library.

The first article of this library series—on the Royal Music Library in Buckingham Palace—appeared in The Musical Times of July last. The next will treat of the Fitzwilliam Library, Cambridge.

The Bodleian Library.

MR. CHARLES JENNENS:

THE COMPILER OF HANDEL'S 'MESSIAH.'

Considering that Charles Jennens compiled the word-book of Handel's 'Messiah,' and that he wrote the words for 'Saul,' 'Belshazzar,' and part of 'L'Allegro,' it is really surprising that so little is known of him. One would naturally expect to find a notice of Jennens, even if brief, in 'Grove,' but he is not there; and Rockstro, in his 'Life of Handel,' relegates the few biographical particulars concerning his hero's friend and librettist to a foot-note with its attendant lack of importance. No apology therefore is needed for giving a short account of a man who was so closely associated with Handel.

Charles Jennens, the only surviving son of Charles Jennens, of Gopsall, Leicestershire, was born in the year 1700. He matriculated from Balliol College, Oxford, in 1716, but as he was a non-juror he did not graduate. In 1747, upon succeeding to the estate of Gopsall—his ancestors had been connected with a Birmingham industry—Jennens built the present stately mansion. According to Nichols's 'Leicestershire,' he spent £80,000 on laying out the grounds alone, and, to quote from the same authority, 'the fine chapel is most elegantly pewed and wainscoted with cedar, and an eagle of burnished gold supports the desk which holds the books.' He erected in the grounds of Gopsall an Ionic temple to the memory of his friend Edward Holdsworth, the celebrated Latin poet and classical scholar, and wrote a long Latin inscription in praise of him. Jennens was a bachelor, and lived in a style so princely as to cause him to be nicknamed by his neighbours 'Solyman the Magnificent.' From his London residence, in Great Ormond Street, Bloomsbury, he is said to have been constantly driven to the office of his printer in Red Lion Passage, only a stone's throw, in a chariot and four horses, attended by a quartet of lackeys, one of whom used to remove the oyster shells and other rubbish from the pavement before his magnificent master stepped from his elegant equipage.

These exhibitions of ostentation, if customary a century-and-a-half ago, were not, however, the all-in-all of Jennens's existence. He seems to have been a kind-hearted and generous man. Moreover, he was sincerely devoted to the arts and literature. His friendship for Handel was sincere and abiding. No friend ever stood more stedfastly by the great composer in the midst of all his trials and the attacks of his enemies. These manifestations of regard, if not affection, were warmly reciprocated by Handel, who often visited Gopsall. Jennens compiled for him the librettos of 'Il Moderato' (which he added to the 'L'Allegro e Penseroso' of Milton), 'Saul,' and 'Belshazzar' (originally 'Belteshazzar'). But more important still, he compiled—and one may add in a most admirable manner—the oratorio of the 'Messiah.' Reference is made to the last-named in the first leading article in the present number; but we may quote two letters written by Handel to Jennens concerning the word-books of oratorios, which serve to show the relations between the two men. The first, referring to an unknown work, though it may have been 'Saul,' reads thus:—

London, July 28, 1735.

Sir,

I received your very agreeable letter, with the enclosed Oratorio. I am just going to Tunbridge; yet what I could read of it in haste gave me a great deal of satisfaction. I shall have more leisure time there to read it with all the attention it deserves. There is no certainty of any scheme for next season, but it is probable that something or other may be done, of which I shall take the liberty to give you notice, being extremely obliged to you for the generous concern you show on this account. The Opera of Alcina is a writing out, and shall be sent according to your direction. It is always a great pleasure to me if I have an opportunity to show you the sincere respect with which I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient humble servant,

G. F. Handel.

The next has reference to 'Belshazzar,' and shows Handel's care in maturing his oratorio plans:—

London, October 2, 1744.

Dear Sir,

I received the 3d act with a great deal of pleasure, as you can imagine, and you may believe that I think it a very fine and sublime oratorio, only it is really too long; if I should extend the musick it would last 4 hours and more. I retrenched already a great deal of musick, that I might preserve the poetry as much as I could; yet still it may be shorten'd. The anthems come in very properly; but would not the words, 'Tell it out among the heathens that the Lord is King,' be sufficient for one chorus? The anthem, 'The Lord preserveth all them that love Him, but scattereth abroad all the ungodly' (Vers. and chorus), 'My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord, and let all flesh give thanks unto His holy name, for ever and ever, Amen,' concludes well the oratorio.

I remain, with all possible gratitude and respect, Sir, your most obliged and most humble servant,

George Frideric Handel.

In the latter part of his life Jennens very foolishly set himself to issue tinkered versions of Shakespeare's plays. But his memory is preserved in his association with Handel in four of the master's productions, of which the 'Messiah' is the chief. He died, unmarried, November 20, 1773. His library and a large collection of works of art he bequeathed to his relative William Penn Assheton Curzon (an ancestor of Earl Howe) and the Earl of Aylesford.

These notes on Mr. Jennens may be concluded with an extract from a funeral sermon preached on him by the Rev. George Kelly, Junr., at Twycross, January 2, 1774:—

As long as the Love of Taste and genuine Harmony prevail, so long should his Memory meet with a due Regard for that judicious Arrangement of Words we find in the sacred Performance of the Messiah: to this if we add the Abilities of an inimitable Master of the Science, we cannot sufficiently applaud; a Performance in which the Mind exerts its highest Faculties, and soars aloft beyond this Scene of Things; in which all the irregular Passions and Disquietudes of the human Breast are hushed and softened into Peace, since it reanimates the true Spirit of Devotion, and bids the Soul be wrapped up in the Praises and Contemplations of its God.

The portrait of Charles Jennens, which forms one of our Special Supplements, has been photographed and reproduced from the original at Gopsall expressly for The Musical Times by the kind and special permission of Earl Howe, the lineal descendant of Handel's old friend. We believe that this is the first time a portrait of Mr. Jennens has been made public.

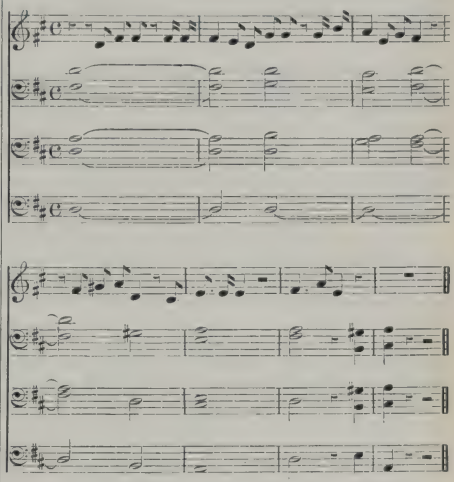
The first performance of Professor Prout's new edition of the 'Messiah' is announced to take place at Queen's Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 12th inst. The solo vocalists will be Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. W. Frye Parker is to lead the orchestra, Dr. W. H. Cummings accompanying the recitatives secco on the pianoforte, while Professor Prout will conduct the performance. The chorus will number 100 carefully-selected voices,—25 to each part—and the band is to consist of 65 players, thus restoring, approximately, the balance of chorus and orchestra customary in the time of Handel. Moreover, the chorus is to be placed in front of the orchestra, a drastic reversal of the existing custom. The performance will be under the auspices of the Royal Society of Musicians, instituted in 1738 and to which Handel bequeathed the sum of £1,000, and the occasion should be one of great interest to musicians and, indeed, to the general public.

The manner of accompanying Recitativo secco has varied from time to time. In Handel's day the chords were sprinkled on the harpsichord, and one need not possess an abundance of grey hairs to remember the scrape which the leading violoncellist and contrabassist of the orchestra used to get into so far as regards their instruments, in the Costa days. In recent years the organ has been used for the instrumental support to the voices, but at the approaching performance of Professor Prout's new edition of the 'Messiah' the pianoforte is to discharge that duty. The following, from the important Mendelssohn collection of Mr. W. T. Freemantle, of Rotherham, is part of a manuscript in the handwriting of the composer of the 'Elijah.' It is the first ('Behold! a Virgin shall conceive') of the seven 'unaccompanied' recitatives in the 'Messiah,' all of which are similarly treated; and as the copy bears the stamp of the Gewandhaus concerts, Leipzig, and shows traces of having been much thumbed, it was doubtless frequently in use in Mendelssohn's day. The scoring, for two violoncellos and a double-bass, is the same as that adopted by Mendelssohn in the recitatives in 'Israel in Egypt,' which he edited for the defunct Handel Society:—



Professor Niecks has, with his usual zeal, arranged a very interesting quartet of recitals to be given in the Music Class-Room of Edinburgh University during the coming season, beginning on the 10th inst. The subjects selected by the Reid professor for practical illustration are:—

1. French violin music from Senaillé to Rode, interspersed with French chansons, &c.
2. British-Irish harpsichord and pianoforte music from the 16th to the 20th century.
3. Vocal solo and quartet music, with and without pianoforte accompaniment.
4. Chamber music for pianoforte and bowed and wind instruments.

The prospectus of the eighth season of the Winter Symphony Concerts at Bournemouth—given under the auspices of the Corporation and ably directed by Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun.—maintains the high level of artistic interest and importance of similar previous documents. British composers figure largely in the scheme, and the fortunate dwellers in Bournemouth will not only hear a good deal of native music, but enjoy the privilege of seeing not a few front-rank composers in the flesh. At the concert on the 9th ult. the first hearing was accorded to a concert overture entitled 'In May,' by Mr. Tobias Augustus Matthay, the well-known professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music, and the work appeared to give much pleasure to the audience. We give the programme annotation, by Mr. Cuthbert Hawley, of Mr. Matthay's 'In May' overture:—

In reality this work is a symphonic poem, though the form is that of an overture. It bears the dedication to the composer's master, the late Sir Arthur Sullivan. The key is E major, and the time 3-4. A very charming figure for the horns will be noticed in the introduction, which is of a quiet, pastoral character. The second subject is a very important melody, as most of the musical structure is built up round it, and it is developed to a great extent. The 'working out' section is constructed, at the start, out of the first bar of the second subject, with an added bar suggested a little way back by the 'cellos and basses. After full treatment of the first and second subjects the recapitulation begins, and with gradually increasing tempo works up to an effective and brilliant coda.

Present-day composers do not, as a rule, hide their light under a bushel, or put on the cloak of anonymity. But in regard to English music and musicians the preference of the foreigner is an old, old story, even though the methods of furthering its interests vary as the years roll on. An amusing example of what may be termed the anonymous-cum-sarcastic method is to be found in a composition entitled:—

A set of Easy Lessons for the Harpsichord. Dedicated to the public. Opera Trentesima Prima.

London: Printed for and sold by Joseph Hill, Musical Instrument Maker, at the Harp and Flute, in the Hay Market. Price 2s. 6d.

TO THE PUBLIC.

At a time when performances of this nature every day appear with pompous dedications to some illustrious personages who are willing to pay very dear for a little flattery; or with a long list of Right Honourable, &c., &c., subscribers, procured by the methods usual on such occasions: You will naturally ask, why this work is alone addressed to you, and the Author's name concealed?

In answer to the first question, your own sagacity will lead you to conclude, either that the Author has no friends among the great, or that he is unwilling to trouble those he flatters himself are so sincerely.

In reply to the second, he begs leave to inform you that prudence absolutely forbids him to discover himself at all. For, should he be an Italian, the German masters will oppose him: should he be a German, the Italians will combine against him; but should he be suspected to be an Englishman, Italians, Germans, nay Englishmen themselves, will attack him on all sides at once, and fashion with her votaries (most of the people of fashion) join their forces to run him down.

To you, therefore, an anonymous author presents his performance, assuring himself, that if, after a fair perusal, it is found to have any merit in it, as good harmony, good air, agreeable taste, invention rather new (for that it should be quite new is impossible, after the millions of divisions that have been run in music), you will give it that proper encouragement which it is in your power only to bestow. Begging then a truce with connoisseurs (giving defiance to the critics, and claiming your protection), he is your most devoted humble servant,

J. M.

These 'Easy Lessons,' which are really Sonatas, may have been composed by John Marsh, an amateur composer (1752-1828); or James Marshall, an organist in the Midlands (born 1770). These names are the only ones that we can recall by way of elucidating the mysterious initials 'J. M.'

'From The Times of 1802' often furnishes pleasant reading day by day in the columns of the leading journal. Now and then the reprint is of some matter of musical interest, as, for instance, on the 1st ult., when we read the following, under the heading 'Drury Lane Theatre'—

So enchanting a combination of sounds as those which characterize The Beggar's Opera, the performance of last night, in vain shall we look for, among the refinements of science, or the mazy intricacies of modern composition. The melodies with which it abounds seem to have been caught by simplicity from the voice of nature; and they appeal with irresistible force to the soul. Mrs. Mountain, in Polly, appears to have every requisite for giving interest to the character. That gentle timidity which is so strongly contrasted with the boldness and assurance of Lucy, she is of all others most qualified to represent; and her voice is, perhaps, more appropriate than that of any other Performer on the stage. Nothing could exceed the manner in which she acquitted herself in the air of "Cease your Funning." She displayed just sufficient science to improve that beautiful melody without destroying it. The audience were unanimous in encoring her. In the Duet with Macheath, of "The Miser thus a Shilling saves," she exhibited equal pathos and tenderness. In short, she sung every Air allotted to her so divinely, that Apollo might have been proud to have attuned his lyre to her.

Kelly's Macheath has a whimsicality of manner savouring more of the flash-man than the fine gentleman; while the spirit and fire of Miss De Camp keeps our attention tremblingly alive to the fate of her hero. Of the rest of the gang, the less that's said the better.

Bannister's Philpot, in the Farce of The Citizen, is certainly one of his best characters. In the washing scene he is ever certain of wringing applause from the Audience.

The italics are in the original: to alter them would be mangling the jokes.

The name of Richard Strauss is gradually becoming known in England. This most modern of modern composers is generally regarded as a serious musician, but he apparently does not disdain a joke. His song 'Wenn' (Op. 31, No. 2) begins in E flat and concludes in the key of E, a tonal peculiarity which would have shocked old-world musicians. But at the end of this song the composer has added the following foot-note:—

> Should any singers think of singing this song while the nineteenth century is still in existence, the Composer would advise them to transpose it from this point, a half-tone lower (i.e., into E flat), so that the composition may thus end in the key in which it began!!!

So far, so good. But the nineteenth century is passed, and Herr Strauss has not furnished us with any suggestions as to twentieth-century procedure. This is a progressive age, with a tendency for everything to go up. Therefore, in 1902, why not end half a tone higher, in F? Further excursions in this tonality field might have far-reaching results—e.g., a piece beginning in the key of F, and ending in B. Should any composer fail to reach this ideal, it would be quite easy to say to him: 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try tritone.'

That characteristic British institution, and one that more or less affects the constitution—a dinner, is to form the final function, or funeral feast, of the Coronation choir. The members have in this manner decided to entertain Sir Frederick Bridge, at the Holborn Restaurant, on the 28th inst., when the Right Hon. George Wyndham, M.P., will occupy the chair. The occasion is sure to be as interesting as it will certainly be unique in the history of English Coronation music.

Readers in various parts of the country are kind enough to furnish us with cuttings from local newspapers which tickle their fancy. Three specimens may be given. The first reads :—

Tenth anniversary of ————'s death. Ever remembered by his niece and adopted daughter, Mrs. ————, orchestral pianiste, Miners' Theatre.

It may be assumed that the most frequented part of the Miners' Theatre is the pit.

Here is the next: it hails from N.B., and deserves to be N.B. :—

Martin's Jubilee Te Deum was sung to the tune of St. Paul.

How very appropriate!

Lastly, there came, like the wise men, from the East, mention of a work entitled :—

'Alexander Bolus.'

This is enough to bowl us over.

Country conductor, rehearsing his farewell benefit concert: 'Gentlemen, we will start with "God save the King," and I'll beat four in a bar.'!

A reproduction of the fine portrait of Handel, by Hudson, preserved at Gopsall, and specially photographed for The Musical Times by the kind permission of Earl Howe, will appear as one of the Supplements in our next issue, together with an illustrated article on Wells Cathedral.

THE SHEFFIELD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.)

The Sheffield Chorus—unrivalled.
Dr. Henry Coward—the master chorus-master.
Mr. Henry J. Wood—a successful Festival conductor.
Sheffield—in the forefront of Musical Festivals.

This quartet of indisputable facts may serve as leit motiven in the following account of the recent music-making held in Steelopolis; it took place in the Albert Hall on the first three days of last month.

'Elijah,' following the National Anthem, opened this, the third Festival. Mendelssohn's familiar oratorio provided every opportunity for the display of those splendid qualities which distinguish the Sheffield chorus. Magnificent voices admirably trained, attack, vigour, refinement, and, above all, intelligence and poetic feeling, combine to produce that rare blend, made only in Sheffield, which has no other hall-mark than unsurpassable. The hearts of these singers and the art they love are in their work, and the result is a veritable feast of song, overwhelming in its splendid achievement. The choir is even better than that of the last Festival, three years ago, which is saying a great deal. If I specially mention the altos, with (pace Dr. Coward) their grand, motherly, but not grandmotherly tone, it is because they thoroughly deserve full marks plus honours for the lovely quality of their sympathetic voices. To make detailed reference to the many points of excellence throughout this memorable performance of 'Elijah' would soon exhaust all available adjectives. Mention must, however, be made of the exquisite rendering of the quartet, 'Cast thy burden,' sung from a distance in the region of the organ. These simple strains were rendered by four voices selected from the chorus with such devotional fervour and chaste expression as to cause one's heart-strings to vibrate with an emotion that words cannot express. The music assigned to the Youth was sung by a member of the chorus, Miss Eva Rich, a young lady who possesses a beautiful voice, which will probably be heard in London and elsewhere before very long, as, indeed, it deserves to be. A special word of commendation is the just due of Mr. Henry J. Wood, on his first appearance as a festival conductor, for the pains he had evidently taken in rehearsing the orchestral accompaniments of 'Elijah.' In what a slovenly and laissez faire style they are often performed! Some of Mr. Wood's devices may be open to question; but better by far have new readings than sink into the traditional rut of cold formality and slip-shod interpretation. Madame Ella Russell, Miss Edith Kirkwood, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies—who specially distinguished himself in the part of the Prophet—were the solo vocalists, while all the quartets were sung by voices selected from the chorus—a suggestion, I understand, due to Mr. Wood.

The evening concert opened with a novelty composed by Dr. Coward expressly for the Festival, the musical romance entitled 'Gareth and Linet,' the libretto, by Mr. F. H. Kirk, founded on Sir Thomas Malory's classic 'Gareth and Lynette,' which students of Tennyson know full well. In selecting this subject for musical treatment, and in the composition thereof, Dr. Coward evidently had his beloved chorus well in mind. The chief interest of the work lies in the choral numbers, and one can easily trace the vigorous personality of the clever chorus-master in these vociferous strains. Madame Ella Russell, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. David Bispham as soloists did all that was required of them, and it is needless to say that the choir sang their portion of the work con amore, and that the choruses were given with all possible effect. Dr. Coward, who conducted his own work, received at the close an ovation from his faithful singers and fellow-citizens which must have been exceedingly gratifying to him. The performance of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody was a magnificent display of orchestral virtuosity and rhythmic exhilaration; it reflected the greatest credit upon Mr. Henry J. Wood and his excellent players, and the audience were not slow in showing approval of their combined efforts in applause again and again renewed. After Madame Ella Russell had sung Weber's 'Ocean! thou mighty monster,' the concert was brought to a triumphant conclusion by a strenuous rendering of Brahms's rarely-heard and noble 'Triumphlied,' with Mr. David Bispham as soloist.

Expectation ran high amongst the huge audience, gathered together from far and near, on Thursday morning (October 2), when Dr. Edward Elgar stepped on to the platform to conduct his 'Dream of Gerontius.' No feeling of disappointment was experienced as one beauty after another revealed itself under the composer's careful direction. It is true, as a mere matter of record, that in one treacherous place the chorus were faulty in their intonation, but may not this be regarded as an accident due to atmospheric conditions, to nervousness, and to the exacting demands made upon the singers by the difficulty of the music? Such risks should be guarded against, even if the composer has to make some modifications in his score. But as if to more than atone for this shortcoming—which no one could have regretted more than the sensitive chorus-singers themselves—the Demons' chorus was rendered with such fiendish snarlishness as to be almost too realistic of sardonic surroundings. (One has just the feeling while listening to this section that the scene might better be depicted orchestrally.) And who will forget that glorious high B natural of the sopranos near the end of Part I.? Mr. John Coates as Gerontius repeated the success he had made at Worcester; and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies impressively sang the music assigned to the bass voice. Miss Muriel Foster worthily replaced Miss Marie Brema (absent through illness) by her rendering of the Angel music in Part II. This young singer is a true artist, and the possessor of a beautiful voice. Her rapid rise in public estimation is well deserved, and her refined singing always gives pleasure. Chorus and orchestra spared no pains to do justice to a work that has become epoch-making in the history of English music.

Following the Prelude to Act III. of 'Lohengrin' and Beethoven's Violin Concerto (soloist, M. Ysaye) came Dr. Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' a setting of some fine verses by Mr. Arthur C. Benson. This work was to have been sung by the Sheffield choir at the gala opera performance in London as part of the Coronation celebration, but the King's illness necessitated the abandonment of the function, to the intense disappointment of the Sheffield singers. No traces of this disappointment were, however, noticeable in their interpretation of Dr. Elgar's melodious strains. The rendering of the unaccompanied chorus 'Daughter of ancient Kings' proved to be the perfection of refined chorus-singing. The purity of tone, the ideal enunciation of the words—e.g., 'purest, stateliest'—no less than the perfect blending of the voices, reached the highest points of choral technique. The final chord of this movement contains a low C for the basses; this note, sung softly and of good tone and absolutely in tune, produced a wonderful effect —'successful soundings of the deep C's,' as one of the audience nautically observed. The principals in the 'Ode' were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies; and Dr. Elgar conducted a performance which must have afforded him as much pleasure as his music gave to the audience.

Upon reassembling in the evening we were favoured with the 'Wandrer's Sturmlied' of Richard Strauss, performed for the first time in England. This setting of Goethe's words, for six-part chorus and orchestra, is an early work of the most modern of German composers, and hardly represents the true Strauss. Contrast, not unwelcome, was afforded in Mozart's delicious G minor Symphony, in which Mr. Wood gave evidence of his genius as a conductor of orchestral music. The work was most beautifully played. Strauss was again in evidence when two songs from his Opus 33, entitled 'Hymnus' and 'Pilgers Morgenlied,' were sung by Mr. Bispham. Dr. Cowen then conducted his setting of Collins's 'Ode to the Passions,' a work which has attained great popularity, and to which all concerned did ample justice. A selection from 'Israel in Egypt' concluded the day's music. Suffice it to say that in old Handel's stately strains Sheffield again triumphed gloriously.

The last day of the Festival brought with it an impressive performance of Dvorák's melodious and devotionally-charged 'Stabat Mater.' Its interpretation gave proof that the Sheffield singers are masters (and mistresses) of various styles. Versatility goes hand in hand with efficiency in this Yorkshire stronghold of choral song. The poetic insight of these musical folk manifested itself in every bar of the music so admirably written for the chorus by the Bohemian composer. The soloists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies—seemed to have caught the artistry of the choir, with the result that the performance took a very high place in the Festival achievements. Bach's noble motet for five voices, 'Jesu, priceless Treasure,' followed. One would indeed be sorry to miss hearing so typical a work by the great Cantor, but it is a moot point whether too much had not been placed on the shoulders (or rather the voices) of the choir. Nevertheless, they attacked the difficult music with their never-failing enthusiasm, if not with results quite satisfactory. Mr. J. W. Phillips, the able organist of the Festival, accompanied the motet on the organ, but the ventil system of the instrument doubtless caused him some anxious moments.

The second Festival novelty was presented after the luncheon hour, in the Rhapsody for solo, chorus and orchestra, entitled 'Meg Blane,' words by the late Robert Buchanan, music by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor. Folks have been wont to shake their heads over the productions of the young African composer since his 'Hiawatha,' and to recall the simile of rockets and sticks. But in 'Meg Blane' one gladly welcomes the return of Coleridge-Taylor to his former field of declamatory utterance and vigorous music that has in it the true ring of lasting strength. The sea-picture is one that might appeal to a composer of imaginative temperament without bringing out all that is in him; but Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has certainly risen to the occasion and produced a work that forms a fitting companion to the 'Hiawatha' music and one that is likely to find favour with choral societies. The solo part was well sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn, and the composer, who conducted his work, met with a very cordial reception and was recalled at the close. Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony concluded an interesting concert.

The final concert of this tournament of song opened, on Friday evening, with a symphonic poem for organ and orchestra by Dr. Fritz Volbach, of Mainz, concerning whom some biographical particulars were given in last month's Musical Times. This imposing composition, re-written specially for this Festival, has for its title and subject-matter 'Easter.' The important organ part was well played by Mr. J. W. Phillips, and Mr. H. Verbrugghen, the able leader of the orchestra, gave an excellent rendering of the solo violin part. At the close Dr. Volbach, led on to the platform by Mr. Wood, received a typical Yorkshire greeting. A duet (sung by Madame Ella Russell and Mr. Ben Davies) from the unfinished opera 'Gunlöd' by the late Peter Cornelius, the 'Parsifal' prelude and Sir Hubert Parry's noble setting of 'Blest pair of Sirens' (conducted by the composer) also formed part of this final programme, which concluded with a brilliant performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The two choral works put the Sheffield choristers on their mettle, and gave further proof of their staying power and unsurpassable singing. Even after the exacting demands made upon them for five consecutive days, their voices seemed fresher than ever, and the tone was simply gorgeous.

Finally, Mr. Henry J. Wood deserves the highest praise for his generalship and alertness in the arduous duties of conductor—duties which he discharged with conspicuous success and artistic earnestness. Of Dr. Coward it is sufficient to say that he is the Coward of old, whose consummate chorus-mastership has practically made the Sheffield Festival what it is. The courteous attention of the officials, a marked feature of this music-making, calls for full acknowledgment; in this connection special mention must be made of the honorary secretaries, Mr. E. Willoughby Firth, J.P., and Mr. Noel W. Burbidge, and also of the gentlemen who officiated as Press stewards.

ECHOES OF THE FESTIVAL.

This was Sheffield Musical Festival No. 3, and the chorus consisted of 333 voices.

Sopranos	91
Altos	78
Tenors	73
Basses	91
	333

A few members, not included in the above figures, were unavoidably prevented from attending the performances. The innuendo in a London newspaper that the Sheffield choir had 'a sneaking affection for penny novelettes' is a cheap journalistic method of conveying an entirely false impression. The story that these refined singers were 'all cutlers' is equally wide of the truth. The personnel of the chorus comprised all ranks, and their 'daily rounds,' from an official list supplied to us, cover an exceedingly interesting range of avocations—e.g., clergyman, schoolmaster, warder, engineer, police serjeant, confectioner, organist, accountant, and tailor. Among the ladies—the majority of whom were of 'no occupation,' except that of gracing the homes of their husbands and fathers—were several professional musicians and board-school teachers. No fewer than sixty-one choral rehearsals were held, and of these many of the members missed only three. Mrs. J. H. Lawson, co-hon. Secretary of the choir with Mr. Lawson, has only missed one rehearsal during the whole of the three festivals—surely a record attendance. This genial couple may be regarded as the father and mother of the world-famed Sheffield chorus.

The unfortunate lapsus of the choir in the 'Dream of Gerontius' furnished not a few lines of newspaper 'copy.' One London journal said that this defection did not occur at Worcester, a very specious form of criticism, as that particular section of Dr. Elgar's work was not sung at the faithful city! If only the chorus had had the same opportunity of publicly proclaiming the Festival slips made in the Press! Here are two specimens from widely-circulated newspapers, one Metropolitan, the other issued 'up North.'

The singing in Richard Strauss's 'Sturmlied' and Cowen's 'Ode to the Passions' was not altogether satisfactory. Both were superbly sung by Mr. Bispham.

Really! But rather contradictory. And Mr. Bispham must be a wonderful man o' pairts to be able to sing six or even four parts all at once! The other quotation, from 'up North,' is of the 'mixed-up' species:—

The final concert brought forward two compositions by Mr. Edward German little known in this country, a symphonic poem called 'Easter' by Volbach, and a duet from Peter Cornelius's unfinished opera 'Gunlöd.'

The name of Mr. Edward German was not in the Festival scheme.

The music that so charmed the former Shah of Persia during his visit to London some years ago found no place in the Sheffield scheme. The orchestra did not tune in public or to the organ, but to a tuning-fork in the band-room. It is a moot point, however, whether the old system is not, on the whole, more satisfactory.

Dr. Otto Lessmann, of Berlin, who was present at the Festival, has recorded his impressions at some length in his journal the Allgemeine Musikzeitung, from which we venture to make an extract relating to the chorus:—

The performances of the Sheffield chorus revealed the artistic influence of a chorus-master of the first rank. What Dr. Henry Coward achieved in this respect surpassed, apart from some minor matters, everything I have ever heard from English choirs. Fulness and nobility of tone, excellent treatment of the words, and a capacity for expression directed by the finest taste, distinguished his choir consisting of over 300 young, fresh voices with especially fine basses; and through the praises of this choir must necessarily resound the praise of the choirmaster. To be sure, a doubt cannot be suppressed that in really difficult tasks, such as Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' offers in its a capella movements, the powers even of this choir, as two years ago of that of Birmingham, gave out; but the choruses in the second part of 'Elijah,' a number of choruses from 'Israel in Egypt,' the 'Hymn of Praise,' Hubert Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' were sung with much brilliancy, fire, and technical finish, as I have perhaps never heard equalled anywhere else.

Since the last Festival (in 1899) the pitch of the organ in the Albert Hall has been lowered at a cost of £800, which expense has been generously defrayed by Mr. E. Willoughby Firth. At a supper given by this hospitable gentleman, the Lord Mayor of Sheffield (Alderman George Senior, J.P.) made an amusing and interesting speech on the philanthropic aspect of music in Sheffield. This important matter is referred to on page 732.

OLD MUSICAL TIMES.

Old newspapers—even their advertisement columns—how full of interest they are! No historian, whatever his particular bent, should fail to work this rich vein of information. In searching for anything relating to Handel in the London journals of 1741—the year of the composition of the 'Messiah'—we came across not a few curious advertisements which we have transcribed for the benefit, if not the amusement of our readers. The first extract bears date February 18, 1741:—

For the benefit of Mr. Messing. At the Devil-Tavern, Temple Bar, to-morrow will be performed A serenata, in which will be introduced several pieces on a new-invented instrument, call'd the Corno Cromatico. Never heard in publick before.

This instrument, while probably belonging to the ventil species of the horn tribe, could not have been the valve-horn (Corno cromatico) of the present day. This, according to Professor Prout, was not invented till the first quarter of the last century, and was first introduced into the orchestra by Halévy, in 'La Juive,' 1835. The horn and the trumpet are in the same neighbourhood, and we find an interesting concert-advertisement of Handel's famous trumpet-player:—

For the benefit of Mr. Valentine Snow. At the new Theatre in the Hay-market this day will be perform'd a grand concert of vocal and instrumental music by the best hands. . . . likewise the Dead March in Saul, to be perform'd with the Sackbuts.

In addition to listening to the Dead March 'perform'd with the Sackbuts,' the audience were privileged to hear Mrs. Arne sing in Handel's 'St. Cecilia's Day.' Handel may have conducted this Snow concert, which, appropriately enough, took place in the depth of winter. Two advertisements, unfortunately not very informing, relate to 'the Swan Society of Musick in Cornhill,' and 'the Castle Society of Musick, in Paternoster Row'; doubtless these were private clubs for the practice of the art. A Mrs. Nugent, in announcing a concert, stated that she 'once more humbly begs the Indulgence of the Town, humbly hoping the Honour of the Ladies Protections, and the Favour of the Army.' Humble Mrs. Nugent!

The publication announcements include the following instance of cheap music, purchasable 161 years ago:—

This day is published, price one half-penny, a song called Blow, blow thou winter wind, with a curious copper-plate, adapted to the subject, with four songs out of Comus. To be had of T. Harper, in Poppings-Court, Fleet Street; and by the persons who carry the News Papers.

The various Gardens of Entertainment in and about London are frequently advertised. At 'Mary-le-bon, altered and improved,' it is announced that 'The organ [by Bridge] will be play'd to the Gentry, who shall please to breakfast in the Gardens, every morning during the fine weather, from ten o'clock to one.' In what appears to be an 'inspired' paragraph we get a peep at Cuper's (or Cupar's) Gardens, run by Widow Evans:—

We hear that at Cuper's Gardens last night, among several favourite pieces of musick, Mr. Handell's Fine Musick, with the fireworks, as originally perform'd in the Opera of Atalanta, was received with great applause by a numerous audience.

Widow Evans subsequently announced that she had 'added to the Band of Musick several curious hands,' and that 'the usual favourite pieces will be likewise perform'd, viz.—The overture of Saul, the songs in As you like it, Blow, blow, the Cuckow, with the Chorus's &c., and the new organ concerto, &c.' An advertisement of a freakish nature reads:—

To be sold a very good pennyworth, an organ of seven stops and a very agreeable tone.

If we may turn to matters not strictly musical, it would appear that marriages in St. Paul's Cathedral were formerly not so exclusive as they are now. The following announcement is not the only one of its kind which refers to the charms and fortune of the bride; indeed, the amount of the fair one's dowry, in amounts by no means to be despised, is frequently stated.

On Tuesday last was married at St. Paul's Cathedral, Mr. Jo Griffith, Master of the Rose Tavern in Cheapside, to Miss Lucy Quaito, a young Lady of Beauty, Merit and Fortune; immediately after the new-married Couple set out for Enfield.

A wood-cut of a curious-looking 'Travelling chaise without horses' foreshadows the ubiquitous motor-car of to-day. Its propelling power is not stated, but the proprietor announced that—

At the desire of any gentlemen or ladies he will run the new machine, which is now entirely finished and beautified for travelling, one journey one day in a week to Canterbury, Windsor &c . . . . . or to any other city or town where the road is good, and don't exceed a hundred miles, carrying two at one time, besides the boy that guides it, and one servant.

The last extract from these old newspapers of 1741 speaks for itself:—

TO BE SOLD.

A very clever black negroe boy, aged about seventeen, and has had the small pox.

MUNICIPAL MUSIC-MAKINGS.

The Lord Mayor of Sheffield (Alderman George Senior, J.P.), in the course of a speech during the recent Festival, made an interesting reference to the philanthropic aspect of music. He instanced the bands in the parks, and the open-air concerts in the slums of the city of which he is the official head. In 1893, as Chairman of the Parks Committee, Alderman Senior asked the City Council to sanction an expenditure of £30, in order to provide bands to play in four parks. 'We got the £30,' he said, 'and we spent £60!' The scheme developed so rapidly and so successfully—the Committee in the most daring manner always spending about double the sum authorised by the City Council!—that in 1896 a Bands Sub-Committee was formed, and ex-Inspector W. T. Bestwick, who had recently retired from the City Police Band after twenty years' service, was engaged as manager and chief bandmaster of the performances. A competition among the bands was also instituted, and proved to be a great success. The public showed their appreciation of the efforts of Alderman Senior and his Committee by an increased attendance, the crowds having become enormous on fine evenings.

It is not necessary to give detailed particulars of the intervening years, and the rising tide of popularity attending the movement, but reference may be made to the report of the Superintendent of the band, Mr. W. T. Bestwick, on the season just concluded. A copy of this, through the courtesy of the Lord Mayor of Sheffield, lies before us. The bands have given 289 performances in the parks and open spaces of Sheffield, and the estimated attendance of the public has been 1,208,660 persons. Ten bands were engaged. The total cost of the performances is set down at £912 10s. 1d. (Compare this amount with the £60 spent in 1893!) The Bands Benefit Concert—in Weston Park, on August 26, attracted no fewer than 60,000 people. The ten bands played in combination — first in sections, and finally all together under Mr. Bestwick's conductorship. Moreover, on Sunday afternoon, September 21, the bands gave two performances, in Endcliffe woods and Firth Park, in aid of the Medical Charities of the city. At the former rendezvous the Lord Mayor presided, and at the latter Mr. Councillor Alfred Taylor, these gentlemen thus identifying themselves with the movement in a practical way. 50,000 people attended this Sunday music-making in aid of the sick and suffering of Sheffield, and a collection, 'made in sheets at the gates,' amounted to the sum of £86 1s. 7d. The selection of music performed on this occasion was exceedingly eclectic, e.g., grand selections from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and Verdi's 'Attila,' in addition to choruses from the 'Messiah' and 'Creation,' and the hymn 'Rock of Ages (with singing)'—according to the programme.

A still further and much to be commended development of 'bands in the parks'—to adopt the designation of the genial Lord Mayor of Sheffield—must be recorded. And here we cannot do better than quote from the 1902 Report of Mr. Bestwick, presented to the Bands Sub-Committee:—

The Court and Alley concerts organised by your Committee for the first time this season were given in 12 different localities in the working-class quarters of the city, and were a source of great pleasure and enjoyment to a large number of poor people, who greatly appreciated the kindness of the Committee in providing such good music and singing in their midst. The total cost of the 12 concerts amounted to £48 6s. 11d. The attendance of the public at all the concerts would be at least 10,000. The concerts were a great success. All the artists engaged performed their part of the programmes in a very efficient manner, and were frequently encored. The people were very orderly, and often asked for the concerts to be repeated. At each concert a different member of the City Council presided, and their presence was much appreciated by the people.

From the remarks of the Lord Mayor already referred to, it is evident that the initiation of these concerts in the alleys, slums and crofts of Sheffield has been fully justified. In unfavourable weather a covered van shelters the performers, so that a singer or violinist need not be incommoded while giving pleasure to his audience.

The success that has attended this movement has so completely answered the effort made, that the Committee intend to extend the area and increase the number of places to be visited. The work of providing the music in the parks, &c., has been in the hands of a Sub-Committee consisting of Councillors Richard Langley (as chairman), Alfred Taylor, Joseph Clarkson, W. F. Wardley, and W. T. Wheatley, and the success that has been achieved has been mainly through their efforts and owing to the very great interest and hard work they put into the matter.

The Lord Mayor of Sheffield has a deep love for the people and, moreover, he holds a very strong opinion as to the healthy influence of music upon all classes of the community, and believes that it brings sunshine into lives spent in hard toil often under dreary surroundings. The spread of the philanthropic cultivation of the art is a most important factor in the musical education of this country; and while we wish the Lord Mayor and his colleagues a hearty 'God speed' in the excellent work that has been laid to their charge, we hope that Sheffield—which has so suddenly risen in musical importance—may have many imitators in so good a cause.

Church and Organ Music.

OBIIT SUNDAY AT WINDSOR.

The scene witnessed from the organ loft in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on Sunday morning, September 28, was an exceedingly picturesque one. From out the north choir aisle there came forth a procession—first the choir of the Chapel, then twelve of the Military Knights of Windsor in full uniform, the clergy bringing up the rear. The brilliant sunshine which streamed through the nave windows intensified the contrast between the white robes of the choristers and the scarlet regimentals of the veteran warriors, as they slowly wended their way to the west door and then up the centre of the sunlit nave into the rich-coloured and banner-hung choir of the Royal sanctuary. The words of the processional hymn, specially written for this Obiit Sunday service, are by Mr. A. C. Benson, who has the gift of writing sacred verse free from the senseless sentimentality which characterizes so many modern hymns. We give the first and third stanzas:—

God of glory, King of nations,
Giver of all gifts divine,
Thou didst once in Zion's city
Set thine own appointed shrine;
Make with us Thy secret dwelling,
Make this sacred Temple thine.

. . . . . .

Still through carven arches pealing
Thrills and swells the solemn song:
Soaring vault and storied banner,
Sacred voice and listening throng,
Witness that Thou dwell'st in beauty,
Witness that Thy love is strong.

The music, by Sir Walter Parratt, is melodious and dignified, qualities too often lacking in such productions, and the final top E in the melody, following a delicious suspension as the cadence is approached, rings through the building with splendid effect.

'But what is Obiit Sunday at St. George's Chapel, Windsor?' The answer may best be given from the printed 'Form of service,' which is headed thus:—

IN COMMENDATIONIBUS BENEFACTORUM.

'Ad cujusque termini finem Commendatio fiat Fundatoris, aliorumque clarorum vivorum, quorum beneficentia Collegium locupletatur.'

FORM OF SERVICE
FOR OBIIT SUNDAY.

as ordered to be observed in St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, by Henry VIII., Edward VI., Queen Elizabeth, and Charles II., 'on the Sunday next preceding each of the four quarter days, that is to say, on the Sunday next before Christmas Day, and on those next before the Festivals of the Annunciation (March 25), of S. John Baptist (June 24), and of S. Michael the Archangel (Sept. 29)':—and thenceforth observed until this present day.

If such Sunday however happen to be either Passion or Palm Sunday, Easter Day, Whit Sunday, or Trinity Sunday, it shall then suffice that this Service be recited on the Saturday preceding the Quarter Day; at the discretion of the Ordinary this may also be done on not more than two other occasions in each year, provided always that the legal obligation of Commemorating the Founders and Benefactors of this Church and College once every Quarter be evermore without fail duly observed.

The service is special throughout, the order of Morning Prayer not being followed. The Te Deum (Wesley in F), and a Psalm are sung, in addition to a number of Antiphons, Responses, &c. A sermon is preached, and after the response, 'As a drop of water out of the sea, and a little grain out of the sand, so are a thousand years in the day of eternity,' the 'Form of service' contains the direction:—

Then shall the Steward of the College read the Form of Commemoration of Founders and Benefactors.

This document (read by Canon Barry as Steward of the College) sets out with the following invocation:—

And now let us thankfully commemorate before Almighty God, those to whose labours and gifts more particularly we owe it, that this place has become a special home of Christian faith and worship.

The long list of names begins; 'King Henry I. built within the castle a chapel, and established in it eight secular canons.' Later on we hear, 'King Edward III., when he founded the most noble Order of the Garter, added five more canons, thirteen priest-vicars, twenty-six poor knights, four clerks, and six choristers.' No fewer than ten kings and one queen (Elizabeth) are enumerated among the benefactors, in addition to other Knights of the Garter, Deans (beginning with William Mugge, the first Warden or Dean), many Canons, and others. At the head of those whom 'also we hold in grateful remembrance,' are the names of 'John Plummer, Verger of the Chapter, and Agatha, his wife.' No organist of the Chapel is honoured in this long recital of names of benefactors. Surely the name of Dr. William Child, organist from 1632 to 1697, deserves to be mentioned. Does not his monument in the Chapel record that 'he paved the body of the Quire'?

This interesting and unique Service concludes with a choral communion at which S. S. Wesley's masterly setting in E, including the beautiful Kyrie Eleison, No. 1, is devotionally sung,—as indeed the music always is in this venerable fane. Evensong, with the darkening shadows of the Chapel intensified by the charming vista of the candle-illumined Choir, concludes the impressive service of Obiit Sunday at St. George's Chapel. In the course of the afternoon Sir Walter Parratt shows us the Choir School, delightfully situated in the Castle Grounds; but this pleasant home of the Windsor choristers may form the subject of a special article in the near future.

THE HYMN-TUNES OF DYKES AND SULLIVAN.

Collections of hymn-tunes by the late Sir Joseph Barnby and Sir John Stainer have been issued; and now we have before us two similar compilations published, like those already mentioned, by Messrs. Novello, containing the hymn-tunes composed by the late Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes and Sir Arthur Sullivan. Including Litanies, &c., the number of tunes from the pen of the devout, clerical composer reaches the large total of 276. Many of these melodious and much-loved sacred songs have found their way into the services of churches of all denominations, but a large proportion appear in this attractively got-up volume for the first time. Sir George Martin, in the concluding words of his appreciative Introduction to the book, says: 'The world is richer for Dr. Dykes's music, and his memory deserves to be loved and honoured by all those who, like himself, strive to follow in the footsteps of the Divine Master.' Few of those who make the acquaintance of these pages will fail to agree with the well-expressed words of the organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The 'Hymn Tunes composed by Arthur Sullivan' is a much smaller collection than that just referred to—one-fourth the size, in fact. But we find not a few world-wide favourites, in addition to some tunes published for the first time. The Preface tells us that Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'Hymn-Tune creativeness covered a period of thirty-two years.' It is also interesting to learn from the same source that his first published contributions to the church-song of the people appeared in 'A Hymnal, chiefly from the Book of Praise,' a book used in the Church of England, and 'Psalms and Hymns for Divine Worship,' a Presbyterian Hymnal, thus showing the catholicity of church music. These two volumes, with those of Barnby and Stainer, form a quartet of hymn-tune collections containing strains which are as wings upon which many a spiritual song is borne upwards to the Giver of all good.

THE CONSOLE OF THE ORGAN IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

THE WESTMINSTER ABBEY ORGAN.

As a sequel to the article on the Coronation Service in our September issue, and in response to a request that from time to time specifications of Cathedral organs should appear in The Musical Times, we give a description of the organ, built by Messrs. William Hill and Sons, in Westminster Abbey. The organ consists of five manuals (compass CC to A) and a pedal organ (compass CCCC to F). A special feature of the instrument is the Celestial organ, described under its own heading. The two fine organ cases were designed by the late Mr. J. L. Pearson, R.A. The organist sits at a separate console placed between the main cases. Through the kindness of Sir Frederick Bridge, we are enabled to give a photograph of the organ keyboards.

A Festival in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund was held at Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, on the 23rd ult., when a fine choir consisting of sixty Cathedral, Collegiate, and Chapel Royal singers performed the six anthems and the Te Deum sung at the Coronation. Tallis's Litany was also chanted, and a sermon preached by the Bishop of Stepney. 'Hark! the sound of holy voices' was sung, unaccompanied, in procession, to Langran's 'Deerhurst.' Sir Frederick Bridge and Mr. Walter Alcock acted as conductors, and the latter, with Mr. H. W. Richards, officiated as organists.

The remarkably fine organ, costing between £2,000 and £3,000, recently the property of Mr. Antill, of Merchistoun Hall, Horndean, Hampshire, is being re-erected in St. Matthew's Church, Southsea. It must be gratifying to Mr. and Mrs. Antill to know that their beloved instrument will find so suitable a home and be put to such a noble use in its new surroundings.

The Oxford University Press has issued 'A Kalendar of Hymns Ancient and Modern for the year of Grace 1903.' Clergymen and choirmasters need not be reminded of the practical utility and value of this annual compilation, the work of the Rev. Robert Sealy Genge.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Novello's Village Tune Book, containing One Hundred Popular Hymn Tunes.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Not a few organists can bear testimony to the limited use made of bulky hymnals, many of which contain far too much dross. It is a question whether a collection of say one hundred tunes will not meet all requirements in those churches where services are not frequently held. The present book has been issued in order to meet such cases. It contains tunes old and new—covering the period 1551 to 1901—all of which may be described as good and congregational. We learn from the Preface that:—'Many of these tunes first made their appearance with only a melody and bass—as for example, "Bedford," which is herein given in its original melodic and rhythmic form—or in three-part harmony, as "Miles's Lane." In clothing these venerable strains with four-part harmony, the majority of Editors have used modern progressions; but such an anachronism has been avoided in the following pages, the old tunes being furnished with harmonies more in accordance with their old-world character.' A further quotation may be given which speaks for itself: 'Clergymen and Organists of most village churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overladen volumes; therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.'

A Short Setting of the Office for Holy Communion, in the key of F. By J. Varley Roberts.

Credo in F. By Bruce Steane.

Jubilate Deo in E flat. By A. Herbert Brewer.

Lord of Might, our land's Defender. To mourn our dead we gather here. O God, the Ruler of our race. Hymns. Words by Mary Bradford Whiting. Music by Arthur Sullivan.

The New Year's dawn is brightening. Words by the Very Rev. F. W. Farrar. Music by H. C. Perrin.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The setting by Dr. Varley Roberts is an admirable example of this useful series, which combines simplicity with devotional expressiveness. The voice parts, in unison throughout, are written within an extremely moderate compass, and they are supported by an organ part calculated to give confidence to singers of moderate abilities while organists will experience no difficulties in playing the accompaniment. The harmonic scheme is ingeniously devised to give variety to the music and insure impressiveness.

The setting of the 'Creed' by Mr. Bruce Steane is in four vocal parts, and the harmonic effects rich and emphatic. It is a harmonised version of the 'Credo' published in the composer's 'Communion Service in F.' Mr. Herbert Brewer's 'Jubilate Deo' is intended as a companion to the same composer's 'Te Deum in E flat,' published by Messrs. Novello. The music is jubilant and direct in expression, and its effectiveness is enhanced by the design of the organ accompaniment. The vocal writing demands a well-trained choir to pick up the entrances of the voices with precision.

Particular interest attaches to the first two of the above hymns owing to the tunes being hitherto unpublished. They both possess the directness of expression which distinguishes the late Sir Arthur Sullivan's church music. The hymn by Dean Farrar should assuredly find its way over the land, for its lines express in happy terms the hopes of thinking mankind at the close of the year, and the music, by the organist of Canterbury Cathedral, reflects their sanguine and trustful character.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

The Junior Violinist. Edited by C. Egerton Lowe. Books 9 and 10.

Air de Ballet, with Intermezzo. By Theophil Wendt.

Arietta from 'The Eve of St. Agnes.' By Thomas Whitney Surette. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

12 Kleine melodische Vortragsstücke für Violine mit Pianoforte begleitung. Von Hans Sitt, Op. 78, Nos. 1—6. [London; Bosworth & Co.]

Teachers will be grateful to Mr. Egerton Lowe for his edition of Mozart's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in E minor, the first of the two books under notice. No better foundation can be built upon than Mozart, and this beautiful little sonata furnishes a study in first to third positions, as well as a gem in melody and form. Book No. 10 of this useful series consists of three favourite Chopin pieces—the Funeral March, the Prelude in E minor, and the Waltz in B minor, all from the pianoforte works. In making these transcriptions the editor has neither added to, nor taken from, the originals. In this he is to be commended, and young violinists who want to play 'something by Chopin,' will satisfy their desire in these careful arrangements from the great pianoforte composer.

The 'Air de Ballet,' by Theophil Wendt, is a bright little piece, easy to play and effective. The Intermezzo, which serves as a second movement, forms a welcome and pleasing interlude previous to the return of the first subject. We may safely praise the violin and pianoforte version of the 'Arietta' from Mr. Surette's 'The Eve of St. Agnes.' Amateurs who enjoy playing modern music will find it to their taste, and the piece is moderately difficult for both players.

In the little melodious pieces by Hans Sitt, the Leipzig Capellmeister has produced some excellent and interesting bagatelles for the violin in the first position, with pianoforte accompaniment. The first six are respectively named (1) 'Lied ohne Worte,' (2) 'Légende,' (3) 'Idylle,' (4) 'Im Kahn,' (5) 'Stilles Glück,' (6) 'Im Frühling.' All of these are effective and pretty, without being commonplace, and as they contain no difficulty but what a beginner should be easily able to master, they are likely to well serve their purpose and prove very acceptable pieces for young performers.

THE BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

That two of the many musical festivals of this autumn should have clashed, as did those of Cardiff and Bristol, is to be regretted on all accounts. That it was the duty of one or the other to give way and alter its date is so obvious as to need no comment. If the festival whose date was arranged last could not see the need for a change, then the younger festival of the two would have increased its prestige in the eyes of all who have understanding by the graceful act of making the alteration for the convenience of everybody concerned. The excellent meeting conducted by Mr. George Riseley, on the 8th to 11th ult., was as interesting and attractive as any festival can be which presents hardly any actual novelty, but relies upon works of known excellence that are not often to be heard. The feature of the Bristol Festival was unquestionably the Messe des Morts of Berlioz, a work well suited to the conditions of our English festivals, yet one which is very seldom revived. Everyone knows that it requires for its adequate performance the engagement of a very large number of extra drums and brass instruments, the former used in strange combinations for the production of chords that are scarcely to be recognized as such by the ear alone, while the latter furnish the four orchestras which in the 'Dies iræ' seem to send forth their warning from the four quarters of heaven. This effect is more easily realised than the chords on the drums; the hearer is just conscious of changes in the quality of the aggregate of drum-sounds, but cannot follow, without reference to the score, the harmonic progressions which are meant to be produced. In the four subordinate orchestras the composer's grandiose idea is undoubtedly fulfilled, even when they are reduced in size from the proportions indicated by Berlioz. It was a pity that while sixteen trombones are required for these only eight were forthcoming, and there were other instances of a cheese-paring policy which might have been excused if it had led to the abandonment of the work as a whole, more easily than when this most stupendous example of French music was presented with more or less maimed rites. The choir sang their extremely difficult parts with great skill and refinement, and Mr. Charles Saunders's pure tenor voice was exactly suited to the solo of the 'Sanctus.'

Dr. Horatio Parker's 'Saint Christopher' was given, for the first time in England in its complete form, on the second day (October 9). The third part, in which the best-known incident in the Saint's career is so finely described, was given by itself at the Worcester Festival in September, and it created a strong desire to become acquainted with the work as a whole. For once the policy of presenting things in patches was justified, for it is most true of this that 'the part is greater than the whole.' The first of the three Acts, with the brilliant processional music of a court pageant, or vigorous hunting scene, is only differentiated from opera by a very impressive choral prologue; if it can hardly fail to remind the hearer at one point or another of 'Tannhäuser,' the second Act, which we may fancy is meant to illustrate Montgomery's famous couplet:—

> And Satan trembles when he sees
> The weakest saint upon his knees, shows us rather a mild and innocuous devil, as compared with the fiends of 'The Golden Legend' or of 'Eden,' to say nothing of the Mephistopheles of Berlioz, Gounod, or Boito. Possibly a more experienced actor than Mr. Watkin Mills might have made Dr. Parker's Satan seem more vividly imagined; nothing in the Act is as beautiful as its conclusion, in which the choir takes a prominent part. Of the beautiful third part, with its splendid sequence of ecclesiastical choruses, and its fine realization of Saint Christopher's feat in bearing the Christ-child through the floods, it is not necessary to speak again in this place: it is only to be recorded that Mr. Andrew Black sang it with much vigour, that Miss Agnes Nicholls was successful as the Queen of the first Act and the Angel of the last, and that Mr. Saunders was good as the King turned Hermit.

In the first part of the same concert came Dr. Elgar's new 'Coronation Ode,' first heard the week before in Sheffield. It was curious that the little chorus 'Daughter of Ancient Kings,' which provoked the only encore of the festival at Sheffield, fell almost flat at Bristol. Still the work as a whole delighted the audience, and the usual wagging of heads testified to the popularity of the big tune on which the final numbers are based. Between this and 'Saint Christopher,' both of which were conducted by their composers, Miss Adela Verne played Liszt's 'Hungarian Fantasia,' with orchestra, in admirably finished style. I seemed to be raining eminent pianists, for not only this clever young lady appeared, but on the first night of the Festival, when Dr. Grieg was to have been present, Mr. Borwick played the Norwegian composer's single pianoforte concerto to perfection (giving also Saint-Saëns's brilliant 'Africa' later on), and on the last night of the meeting, M. Paderewski played in Beethoven's 'Emperor' concerto, and his own beautiful, poetic, and immensely difficult 'Polish Fantasia.' He was heard at his best in the latter work, and being required to play an encore gave Mendelssohn's 'Song without words' in B flat, with the strong flavour of the chase about it.

The splendid male-voice organisation of 350 voices which, under Mr. Riseley's direction, has attained such eminence, took part in Mendelssohn's 'Antigone' music and Grieg's 'Landerkennung,' the vocal soloist in each being Mr. Plunket Greene, and the reciters in the former Mrs. Brown-Potter and Mr. Rudolph de Cordova. Mrs. Brown-Potter also declaimed the ballad 'Bergliot,' for which Grieg wrote music; she would come nearer the ideal of the elocutionist's art if, when reciting 'through' the music, she could prevent her voice coinciding in pitch with prominent notes played by the orchestra. The fault may indicate strong musical instinct, but it is a fault nevertheless, and by no means the only one in Mrs. Brown-Potter's performances.

Dismissing with briefest reference the 'Elijah' of Wednesday morning and the 'Messiah' of Saturday, in both of which Mesdames Albani and Butt and Mr. William Green sang, Mr. Black taking the baritone part in the former and Mr. Mills in the latter, it remains to speak of a fine performance of 'Hiawatha,' on Thursday evening, with Madame Albani, Messrs. W. Green and Watkin Mills in the solo part. Conducted by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, it was one of the main successes of the meeting. The chief orchestral works given (there was no symphony) were Elgar's brilliant 'Cockaigne,' Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture and his 'Caprice Italien,' all of which were played quite well, the first under the composer's direction. A song-cycle called 'Illusions,' by Mr. J. L. Roeckel, was introduced by Miss Alice Lakin, a promising young contralto, on the last evening; it consists of three songs, the words by Mr. F. E. Weatherly, styled respectively, 'The heart of the flagon,' 'The heart of the maiden,' and 'The heart of the song.'

The new Colston Hall, in which the Festival was held, is a great improvement on the former building; the acoustics are excellent, and the seating capacity greatly extended, mainly by the erection of a large upper gallery. When the arrangement of the seats is rather better understood, we need not doubt that the attendants in all parts of the hall, from the stewards downwards, will perform the work of showing the audience to their places with rather less fuss than was apparent this year. May we also hope that they will find fewer topics of conversation, or at least will carry on their discussions with less animation.

THE CARDIFF MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

How to render justice to Cardiff after Sheffield was a problem which much troubled the writer of these lines as he journeyed from the latter to the former city. Welsh choirs, however, enjoy a good reputation, and the prospect seemed fairly hopeful. A voice whispered: 'Are you likely to hear anything finer, more thrilling, than "Thanks be to God," or the "Israel" choruses, or the "Dream of Gerontius"?' and the answer was in the negative. Then, mindful of the old proverb concerning comparisons, came the resolution to think no more of Sheffield, but to judge Cardiff on its own merits; a foolish resolution which melted away on the opening 'Elijah' day (Wednesday, the 8th ult.); during the whole performance there was a mental oscillation between Sheffield and Cardiff. But with the 'Elijah,' this pendulum state came to an end; the forced comparison was made, and attention called to other matters. The Cardiff choir was not equal to the northern body, but the voices were of excellent quality, particularly those of the ladies, and, thanks to the chorus-masters,—Messrs. T. E. Aylward and J. E. Deacon, and Madame Clara Novello Davies—admirably trained. There was no lack either of vigour or of intelligence, though it did not surprise by massive strength, by wonderful delicacy in its pianissimos, or by thrilling declamation. But the choir is one of which any city might be proud, and during the week it gave some striking exhibitions of its powers.

The chief event of the Festival was the performance—one might almost say production, so little notice was taken of the first performance in this country by the Glasgow Union, in 1900—of César Franck's 'The Beatitudes.' Some great works make their way very quietly; it is not given to all oratorios to become famous from the very outset, as was the case with 'Elijah,' which, by the way, has ever since maintained the position so quickly won. Franck composed his work in 1871, during the siege of Paris, yet it did not gain a hearing until 1890, the very year of his death. It is now fairly well known in France, Germany, and Belgium; hitherto, with the solitary exception of Glasgow, it has remained a sealed book here; the vocal score, it is true, has been published, but from that only a faint idea of the music can be gleaned. The merits of the work are great. There is a prologue in which allusion is made to the wretched state of the world before the Saviour's advent, and to the coming consolation. Then to each Beatitude is devoted a section, and each is led up to by solo, duet, or chorus, or two or more of such movements. For instance, the fifth, 'Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy' commences with a tenor solo telling of the helpless and oppressed, followed by a 'terrestrial choir' exclaiming 'Mighty God! avenge our woes.' Then is heard the 'Voice of Christ,' 'Blessed are they who in mercy fear to slay.' The theme is then taken up by a 'celestial choir.' After this is heard the 'Angel of Forgiveness' singing of love, pardon, and mercy, and then the 'celestial choir' resumes its expressive song.

There is one thing which may militate against the acceptance—one dare scarcely say popularity—of the work, and that is the text. The original words by Madame Colomb are in verse, and therefore even the French Bible words of Christ are not preserved, and the same thing, of course, happens in the English version by Mrs. C. M. Bradley. Franck wrote his music at a time when the influence of Wagner was paramount, and yet no one would surely describe it as Wagnerish, although a 'Redeemer' theme is announced at the outset, and reappears in each section. After the death of Berlioz in 1869, attention was specially drawn to his works, and that justice denied to him during his life was beginning to be rendered; it is therefore not astonishing that in the orchestration, and indeed in the music of the concluding section, one is reminded of the author of the 'Damnation of Faust.' Lastly there was Gounod, at the zenith of his fame, and of his influence, too, there are traces. The mere fact of such reflection is frequently regarded as a sign of lack of originality, but such is not the case. Strong natures are impressionable, and great composers, almost without exception, show in their works traces of the musical atmosphere in which they lived, moved, and had their being. Mention has been made of one possible drawback to the oratorio. There is indeed another of a more practical nature. It requires no fewer than nine first-rate soloists; moreover, the choral music is far from easy. The rendering of the work at Cardiff was exceptionally fine; just here and there, however, there were signs that another rehearsal would have proved of advantage. The soloists were Misses Maggie Davies, Muriel Foster, and Maggie Lewis; and Messrs. Ben Davies, Gwilym Richards, Ffrangcon Davies, David Hughes, Ivor Foster, and Harry Miller. It would be pleasant to praise each one separately, but space will not allow of that; they all helped towards a really impressive performance.

The only actual novelties of the Festival were two tone pictures by Mr. Arthur Hervey, the well-known composer and writer. He gives them titles, yet his programme-music is of the higher order: he depicts moods; he does not paint scenes. He possesses the art of writing au naturel,—as he feels. His themes, if not strikingly original, are flowing and most refined, the workmanship is clever, and the orchestration most effective. The two numbers 'On the Heights' and 'On the March' offer striking contrast. Mr. Hervey conducted, and at the close was recalled three times. The orchestral playing could not have been better.

On the evening of the first day was performed Dr. Cowen's 'Ruth,' originally produced at the Worcester Festival of 1887, in which there is much admirable music and delightful scoring. The pastoral story evidently made a strong appeal to the composer. The opening number with the approaching caravan is most picturesque. Then we may mention Naomi's delicate air, 'Like as a father,' the fresh choruses of reapers and gleaners, and 'Man goeth forth,' the characteristic orchestral movement 'Thanksgiving at Harvest-time,' and the charming chorus and dances of reapers and gleaners in the second part, to name a few of the most attractive numbers. The performance, with Madame Lilian Blauvelt, the Misses Maggie Davies, Ada Crossley, and Messrs. Ben Davies and David Hughes, was excellent; at the close Dr. Cowen received an overwhelming ovation. The finest performance of the week was, however, that of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' a triumph for all who took part in it; Miss Muriel Foster and Messrs. Ben Davies and Ffrangcon Davies in the famous second act created quite a sensation. The second and third acts of the 'Flying Dutchman,' and Gluck's 'Orpheus,' were also given; but the latter did not sound effective as 'concert' music.

Mr. Mark Hambourg, by his playing of Schumann's Concerto in A minor, roused great enthusiasm. There was a fine orchestra, and first-rate performances were given of the 'Eroica' Symphony and of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique.' The last concert was devoted to Berlioz's 'Faust.' The attendance was not very good at first, but it improved each day, and for the work just named every seat in the hall was filled.

Altogether the Festival proved a signal success, and Cardiff may well feel proud. It has been decided to hold another one in 1904.

THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The twenty-seventh triennial Festival at Norwich, and the eighth which has been under the artistic direction of Mr. Randegger, took place on the 21st to the 24th ult. For the general public the interest of a festival lies chiefly in its relation to current art, so I shall not apologise for baldly recording performances of such well-known works as 'Elijah,' 'The Golden Legend,' Verdi's 'Requiem,' 'The Redemption,' and Beethoven's C minor symphony, and concentrating my criticisms on the less hackneyed features of the Festival.

The first to be heard was Sir Hubert Parry's 'Ode to Music, which is, of course, not a novelty in the strict sense of the word, having been heard on two occasions at Royal College concerts. But its first public appearance was at the opening concert of the Festival. Suffice it to say that the noble music fits Mr. A. C. Benson's fine poem 'like a glove.' The solo parts are not prominent, but there are five of them, which were taken by Madame Albani, Miss Kate Moss, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Robert Radford.

At the second concert 'Elijah' was given, but the third afforded several novelties. Without making any invidious comparisons, it may be said that the most piquant was Sir A. C. Mackenzie's Orchestral Suite, 'London Day by Day.' It consists of four movements—the first a humoresque, entitled 'Under the Clock'; the second a waltz, 'Mayfair'; the third a 'Song of Thanksgiving,' suggested by the declaration of peace last June, and the fourth a rollicking extravaganza, 'Hampstead Heath,' an apotheosis of Costerdom, which is appropriately enough dedicated to Albert Chevalier.

This varied 'programme' is most ingeniously carried out by the composer, perhaps with almost unnecessary elaboration, or at least at almost undue length, having regard to the humorous purpose of much of the music The variations on the Westminster Chimes, which are treated as a ground bass, are like a series of dissolving views of London life, in which the service in the Abbey and the inevitable small boy's street-call find a place, together with many other things too recondite to be apprehended on a single hearing. The waltz is altogether charming, and the 'Song of Thanksgiving' has fine texture and intense expressive power, though it would bear either relief or condensation. The Finale is brilliantly clever, and the genuine artist is revealed by the success with which the humours of 'Appy 'Ampstead' are depicted without a shade of vulgarity. A somewhat lighter touch might be desired, but that is the only possible criticism on a remarkable tour de force.

At the same concert two compositions were conducted by Dr. F. H. Cowen—one, the showy 'Coronation March' which has been heard on previous occasions, the other a 'Coronation Ode,' of which this was the first performance. It is a setting of some verses by Sir Lewis Morris, which, whatever their exact merit as poetry, serve to furnish the composer with suggestions for a stately, strenuous work, brilliantly written for the orchestra, and effective and sonorous on its choral side. The soprano solo—most artistically sung by Madame Blauvelt—is not quite so happy in effect, but the general impression left by the work is one of festal pomp and national rejoicing, so that the mood sought for has been successfully attained. A third novelty in this interesting programme was an overture, 'Youth,' by Mr. Arthur Hervey, which met with exceptional success, and deserved it by its freshness, brilliance, and melodic charm. It is English in its tunefulness, Gallic in its freedom from all obscurity, and is a work that exhilarates one as it exhilarated the audience, and the composer, who conducted with admirable point and force, received exceptional recall honours.

Thursday evening's concert (the 23rd ult.) produced a fresh crop of novelties. Dr. Horatio Parker's 'Star Song' is a short cantata, or 'Lyric Rhapsody,' as he calls it, written especially for the Festival. The poem, by Mr. Henry Bernard Carpenter, is as astronomical in character as its name suggests. The music contains many points of interest and beauty, it is flowing and melodious, and brilliantly orchestrated. So far as a single hearing revealed, the weakest feature of the work is a certain want of continuity, and this in spite of construction that is obviously highly artistic. The treatment is frequently original, as in the fugal writing of the last movement, and in a broad and effective solo for the mezzo-soprano, which was admirably sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn. A second novelty was an Irish Rhapsody, in D minor (Op. 78), by Professor Stanford. It is based on two traditional tunes—a battle tune of great spirit and vigour, known by the euphonious title, 'Leather-bags Donnell,' and another of suave and tender character passing under the name of 'Emer's Farewell to Cuchullin.' The Rhapsody is most beautifully constructed out of these themes, which are contrasted and combined with the utmost skill, and with genuine imaginative power. A setting for contralto and baritone of the Balcony Scene from Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet,' by Mr. Herbert Bedford, was the third new work given. The atmosphere of the scene is most admirably caught, more especially in the treatment of the orchestra, which is not without suggestions of 'Tristan,' but the voice-parts are less effective, and, though most expressively sung by Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, do not flow very easily or naturally.

On Friday evening we had a one-act opera by the conductor's nephew, Mr. Alberto Randegger, Junr., entitled 'Werther's Shadow,' which has been given abroad, but was heard on this occasion for the first time in this country. It is neo-Italian in character, highly emotional and explosive, and the two solo parts, sung by Madame Albani and Mr. Ben Davies respectively, are capable of great effect when taken by such artists as these. The impression of the highly-coloured music upon the audience was immediate, but there is more than mere sensationalism in the work, which, if showing a certain want of restraint, that will probably be corrected when the composer grows older, also gives evidence of real power and dramatic feeling. Madame Albani and Mr. Ben Davies by their fine singing greatly helped the success of the work.

Mr. Frederic Cliffe, whose name has too long been absent from our festival programmes, was on this occasion represented by a contralto scena, 'The Triumph of Alcestis,' written especially for the Festival, and well sung by Madame Clara Butt. It has great breadth of style and warmth of colour, and the story of the release of Alcestis from the bonds of death through the might of Hercules is told with graphic touches. That Mr. Cliffe has absorbed much of Wagner's scores is shown by the glowing colour and passionate melody, but, with one rather striking exception, it is free from reminiscences, and must be pronounced a highly impressive composition.

Mr. Edward German's 'Rhapsody on March Themes' is not precisely a novelty, for in its original form it was heard at a concert of the London Philharmonic Society five years ago, but since then he has revised and amplified the score, and the new version was heard at this concert for the first time. The concert included Mr. Landon Ronald's cycle of songs, 'Summer Time,' sung by Mr. Ben Davies, the composer conducting.

One of the most obvious tests of the utility of a musical festival is the extent to which it encourages native composition, and the long list of novelties I have enumerated makes it clear that Norwich has not failed in this respect. In other respects a high standard has been attained. The choral material procurable in the Eastern counties is notoriously inferior to that of some more favoured districts, but it was apparent that Dr. A. H. Mann, of Cambridge, had justified his appointment as chorus-master, for the singing of the chorus was intelligent, and showed the results of careful training. The band, again under the very able leadership of Mr. Betjemann, was exceedingly good, and it is satisfactory to record that the low pitch was adopted, the organ having been altered so as to make this reform possible. The principal vocalists were Madame Albani, Madame Blauvelt, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Macintyre, Madame Clara Butt, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Ada Crossley, Messrs. Ben Davies, W. Green, Andrew Black, Robert Radford, and Kennerley Rumford. I have already referred to the conductor, Mr. Randegger, but I must indulge in a recapitulation, and in the original key of laudation. He was indefatigable, and deserved the line which Sir Lewis Morris applies to the Queen, as one—

'For whom reluctant Time delays his wings.'

THE BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

About a year and a-half ago, when the first musical festival in Blackpool was held, with Dr. Richter and his Manchester orchestra, and a choral and orchestral programme in the grand style, the result was a splendid musical feast, but, also, a serious deficit. This year nothing of the kind was attempted. The Festival held on the 9th ult. and the two following days was a competition meeting, exactly similar to that which takes place at Morecambe in the Spring. But there was an announcement in the Preface to the Festival programme that the committee confidently hope to attempt in the near future another festival on a similar scale to last year's. One can only wish them good luck in this courageous project.

The recent competitions were exceedingly well managed. The committee state that 'no time or pains were spared' by them in the selection of the music, and the result was such as to draw words of special commendation from Dr. McNaught, the adjudicator. There were 191 entries and 2,269 competitors in all. The first day's classes were: soprano and alto duet (Rubinstein's 'Angel'), quartet for mixed voices, unaccompanied (Schumann's 'Summer Song'), tenor solo (the Flower song from 'Carmen,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Onaway'), bass solo (Purcell's 'Arise, ye subterranean winds' and the Serenade from 'Don Giovanni'), soprano solo (Sullivan's 'Orpheus with his lute' and Stanford's 'Bower of Roses'), contralto solo (Elgar's 'Where corals lie,' and 'Softly awakes my heart' from the 'Samson' of Saint-Saëns), unaccompanied male-voice quartet (Horsley's 'By Celia's arbour'). Four members of the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society won the mixed-voice quartet, and in the other quartet class (male voice) the Eden Vale Quartet from Carlisle were the winners, the standard in each case being excellent. The second day, Friday, was devoted to the children's competitions, and here the educational value of Dr. McNaught's remarks in delivering the adjudications was very striking. At the evening concert, Luard Selby's 'Waits of Bremen' was sung by the combined choirs of children, and there were some amusing action songs by groups of children in costume.

On the Saturday—the third and last day, devoted to open competitions—the proceedings were too long and multifarious to be here described in detail. The two most interesting points were the signal success of the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, both in the mixed-voice and female-voice classes, and the playing of the amateur orchestras from Nelson and Colne. The singing of Brahms's 'Farewell,' the last of the four prescribed pieces, by the mixed-voice choir of the Society was as perfect as one can expect to hear in a world of imperfections, and the Colne orchestra, conducted by Mr. Wildman, played Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Overture in the evening in a manner that had absolutely nothing amateurish about it, except a certain want of fulness in the tone—partly attributable, perhaps, to the poor acoustic properties of the hall, which was the Winter Gardens Pavilion, not the magnificent hall in the Tower—considered by Dr. Richter, M. Paderewski, and others the finest concert hall in existence. Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Bold Turpin' (the only 'humorous' glee that I ever heard without depression) was sung in the evening, as a final test piece, by five of the eleven competing male-voice choirs, the others having been weeded out earlier in the day. The first prize fell to the Manchester Orpheus Choir, and here again the standard was wonderfully high. Remarkable, too, at the evening concert was the string quartet by Mozart, the performers being from Nelson. The concluding work, in which the two orchestras and several choirs were associated, was Stanford's 'Last Post,' which was conducted by Dr. Coward, who joined Dr. McNaught in adjudicating on the last day. Here the performance was not satisfactory, chiefly for lack of combined rehearsal. On the concluding day the weather was more favourable—or less horrible—and the auditorium was well filled with a week-end holiday crowd, public interest in the first and second days' proceedings having been somewhat languid.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL IN AMERICA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, October 10.

The forty-fifth annual festival of the Worcester County (Mass.) Musical Association took place during the five days which began with September 29 and ended with October 3. This festival, and the festivals given in Bangor and Portland (Maine) and the beginning of Signor Mascagni's operatic tour, are the harbingers of the musical season which will burst on us about the time that this letter is read in England. The Maine festivals cannot interest us from an artistic point of view, though they might furnish forth a text for a disquisition—partly amusing, partly instructive—concerning the methods of the showman and the fondness of the great public for vast gatherings. They are attended by great crowds of people, received with tremendous enthusiasm, and productive of enormous local conceit, yet do nothing that can be characterised as wise or commendable in the way of promoting culture among the many. Their influence never reaches beyond the zone which contributes the thousands of listeners who, having few or no opportunities to hear an orchestra, or artists said to be famous, naturally accept all that is offered in the pious belief that high art is being brought to their doors. The Worcester festival, though far from what it ought to be, is yet in a different case. Dignified schemes mark it, and laudable intentions on the part of the business and artistic management inspire it. What it lacks year after year in the way of accomplishment is due to insufficiency of preparation, especially of ensemble rehearsals. When the orchestra arrives (it is a fine band, though too small) from Boston there is generally time only for one rehearsal with the chorus, and as three large works are given as a rule, and must all be considered, the rehearsal takes the form of something only a little better than what the Germans call a Sitzprobe—one in which the performers find their seats and adjust them to their convenience. Study is fragmentary, feverish, and frequently futile. Rehearsals are held every morning from Monday till Friday, but they are given up to the orchestra and the solo singers, and are too often perfunctory affairs, made so by the unfortunate custom of selling tickets of admission to them.

The festival just ended marked a change in artistic policy from its predecessors. Mr. George W. Chadwick having declined re-election as conductor, the duties of the office were divided between Mr. Wallace Goodrich, who led the choral numbers, and Mr. Franz Kneisel, who cared for the afternoon and final evening concerts, in which the choir did not participate. Mr. Kneisel is the leader of a chamber music organization which bears his name and which has been heard in London. He is also the Principal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and has frequently left his seat at the first desk to take up the baton in its symphony concerts. His election brought it about that more than the usual attention was bestowed upon the instrumental element in the festival scheme, which was lifted to a plane of fine dignity and beauty. Mr. Kneisel is eclectic in his tastes, with a strong leaning toward Brahms, but also a fondness for César Franck and his disciples. He was obliged to leave his favourite composer off the programmes, but he performed a duty which seemed pleasant to him in giving hearings to three compositions by Americans—a symphonic poem based on a portion of Paul Verlaine's 'Une bonne Chanson' by C. M. Loeffler (a member of the Boston Orchestra and a profoundly poetic musician of the ultra-modern type); an overture 'Festival of Pan,' founded on Keats's 'Endymion'; and an overture of the Mendelssohn descriptive order, entitled 'Blomidon,' and suggested by the scenery and sea moods of a promontory bearing that name which juts out into an arm of the Bay of Fundy. This was composed by C. M. Curry, the preceding overture by Frederick Converse, both young musicians whose habitat is Boston. Two of the larger works performed were also American products, namely, George W. Chadwick's 'Judith,' concerning which I wrote in my report of last year's festival, at which it had its first performance, and Professor Horatio Parker's 'Hora Novissima,' which needs neither description nor praise from me now, since it is quite as familiar to English festival audiences as to American. This was its third performance at Worcester. Besides these works the first two parts of Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' and Fauré's rather inconsequential 'Birth of Venus' were sung as novelties. The skill and zeal of the young conductors resulted in excellent artistic achievements; but atrociously bad weather, coupled with a public apathy, due I fear largely to the fact that no great and popular 'stars' had been engaged for the solo parts, wrought financial loss, and there was much doleful talk during the week of a suspension of the festivals unless some of its wealthy friends should provide it with an ample endowment, so that financial matters might never again disturb the minds of the managers.

Mascagni has been handsomely received by the newspaper critics, who like the fruits of his conducting, but he has been in a peck of trouble ever since his arrival, and had the whole enterprise fallen through at the eleventh hour it would have caused little surprise. The orchestra which he brought along was incomplete, and when his managers attempted to recruit it they ran foul of the laws of the Musicians' Union, which do not countenance organizations 'half slaves, half free,' to apply President Lincoln's words. The result has been dire confusion all the week (he arrived on October 3), and thus far performances have been given of 'Zanetto' and 'Cavalleria Rusticana' here and in Brooklyn. 'Iris' and 'Ratcliff' have also been promised, but I must see the curtain rise on their first scenes before I shall feel quite sure that the promise will be redeemed. Meanwhile it seems best to withhold discussion of the performances which have aroused enthusiasm only among the composer's countrymen, who have been quite beside themselves at having with them 'la Gloria d' Italia!' as a frantic individual shrieked at the second performance, before clambering upon the stage and embracing him.

Mr. Thomas has chosen 'The Dream of Gerontius' as a feature of the Cincinnati festival of 1904.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(from our own correspondent.)

Vienna, Oct. 16.

For many years past it has been customary at our Imperial and other theatres to celebrate the Emperor's name-day, in the beginning of October, with the performance of some important new work, or, failing this, with the revival of some valuable but long-neglected older work. It happens, too, occasionally, that the piece selected on these special occasions belongs to the category of dramatic or lyrical rarities which appeal to the taste of the connoisseur amongst the audience, rather than to the generality of the public. It must be admitted that, in taking the latter course this year, the directors of the Hoftheater have shown much artistic discrimination in their choice of a piece. They have produced Mozart's unfinished opera 'Zaïde'; an early work of the ever-delightful master. The new version in which the work was presented on the present occasion is by Dr. Robert Hirschfeld, who not very long since rendered a similar service to Haydn's opera 'Der Apotheker,' by means of which the little piece was resuscitated and repeatedly performed, both in Vienna and elsewhere. Dr. Hirschfeld's stage arrangement of 'Zaïde,' though it may not have endowed the charming operatic fragment with perennial life, shows consummate tact in the handling of all theatrical detail and a happily inspired judgment in filling up the gaps in the original piece, both as regards action and music. And this has been accomplished throughout in a reverent spirit. With the exception of one air, which for practical purposes has been transposed from a tenor to a bass voice, all the music contained in the original score has been retained intact. The missing portion of the book (at the conclusion of the piece) has been ably supplied by Dr. Hirschfeld, and the music appertaining thereto he has chosen from another unjustifiably neglected score of the master, viz., the incidental music to the drama 'Thamos, König in Aegypten.' The association of the latter with the music of 'Zaïde' is a happy one as regards approximation of style, while with its serious, pathetic character it is well adapted to lead up to the requisite dramatic climax and to an energetic, effective conclusion of the whole. In these circumstances, the resuscitated work could not fail to produce a harmonious and entirely pleasing impression. Frau Forster, in the part of Zaïde, Herr Slezak, in that of Gomez, and Herr Breuer, as one of the officers of the Sultan—to whom a delicious buffoaria has been given by the composer—greatly contributed to the success of the work by their excellent interpretations.

While at the Imperial Theatre a most welcome concession had thus been made to the possessors of a refined musical taste, another novelty, produced on the Emperor's day at the Carl-Theater, appealed more especially to the idiosyncrasies of a specifically Viennese public. The Viennese love to be entertained by some lively action on the stage, accompanied by pretty, 'taking' music, and they found these qualities combined in Richard Heuberger's latest operetta, 'The Baby.' Heuberger is an experienced dramatic composer. In the course of the last twenty years no less than three grand operas, four operettas, and a ballet from his pen have been produced on the stage. Amongst these, his 'Der Opernball' has been, up till now, the most widely appreciated work. It is not improbable, however, that its popularity will be eclipsed by 'The Baby'—by-the-way, not an unusual experience on the part of elder brothers and sisters in a family!—the music of which is richer, riper, and withal more gratefully written for the singers. The highly-amusing subject offers numerous opportunities for truly comic situations, which have been developed by the authors of the libretto (Herren Waldberg and Willner) in a most satisfactory manner, and the result is an extremely fascinating play. The genuine wit and humour with which the piece abounds is much enhanced, and in a measure idealised, by its fresh-coloured, unaffected and highly-characteristic musical setting. As in the case of most operettas of Viennese origin, the valse-form predominates in the score. But the music never lays itself open to the charge of banality, preserving throughout an air of distinction in its popularity and characterising persons and situations with the hand of an expert artist. The performance, with Fräulein Strojan and Herren Basel and Werner in the principal parts, was deserving of all praise. It was attended by a numerous and delighted audience, and there can be no doubt that the Carl-Theater has been fortunate in the acquisition of 'The Baby,' which will certainly have a long-continued and profitable 'run.'

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(from our own correspondent.)

Much good music cheered and entertained the workers (or some of them) in this busy hive of industry during the month of October.

That very talented young violinist, Miss Ernestine MacCormac (who is a native of Belfast, where her family has resided for about a century), led off with a concert on the 3rd ult., in which she was assisted by Princess te Rangi Pai, Miss Janotha, and Mr. Kelley Cole, Mr. C. A. Lidgey being at the pianoforte.

Miss MacCormac played Grieg's Sonata in C minor, a Concerto by Lalo, and a number of smaller items, and her tone and execution were much admired (as they deserved to be) by a gratifyingly-large audience. Four days later there came that young wonder Jan Kubelik (Miss K. Goodson, Miss M. Cunningham, and Herr Ludwig Schwab being with him). He had an enormous audience and a most enthusiastic reception. Yet another star, M. Paderewski, visited us on the 20th ult.

The first subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 14th ult. The only work for the chorus was Sir Arthur Sullivan's last-finished work—his Te Deum, first performed in St. Paul's Cathedral after the conclusion of peace in South Africa. The solo performers at this concert were Madame Ella Russell, Messrs. Samuel Masters and W. H. Squire (violoncello), Mr. H. H. Hartz accompanist. The special feature of the concert was, however, the work of the orchestra, and considering that it was entirely local, its performance reflected the greatest credit upon Dr. Francis Koeller, the Society's conductor. Besides accompanying several songs, the band played with great spirit and effect the first movement of Mozart's Symphony No. 38, Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre,' Nicolai's overture to 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' Brahms's Hungarian Dances Nos. 5 and 6, and the March in Berlioz's 'Faust.' In fact the orchestra seemed all at once to have passed from boyhood to maturity, and there has been general rejoicing that at last Belfast can begin to hold up her head.

During the month the organ in the Ulster Hall has received from its builders, Messrs. W. Hill and Son, some of the most pressing repairs, and was opened on behalf of its new owners, the City Corporation, with a recital by Dr. Peace, of Liverpool. The instrument is still, however, so very defective that a large outlay is imperative before it can give even the greatest organist fair play.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(from our own correspondent.)

The City Choral Society gave a remarkably fine performance of 'Samson and Delilah' on the 14th ult. The title parts were taken by Mr. John Coates and Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Daniel Price rendering the music of the High Priest. Assistance in minor parts was given by Mr. Alban Cohen, Mr. William Bennett, Mr. Leonard Brown, and Mr. William Evans. Mr. F. W. Beard conducted.

The Festival Choral Society on the 16th ult. inaugurated their season with 'Elijah,' given on quite festival scale. The oratorio was preceded by the National Anthem (Costa's arrangement). The vocal principals were Madame Albani, Madame Marian Mackenzie, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Watkin Mills. A very curious incident occurred during the performance. Mr. Mills was suffering from toothache, and was doubtful about singing in the evening. However, he was splendid up to the Baal scene, but when singing 'Lord God of Abraham,' a paroxysm of pain compelled him to stop, and Mr. H. Smallwood (who had taken part in the double quartet), standing behind him, finished the air with so close a similarity of tone that few were aware of what had occurred, until Dr. Sinclair gave the explanation at the close of the first part. The performance was magnificent, the chorus being in grand form. In the concerted numbers Miss F. Gittings, Miss M. Gell, and Messrs. S. Roper and C. R. Shum took part. The youth in the rain scene was represented by Master R. C. White, who sang so nicely at the Worcester Festival.——The Saturday evening concerts began on September 20. On September 27 the Midland Musical Society, under Mr. A. J. Cotton, gave a very creditable rendering of 'St. Paul'; and on the 4th ult. the Choral and Orchestral Association performed Handel's 'Messiah,' Mr. J. H. Adams conducting.

At St. Michael's, Handsworth, at the Patronal Festival (September 29), Prout's 100th Psalm (Op. 23) was performed, with Master C. H. Williams as the soprano soloist. The organ was reinforced by brass and drums. Mr. Alfred J. Silver was at the organ, and Mr. Chastey Hector conducted. Five performances, from the 11th ult., were given at the Midland Institute of the old Morality play 'Everyman,' with tasteful musical accessories. Crowded attendances testified to the remarkable powers of this work.

Mr. Willy Lehmann gave a concert at the Masonic Hall on the 9th ult. The talented violoncellist was assisted by Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Campbell McInnes, and Mr. F. W. Beard. The programme was good, and the attendance fair. Mr. Oscar Pollack started his series of musical matinées at the rooms of the Society of Artists on the 4th ult.

Mr. Robert Henry Wilson, the chorus-master to the Hallé Concert Society, Manchester, has been appointed to a similar office for the Birmingham Festival of 1903. With orchestra, conductor, and chorus-master drawn from outside sources, the chorus will now be the only local feature of the meeting!

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(from our own correspondent.)

The recently-formed Bristol North Choral Society have commenced their practices under the direction of Mr. James Bending, organist of St. Paul's Church. There are nearly 200 members who have taken in hand Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' Mr. Arthur S. Warrell (assistant-organist at Bristol Cathedral) is the accompanist.

The Bristol Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, have undertaken Dr. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' and the 'Faust' of Gounod. Later in the season they will rehearse the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah.'

The Clifton Choral and Orchestral Society have met their conductor, Mr. F. W. Rootham, and commenced with Sir Charles Stanford's 'Revenge' and Dr. Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands.'

The Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society are rehearsing 'Elijah,' the conductors being Messrs. E. Pavey and E. Cook.

St. John's Choral Society, conductor Mr. A. E. Hill, are practising Mozart's 'Twelfth Mass' for a performance with orchestra during Advent.

The Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society have commenced rehearsing Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Dr. Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' the conductor being Mr. Edward Cook, of Clifton.

For the winter concert the Clevedon Philharmonic Society, under Mr. Cook, are practising Haydn's 'Creation,' and for the spring concert they will undertake Gade's 'Psyche.'

Mr. F. H. Simpson succeeds Mr. G. Sleigh as conductor of the Æolian Male-Voice Choir.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 6th and 8th ult., Jan Kubelik gave two recitals in the Rotunda, assisted by Miss Martha Cunningham, vocalist, and Miss Katherine Goodson, pianist. This was his first appearance in Dublin, and he naturally attracted large audiences. Later in the month, on the 15th, M. Auguste Van Biene generously gave a violoncello recital to the students of the Royal Irish Academy of Music, which was much appreciated.

As regards our music for the coming season there is at present not much to forecast.

The Royal Dublin Society intend giving their usual series of recitals. This includes organ, pianoforte, violin, and chamber music recitals.

At the Royal Irish Academy of Music, Mr. Randal Woodhouse has been appointed professor of singing and Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees professor or the violoncello.

Mr. Charles Marchant, organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral, intends giving monthly recitals during the winter on the magnificent new organ, which has only just been completed by Messrs. Willis, although it has been in use since the end of June.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first music-making of the present season was that given by the most admirable of all our local baritones, Mr. Robert Burnett. To a powerful voice of rare quality, Mr. Burnett unites charm of manner and artistic perception of a high order. His répertoire embraces songs of all styles and ranges of expression, and to all he gives a fitting rendering. He was assisted by another fast-rising artist, Miss Margaret Horne, a young violinist of admirable accomplishments. Mr. George Short was an excellent accompanist.

Professor Niecks opened his course at the University with a lecture on 'Musical Styles' to a very large and representative audience. He has also issued a most interesting scheme of historical concerts, and these will be noticed as they occur during the session.

A very interesting lecture-recital on 'Scottish Song' was given on the 9th ult. by Miss Amy Murray, a young American-Scottish lady, and created much interest. Miss Murray has a good singing voice, and a bright delivery in speaking: her remarks were sensible and appropriate, and her illustrations well chosen. As she also possesses some skill on the old Highland harp, her entertainment altogether afforded much pleasure.

I stated last month that we were promised a visit from Herr Felix Mottl in connection with the concerts of the Scottish Orchestra. We are now informed that Herr Mottl cannot come, but that in his stead we shall have Mr. Henry J. Wood. To those who have not heard Mr. Wood's orchestra in London this should be an event of considerable local interest.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Some time ago I mentioned the offer of Mr. Andrew Carnegie to defray half the cost of an organ for any church requiring such financial aid, and predicted brisk trade for the organ builders. New organs have been, or are about to be, opened by Mr. Thomas Berry at Uddingston (2), Helensburgh, Rutherglen, Airdrie, Hamilton (2), Motherwell, Shettleston, Paisley, Bridge of Allan, and Glasgow (3); and by Mr. Herbert Walton at Larkhall (2), Inchinnan, Port Glasgow, Grangemouth, Cambuslang, Bearsden, Maryhill, Lochmaben, and Glasgow (3). Of these, no less than fourteen are the result of Mr. Carnegie's benefaction.

At the Palette Club's usual monthly concert, on the 1st ult., the orchestra of the Club, under Dr. Hardy, gave a highly creditable performance of Berlioz's 'King Lear' Overture, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and German's 'Henry VIII.' Dances. Vocal solos lent variety to an interesting programme. It is much to be regretted that Mr. Holbrooke's pianoforte recital, on the 2nd ult., brought together such a meagre audience. The programme, which was quite out of the beaten track, included works by Tchaikovsky, Rubinstein, Balakireff, and a quite unhackneyed Chopin selection. The recital was an artistic success.

Cambuslang Choral Union, under Mr. Herbert Walton, are busy with the 'Messiah' for their Christmas concert, and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' for performance in the Spring.

Although the musical work of our Training Colleges here does not come under public notice in the usual way, it may be of interest to mention the choral music selected for study during this session. At Nôtre Dame College, they have in hand Wilfred Bendall's 'The Lady of Shalott,' Mendelssohn's 'Laudate pueri,' and Schubert's 'Serenade' for alto soloist and chorus; at the Church of Scotland College, Arthur Somervell's 'Ode to the Sea,' Part III. of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George'; at the United Free Church College, Haydn's 'Spring' and Gounod's 'Gallia.'

Mr. Philip E. Halstead, a leading local pianist associated with the Verbrugghen Quartet (Messrs. Verbrugghen, Freeman, Haigh and Foulds) gave the first of a series of four chamber concerts on the 20th ult. The programme included Beethoven's fourteen variations for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Schubert's string quartet 'Death and the maiden,' and Dvorák's quintet for pianoforte and strings (Op. 81). With regard to both ensemble and general intelligence the performance was one of great merit.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The annual Musical Festival held in connection with Tewkesbury Abbey, which took place on September 25, was one of the most successful of a long series. The chorus consisted of 200 voices, and there was an orchestra of fifty, under the leadership of Mr. E. G. Woodward. The works performed were 'Emmaus' (Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, the composer, conducting) and 'The Hymn of Praise,' conducted by Mr. Vine, organist of the Abbey. The principal vocalists were Miss Gertrude Lynes and Miss Margaret Hicks Beach (sopranos), and Mr. J. Leyland (tenor). Mr. Ivor Atkins, of Worcester Cathedral, officiated at the organ. The festival was held in the afternoon, and in the evening a recital of vocal and instrumental music was given in the Abbey.

The several musical societies have again got to work preparing for a busy season. The Choral Society is rehearsing for its first concert Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty,' Parry's 'Ode to Music,' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and the Gloucester Orchestral Society have in hand for their concert a very interesting selection, including Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Parry's Suite in F, and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Novellettes.' Mr. A. Herbert Brewer is the conductor of the Society, which was only formed last season, but which made at its first concert a remarkable success.

The Gloucester and Cheltenham Chamber Concerts, which were so popular last season, are to be repeated. At the concert to be given in Cheltenham on December 3, the Wessely String Quartet will play.

Professor Horatio Parker was present at the first rehearsal of the Gloucester Orpheus Society, and promised to write a part-song especially for the Society. An item of the programme for the Society's annual concert on January 1, 1903, is a setting of a Coronation Ode, written by Mr. H. Godwin Chance (a member of the Society) and set to music by Sir Hubert Parry, its President.

The programme for the season issued by the Cheltenham Musical Festival Society (under the direction of Mr. J. A. Matthews) includes Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' 'The Golden Legend,' the 'Messiah,' and Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony.

The Cirencester Choral Society are rehearsing Sir Charles Stanford's 'Revenge' and Bennett's 'May Queen.'

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the sixty-fourth season of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 14th ult. M. Kocian made his first appearance in Liverpool, and the talented young violinist achieved a large measure of success. Mr. Andrew Black appeared in the place of Mr. Van Rooy, and was in particularly good voice, his singing of 'Wotan's Abschied' ('Die Walküre') being excellent. The orchestra, under Dr. Cowen, and with Mr. A. W. Payne as principal violin, played Beethoven's C minor Symphony with much care. The chorus were let off lightly with one item, to wit, Sullivan's 'Song of Peace' from 'On Shore and Sea.'

M. Godowsky made a great impression on his first appearance in Liverpool, when he played at the Small Concert Room, St. George's Hall, on the 16th ult.; and a large audience welcomed M. Paderewski after an absence of several years, at his recital at the Philharmonic Hall, when he achieved all his usual success.

Mr. Santley headed a list of artists who provided a miscellaneous programme at the Philharmonic Hall on the 2nd ult., in the sacred cause of charity.——After a lapse of many years the Carl Rosa Opera Company reappeared in Liverpool, and their advent was a subject of much satisfaction.

On the 20th ult. a concert of particular interest was given at the College of Music by Messrs. Carl Courvoisier and Fred. C. Nicholls, when the programme was devoted in its entirety to their compositions. The concert-givers were assisted by Misses Isabel, Helena, and Mary McCullagh, Miss Mary Hillhouse, Mr. Frederick Austin, and Mr. Frank Bertrand.——The Sunday Society has just inaugurated its seventeenth season. Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung with much effectiveness by Mr. Berry's choir, supported by the Society's orchestra, as heretofore under the direction of Mr. J. W. Collinson. The soloists were Madame Conway, Miss Richer, and Mr. Berry.

The immense audiences which greet Dr. Peace at his Saturday afternoon and evening recitals, on the great organ in St. George's Hall, are such as to gladden the heart of the distinguished executant.——The fifteen special concerts at New Brighton Tower came to a brilliant conclusion with what is called a plebiscite programme. The season has been a great artistic success, but the attendance of the public has not always been what one could have wished. The warmest thanks are due to Mr. A. E. Rodewald for his splendid services as honorary director.——Finally the seven performances of Mr. Edward German's delightful 'Merrie England' drew all the town to the Shakespeare Theatre.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Though the string quartet formed in Manchester by Dr. Brodsky has only been in existence a few years, it may now be regarded as firmly established among the institutions of musical Manchester. Not having heard his earlier Leipzig quartet—which included Hans Becker, Novacek, and, I think, Klengel—I can draw no comparison. But that the Manchester combination can hold its own among the finest quartets in existence is now generally recognised. At the first Brodsky concert of the present season, which took place on the 8th ult., Mr. Simon Speelman, the unsurpassed viola-player, was absent from his usual place, in consequence of recent family bereavement, but a remarkably efficient substitute had been found in Mr. Catterall — Dr. Brodsky's young pupil—who is rapidly winning recognition as a string-player of first-rate ability (having already become a member of both the Hallé and Bayreuth orchestras). In other respects the quartet was constituted as usual—second violin, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, violoncello, Mr. Carl Fuchs. The programme consisted of Volkmann's G minor and Haydn's B flat major Quartets, and Beethoven's Third Sonata for pianoforte and violin. The last-named work, which naturally occupied the middle place in the programme, afforded an opportunity of hearing a young pianist named Edward Isaacs,—like Mr. Catterall, a pupil of the Royal Manchester College—who in the main acquitted himself very satisfactorily, playing with neatness and good taste, and falling short of masterly style only by reason of a slightly dry tone. The single point that in any way detracts from the success of these concerts is the want of a satisfactory hall.

With Dr. Brodsky's first concert, the Manchester musical season may be said to have opened, though one or two song recitals and the first performance here of German's 'Merrie England' came earlier. For the greater public the real opening ceremony was, however, the Hallé concert of the following Thursday, when, with four masterly works in as many different and sharply contrasted styles, Dr. Richter proved that the Hallé orchestra maintains in nearly all respects the extremely high standard to which he had brought it by the end of last season. But I begin to fear that some occasional blatancy in the heavier brass instruments is an ineradicable fault of the present combination. Here one traces the influence of those brass-band contests so prevalent in the North of England. It is true that Dr. Richter has very greatly mitigated the fault in question, but it is still liable to crop out again early in the season. The programme consisted of the 'Meistersinger' Overture, Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' Elgar's Variations, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Though there was no soloist the concert was extremely well attended, and Dr. Richter's reception was most enthusiastic.

At the concert given on Monday, the 20th ult., by that most ancient — and at the present time wonderfully flourishing — institution the Gentlemen's Concert Society, the same world-famous conductor presided over a smaller orchestra, and charmed a more exclusively fashionable audience with his interpretations of Sterndale Bennett's 'Naïads' Overture, Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale, the two new dream pieces by Elgar, and Handel's 'Partenope' Overture, the final piece taken from the programme of a concert given by the same Society, or its lineal predecessor, about the middle of the eighteenth century—I mean the eighteenth, not the nineteenth! The singer was Miss Alice Nielsen, whose youthful and vivacious manner led to happier results in the cavatina from 'Rigoletto' than in Gounod's 'Jewel Song.' In the Verdi air the audience had the unwonted pleasure of hearing Dr. Richter play a pianoforte accompaniment, which, in spite of fingers cramped by overlong holding of the baton, he did not fail to bring out with exquisite rhythmical elasticity.

A lecture of very exceptional interest was delivered before the Incorporated Society of Musicians (Manchester Section) on Saturday the 18th ult., the lecturer being Mr. W. H. Dayas, the singularly gifted professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Manchester College, and the subject 'Franz Liszt.' Since the death of Mr. Walter Bache, Mr. Dayas has been beyond question the most remarkable and distinguished pupil of Liszt resident in this country. An appreciation of the lecture, by Mr. Max Mayer (another pupil of the same master), appeared in the Manchester Guardian, and from Mr. Mayer's full and interesting account I have taken a few special points. 'The way in which Mr. Dayas dealt with his theme was refreshing in its unassuming simplicity, and coming as it did from one of the master's own pupils, it formed an interesting and graphic illustration of Liszt's personal charm.' Again, 'The indescribable charm and beauty of Liszt's tone was always present, and Mr. Dayas added that, often as he had heard him play, he had never been able to find out the secret of it. Utter unconsciousness of the tone-production was one of the strangest phenomena in Liszt's playing, and the lecturer pointed out how strangely it contrasted with the deliberate manner of the great present-day pianists.' . . . 'An interesting pianoforte recital followed, which served the double purpose of introducing several rarely-heard and almost unknown compositions by Liszt and of illustrating various sides of his creative genius.' Mr. Mayer was 'particularly grateful to Mr. Dayas for ignoring in his programme the Liszt of "Hungarian Rhapsody" fame and the "arranger"

Liszt,' those aspects of the master's genius having in the writer's opinion retarded the recognition of Liszt as an original creative composer. Among the 'little-known' compositions in question may be mentioned 'Funérailles' (a dirge written for three Hungarian patriots), 'Pater noster,' 'Hymne de l'Enfant,' 'Ave Maria,' and 'Eglogue' (from 'Années de Pélerinage'). Mr. Mayer concludes:—'Considering the informal and almost private character of the whole meeting, a detailed criticism of Mr. Dayas's rendering of his exacting programme would be out of place. It must therefore suffice to say that his well-known and highly-valued accomplishments as an executive artist, his masterly musicianship, his noble enthusiasm and comprehensive knowledge of Liszt's music ensured a performance which elicited enthusiastic and well-earned applause from the audience. As this consisted solely of musicians, it must have been a special source of gratification to Mr. Dayas to see his efforts so richly rewarded.'

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Choral work has hardly yet commenced so far as this city is concerned, but Miss Cantelo opened the concert season on the 14th ult. with a most exacting pianoforte recital. A programme which includes works by most of the great masters between Bach and Liszt must of necessity require something more than mere technique in the executant, and this higher discernment the recitalist exhibited in her ability to produce the salient features of the various schools included in the programme.

A noticeable feature in connection with music in Nottingham has been the invariably good attendances at the musical lectures at the University College. This was again the case on the 10th ult., when Dr. Horner took for his subject, 'Wagner.'

A concert of more than local interest took place on the 28th ult. Though strictly a chamber concert, the programme, embracing works by Brahms, Mendelssohn, and Tchaikovsky, attracted musicians of catholic taste. With Miss Cantelo at the pianoforte, Mr. G. F. Johnson and Mr. Thorpe playing the violin and violoncello respectively, local talent could hardly have been better represented.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Mid-Derbyshire Choral Union, a new venture, is a laudable attempt to organise the musical resources of the 'dale' county. Last year it was initiated as the Stonebroom and District Choral Union, and did excellent work. Now seeking wider scope it comes forward re-organised, with a strong programme, which includes Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' Stanford's 'The Revenge,' Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' Bennett's 'May Queen,' 'Elijah,' and the 'Messiah.' Any district supplying thirty qualified members can form a centre with a weekly practice, and full rehearsals of the whole chorus will be held monthly at each centre in rotation. Dr. S. B. Siddall is the moving spirit of the enterprise.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, who scored so unmistakably with his 'Meg Blane' at the recent Festival, has consented to re-visit the city on the 18th inst., when that work, together with Dr. Coward's 'Gareth and Linet,' will be performed by the Sheffield Musical Union. A 'Messiah' concert early in December and a revival of Sir Hubert Parry's 'Judith' are also features of the Society's scheme for the season.

Sullivan's Thanksgiving Te Deum had its first hearing in Sheffield at St. Mary's Church, on the 12th ult., where also the following evening 'Elijah' was performed, under Mr. J. A. Rodgers's direction, with a chorus of 130 voices, and Master E. Muscroft, Mr. J. E. Varley, Mr. T. W. Green, and Mr. John Browning as soloists.

A flourishing suburban body, the Norton Lees Choral Society, is doing excellent work under the lead of Mr. Horace Reynolds. With commendable enterprise they are introducing a work new to the district—Mr. J. M. Smieton's 'King Arthur.' The Penistone district, too, furnishes another example of perseverance and go-ahead enthusiasm. The Choral Society, which is prospering under Mr. Joseph Cooper's direction, embraces a wide district, and the organisation includes a chorus and orchestra, both of which show steady development. 'Elijah,' the 'Messiah,' and miscellaneous selections will provide the season's work.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It must be that Yorkshire musicians, though energetic enough when they do get to work, are slow in putting on their harness, for at the time of writing I find I have only one concert of first-rate importance to record. There are, however, the pleasures of hope to indulge in, for the chief concert-giving societies have issued programmes of a fairly interesting nature. The Leeds Philharmonic and Subscription Concerts, for example, will have given 'Israel in Egypt' before this appears in print, and promise also Stanford's 'Eden,' Richard Strauss's 'Wanderer's Sturmlied,' C. Wood's 'Dirge for two Veterans,' the 'Vätergruft' of Cornelius, and Elgar's pleasant choral suite, 'From the Bavarian Highlands.' The Leeds Musical Union are giving Elgar's 'Caractacus' and 'Coronation Ode,' Dr. Parker's 'Star Song,' Gluck's 'Orpheus,' and Parry's 'Song of Darkness and Light,' while they are pleasantly varying the invariable Christmas 'Messiah' concert by giving a selection from that work, together with portions of an equally venerable, but less hackneyed composition, the 'Christmas Oratorio' of Bach. At the Bradford Subscription Concerts it is not proposed to give any choral works of peculiar interest, but Beethoven's Choral Symphony and the third Act of 'Lohengrin' will take up one programme, and 'St. Paul' a second.

The Bradford Festival Choral Society, besides supplying the chorus on these occasions, will give on its own account Dr. Cowen's 'Coronation Ode,' and was to perform, on the 24th ult., too late for notice, 'Israel in Egypt,' which, after being shelved for some time past, seems to be enjoying a 'run.'

Of the more important West Riding Societies the Huddersfield Choral Society has been first in the field, giving, under the conductorship of Dr. Coward, of Sheffield, its first concert of the season on October 17, when Elgar's 'King Olaf,' together with Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and some short pieces, formed the programme. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. The brilliant and forcible chorus singing was the feature of the performance, and it was unfortunate that the playing of the orchestra left much to be desired, so that only one side of the work could be said to be quite adequately interpreted.

Huddersfield has been busy in other directions, the Glee and Madrigal Society having given a concert of the usual type on the 14th ult., while the Subscription Concerts began as long ago as September 23, with the Grenadier Guards Band, and Kocian and Godowsky appeared at the second concert of the series, on the 7th ult.

Though its concerts are semi-private, and for the benefit of its own members, the work of the Leeds Musical Union deserves record, for its object is the practise of concerted music for male voices, which is now not so much cultivated, at least for its own sake, as it might be. On the 14th ult. an interesting programme of glees was given under the conductorship of Mr. Bernard Johnson, an interesting feature being a new composition, 'The tuneful sound of Robin's horn,' by a Leeds musician, Mr. Arthur Grimshaw, whose success in giving a touch of fancy to effective vocal counterpoint deserves cordial acknowledgment.

Miscellaneous.

The fifth ordinary general meeting of Messrs. Novello and Co., Limited, was held at the registered office of the Company, 1, Berners Street, London, on the 9th ult. Mr. Alfred Henry Littleton (Chairman of the Company) presiding. The Secretary (Mr. Henry R. Clayton) read the notice convening the meeting, the minutes of the last general meeting—which were confirmed—and the auditors' report. The Chairman said the directors believed that the balance sheet would be considered eminently satisfactory—even more satisfactory than those of previous years. It would be noticed that the proposed dividend on the ordinary shares was only 10 per cent. as against 13 per cent. paid last year. The Board felt that, although they might have been justified in declaring an equally large dividend, they would be acting more in the general interests of the Company by doing what appeared on the balance sheet. They would see that a sum of £2,000 had been placed to building reserve account, and in addition that the large amount of £5,136 had been carried forward. It must also be remembered that a considerable sum had been spent on the purchase of new copyrights, new machinery, &c., although they did not appear in the accounts. The company were about to publish a new and important edition of Handel's oratorio the 'Messiah.' It had been found that up to the present time no such thing as a correct score of this immortal work existed; in fact, they could claim that the edition they were about to publish would be the first correct version of the 'Messiah.' The task of preparing this edition had been entrusted to the eminent Handelian scholar, Professor Prout, who, in the course of his work, had found no less than eighty-seven wrong notes, as well as quantities of other smaller defects in every edition published. In addition to his work on the vocal score, Professor Prout had thoroughly revised the orchestral score, omitting much that had been added to Handel in an unsatisfactory and inartistic manner, and had written extra parts for various instruments where he thought it necessary. The edition, the chairman observed, was being looked forward to with much interest by musicians, and the directors had every reason to expect that it would prove a great commercial as well as an artistic success. They had been instructed by His Majesty's Stationery Office to publish the Service with the whole of the music sung at the Coronation of Their Majesties in August last. This book formed the only complete record of the Coronation Service, and could not be produced by any other publisher, thus testifying to the value of the good-will of Novello & Co. The directors recently acquired by purchase at public auction the whole of the Lute series of anthems. This publication consisted of no less than 225 compositions, many of them by eminent musicians, and might be said to form a small catalogue in itself. The Chairman concluded by moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, which recommended the payment of a dividend of 10 per cent., or £1 per share on the ordinary shares of the Company. Mr. Augustus J. Littleton seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

The death of Mr. William Heaver, which we regret to record took place on the 15th ult., removes a prominent figure in the musical life of Norwich. He showed much practical interest in musical and philanthropic work, being secretary of the Norfolk and Norwich School of Music, the Hospitals Saturday and Sunday Funds, the House-to-House Collection Fund, the Eye Infirmary, and the Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund. He also found time among his multifarious duties to take an active part in the management of the Saturday Popular Organ Recitals under the auspices of the Town Council, and for many years he played the viola in the orchestra of the Norwich Philharmonic Society, held the office of librarian, and wrote the analytical notes for the concert programmes. Mr. Heaver, who was sixty-eight years of age at the time of his death, was the East Anglian correspondent of The Musical Times. He will be sorely missed in Norwich.

The following Scholarship and Exhibition awards are announced at the Royal Academy of Music: The Sir Michael Costa Scholarship to Benjamin James Dale; the Erard Centenary Harp Scholarship to Montagu Christie Butler; the Maud Mary Gooch and Henry Smart Scholarships (organ-playing) to John Arnold Ellis of Hull, and Montague Fawcett Phillips of Leyton; the Stainer Exhibition (also for organ) to Elsie Frances Cocks of Torquay; and the John Thomas Welsh Scholarship (for vocalists) to Alice Maud Lewis of Llanelly; the Ada Lewis Scholarships (singing) to Marcus Alexander Thomson (Bass) of Aberdeen and Frank Haden Morris (Bass-Baritone) of Croydon, (harp) to Rita Jacobs of London and Hilda May Hine of Portsmouth, (clarinet) to Sam Hartley Braithwaite of Egremont, Cumberland. Three more scholarships will be competed for in January next—the Macfarren (composition), the George Mence Smith (female vocalists), and the Sainton-Dolby (soprano vocalists). Full particulars of these scholarships may be obtained on application to the secretary of the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, London, W.

The eleventh 'Summerscales' musical competition was held at Keighley on September 27 and October 4. The entries were a record, the number of individual competitors reaching 1,134. The solo-singing was very creditable, and the choral classes brought forward some admirable societies. The Armley and District Choral Society, under Mr. Rickard, gained the mixed-voice choir prize, and the Habergham Church Glee Union, under Mr. Hitchen, came first in the male-voice choir section. The pianoforte prize was won against all-comers by Edgar Earnshaw, a lad of eight years of age, from Ilkley. He showed remarkable talent. Mr. Frederick Dawson adjudicated in the instrumental classes, and Dr. McNaught in all the vocal classes.

The concert given by Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford at the Royal Albert Hall on the 18th ult. was chiefly remarkable for the reappearance of Mr. Edward Lloyd, in pursuance of a promise made to the concert-givers. The vast hall was filled to overflowing, and the reception given to the popular artist was so enthusiastic as to almost unnerve him. It was soon evident, however, that Mr. Lloyd's voice and method had not been impaired by his absence from the concert platform, and that he was in full possession of his unrivalled powers. Madame Clara Butt and her husband were also in excellent form, and their efforts were received with hearty appreciation.

The Alexandra Palace choir and orchestra gave an admirable performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on the 18th ult., under the alert and spirited direction of Mr. Allen Gill. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Misses Mabel Calkin, Alice Lakin and Hannah Jones, Messrs. W. R. Maxwell, Claude Anderson, Ben Grove and Montague Borwell (who replaced Mr. Watkin Mills). The feature of the performance was, however, the exceptionally fine singing of the choruses, especially notable being the spirited rendering of the 'Baal' chorus and the finish with which 'He watching over Israel' was given.

The Windsor and Eton Choral Society, now in the sixty-second year of its existence, appears to be in a flourishing condition, under so enthusiastic and capable a conductor as Sir Walter Parratt. Former holders of the office have been the late Sir George Elvey, the founder of the Society, Mr. Samuel Smith, who threw much energy into the work, and Dr. C. Harford Lloyd. 'The Black Knight,' by Dr. Elgar, and the 'Coronation Ode' of Dr. Cowen, are the works selected for rehearsal during the present season.

The harvest festival at St. Mark's, Kennington, was held on Thursday and Sunday, the 16th and 19th ult. At the evening services on both days the 'Hymn of Praise' was sung by the choir. The solos were allotted to Miss Georgina Tear, Miss Edith Jenner, and Mr. E. Rice. Mr. C. T. Corke presided at the organ, and Mr. Warren Tear conducted.

A selection of music from Purcell's so-called opera, 'The Fairy Queen,' is announced to be performed in connection with Mr. Charles Fry's representation of Shakespeare's 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' to be given at the Royalty Theatre on the 15th inst. It will be remembered that, after having been lost for about two hundred years, the autograph score was discovered last year by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, as recorded in The Musical Times of June, 1901.

The Amateur Chamber Music Society (wind and string) has been formed, and the prospectus sets forth an attractive programme for the work of the first season. The hon. secretary is Mr. A. M. Donald, 57, Chestnut Road, West Norwood.

An organist and choirmaster will be shortly appointed at Worcester College, Oxford. He will be an Undergraduate member of the College, and be expected to pass the University Examinations in due course. Applications should be made to the Provost.

Mr. W. T. Henderson has, after fifteen years' service, resigned his position on the New York Times in order to accept the musical chair on the New York Sun.

Mr. H. Davan Wetton has been appointed conductor of the United Choirs of the Bow and Bromley Institute and the People's Palace.

Dr. Thomas Keighley, of Manchester, delivered his lecture entitled 'Early English Music' at Inverness on the 2nd, and at Aberdeen on the 6th ult.

Foreign Notes.

Amsterdam.—An excellent interpretation of Dr. Elgar's Symphonic Variations was given last month at one of the orchestral concerts of the Concertgebouw, under M. Mengelberg's direction. The work, which is much praised in the critical organs for its originality and verve, was received with every mark of appreciation and favour.

Berlin.—The Tonkünstler Orchestra, under the direction of Herr Richard Strauss, resumed its performances on the 6th ult., when the programme included Anton Bruckner's First Symphony, in C minor, Liszt's symphonic poem 'Festklänge,' and an interesting and well-received new work by Max Schillings, viz., a 'duologue' for solo violin and violoncello, with small orchestra. The last-named composer's comic opera, 'Der Pfeifertag,' has been brought out at the Royal Opera with good success. Another novelty at the Opera has been Massenet's 'La Navarraise,' with a German version of the libretto, which met with a highly favourable reception under the able direction of Herr Richard Strauss.

Bernburg.—A very successful performance of Heinrich Hofmann's important choral work 'Editha' was given last month by the Choral Association, under the direction of Musik-director Illmer.

Breslau.—The well-known music-publishing house of Julius Hainauer celebrated, on September 29, the hundredth anniversary of its establishment.

Cologne.—Herr Fritz Steinbach has been appointed director of the Conservatorium and conductor of the famous Gürzenich Concerts in succession to the late Dr. Franz Wüllner.——Under the conductorship of Dr. Max Burkhardt, a new choral society, 'Kölner Singakademie,' has been formed, from which, to judge from its opening concert given last month, much good work is to be anticipated.

Florence.—The prize competition opened last year, under the patronage of the Queen of Italy, for the composition of a grand mass, has just been decided in favour of a work by Signor Mattioli, the director of the Donizetti Institute, in Bergamo.

Frankfort-on-Main.—At the first concert of the season of the Hock Quartet, a new Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 35), by Robert Kahn, was produced for the first time, and received with great favour.

Ghent.—M. Jan Blockx, the composer of 'La Princesse d'Auberge,' has scored another great success with his new lyrical drama, 'De Bruid der Zee' ('The Bride of the Sea'), brought out at the Flemish Theatre, last month, under the direction of the composer. The libretto, from the pen of M. De Tière, deals effectively with an interesting and poetical subject, and has inspired the composer to a melodious and brilliantly orchestrated score in which the Flemish folk-song element, without being too obtrusive, has its appropriate share.

Hamburg.—Massenet's remarkable operatic legend, 'Le Jongleur de Nôtre-Dâme,' with its poetical and dramatically effective libretto, was produced at the Stadt Theater for the first time in Germany, on September 25, under capellmeister Gille's direction, and with very efficient artists in the solo parts.

Leipzig.—A series of subscription concerts, given by the excellent Chemnitz Municipal Orchestra, was opened on the 6th ult., under Herr Weingartner's direction. The programme was devoted entirely to Liszt's compositions, and included the symphonic poems 'Tasso' and 'Hungaria,' and the Pianoforte Concerto in A major, Herr A. Reisenauer being the pianist. The first Gewandhaus concert of the season, under Herr Nikisch's conductorship, was dedicated to the memory of the late King Albert, and included vocal numbers from Handel's oratorio 'Deborah' and Bach's cantata 'Ich habe genug, as well as Wagner's funeral dirge from 'Götterdämmerung,' and Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony. It was a deeply impressive performance.——Herr Stephan Krehl has been appointed to the senior professorship of composition at the Conservatorium, in the room of the late Professor Jadassohn.

Lund (Sweden).—The doyen of Scandinavian organists, M. Delan, chapelmaster of the cathedral, recently celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday. He has pursued his avocation without interruption for over sixty years.

Milan.—The new 'Politeama Verdi' was inaugurated last month with a very good performance of 'Il Trovatore.' By an ingenious contrivance, the cupola surmounting the building can be opened, so that performances during the summer months will be practically in the open air.——The financial position of the Theatre della Scala having been secured, performances of opera will be resumed, as usual, on St. Stephen's Day. Among the principal events during the season will be the production of Berlioz's 'Faust' as an opera—an experiment of questionable artistic propriety, and certainly opposed to the wishes of the composer.

Pesaro.—Signor Mascagni is to remain at the head of the Liceo Rossini after all, the adverse vote of the Municipal Council having been overruled by the superior authorities.

Riga.—The new theatre erected under the auspices of the government for performance in the Russian language only, was opened last month with the fairy play, 'Little Snow-white,' by Ostrowsky, with the charming incidental music by Tchaikovsky. Hitherto Riga only had its German theatre where, it will be remembered, Richard Wagner was for some time capellmeister.

Rome.—A new sacred opera by Don Lorenzo Perosi, entitled 'Leo the Great,' has recently been produced before a private circle, consisting chiefly of ecclesiastical dignitaries, by whom it was greatly appreciated.

Schwerin.—A new lyrical stage-work described by its author as an 'operatic mysterium,' and entitled 'Die Beichte' (The Confession), by Ferdinand Hummel, has been successfully brought out at the Court Theatre.

Stuttgart.—The Royal Court Theatre, for operatic and dramatic performances, was destroyed by fire in January last, and already a substantial, though probably only provisional, new building, with excellent acoustic properties, has been erected in its stead. It was opened on the 12th ult., with a gala representation of 'Tannhäuser,' under the very able direction of capellmeister Pohlig.

Turin.—A remarkable new sacred opera, 'La Tentazione di Gésu' ('The Temptation of Jesus'), was produced for the first time, on the 14th ult., at the Vittorio Emmanuele Theatre. The work, which is in one act, was listened to with rapt attention by a numerous audience, and created a profound sensation. At its conclusion there was a most enthusiastic demonstration in favour of the composer, Carlo Cortara. He is a native of Turin, and has already written two operas, a Mass, and some chamber works.

Brief Summary of Country and Colonial News.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

Bolton.—The Choral Union opened its present season in the Albert Hall on the 18th ult. with an excellent performance of Handel's 'Joshua.' The choruses were sung with much spirit and excellent tone and attack, but the orchestra was perhaps not quite so satisfactory. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Florence Barnes; Messrs. H. Turnpenny, Ivor Foster, and E. Jones, all being fully capable. Mr. W. Mullineux presided at the organ, and Mr. J. M. Bentley conducted with his customary care and skill.

Calcutta.—An interesting and successful concert was given, on September 16, by the Calcutta Choral Society, in the Dalhousie Institute. This excellent Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Alfred Ibeson, is supplying a want which has been greatly felt for years, by giving periodical concerts. The programme included the following popular part-songs: Hatton's 'Softly fall the shades of evening,' Barnby's 'Sweet and low,' Pinsuti's 'In this hour,' 'Good-night, beloved' and 'When hands meet,' and Macfarren's 'Break, break on thy cold grey stones,' which were admirably sung, giving evidence of most careful training, and reflecting great credit on the conductor and the members of the Society themselves.

Erdington.—A concert of sacred music was given in the Public Hall on September 28. Mrs. W. W. Abbott and Mr. Hickman-Smith were the vocalists, and Mr. Reginald Chamberlain contributed two violin solos. Mr. F. J. Heathcote accompanied with skill, while the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. C. Herbert Guest, gave admirable selections.

Hatfield Broad Oak (Essex).—A small Sanctuary organ has been added to the organ proper in the church here. It has been erected to the memory of the late Lord Rookwood, and is placed high up on the north wall of the Sanctuary. It contains three soft stops and is very effective. The work has been done by Messrs. Bedwell and Sons, of Cambridge. The new organ was dedicated on the 2nd ult. by the Lord Bishop of Colchester, the vicar (the Rev. F. W. Galpin) intoning the service. After the dedication, a short recital was given by the organist, Mr. Worton.

Kilmarnock.—A successful chamber concert was given on September 25, in the Art Galleries, by Miss Catherine Low and Miss Marie Newlands, assisted by Mr. James Edgar. The programme included Dvorák's Sonatina in G (Op. 100), for pianoforte and violin. Miss Low played amongst other pieces Schubert's Impromptu in A flat, and a Valse, Polonaise and Ballade by Chopin. Mr. Edgar's violin solos were an Adagio and Perpetuum mobile by Ries, and Miss Newland's contributions included songs by Mendelssohn and Schubert Leamington.—Mr. Frederick Fellowes gave his annual chamber concert, on the 6th ult., at the Town Hall. The programme opened with Mozart's String Quartet in C, No. 17, and also included Boccherini's Violoncello Sonata in C, played by Mr. Fellowes, and violin solos 'Romance sans paroles' and 'Rondo élégant' (Wieniawski), played by Herr Sück. Miss Dudley gave a capital rendering of the pianoforte part of Dvorák's Quintet in A major, which concluded the programme. Mr. Goddard and Mr. Reggel played respectively second violin and viola in the quartet and quintet. Madame C. Siviter was the vocalist.

Lyttelton, N.Z. — The Musical Union gave their third concert of the season on August 28 in the Canterbury Hall, under the capable direction of Mr. F. M. Wallace. The programme included the Overture to 'Der Freischütz,' Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, an entr'acte from Gounod's opera 'La Colombe,' and a March, by Halversen. Mr. D. Sinclair played a movement from Weber's Concerto in E flat as a clarinet solo, and Miss E. Barber and Mr. W. A. Bowring were the vocalists.

Windsor.—The programme of Messrs. Thomas Dunhill and Edward Mason's third concert of Chamber Music at the Royal Albert Institute on the 9th ult. was very interesting. It comprised Beethoven's Quartet for strings in G major (Op. 18, No. 2), a MS. quintet for strings and horn in F minor by Mr. Dunhill, and Mendelssohn's Concert Variations for pianoforte and violoncello, Op. 17. The artists included the Grimson Quartet and Mr. Hale Hambleton, in addition to the concert-givers, with Miss Perceval Allen as vocalist.

Correspondence.

THE BURIAL PLACE OF DR. CROTCH.

Sir,—Your informant of last month is incorrect in stating that Dr. Crotch was 'buried at Bishops Hull—not Bishop's Hull, as most of the books of reference state.'

The name appears to be a corruption of Hilla (as mentioned in Doomsday Book), Hulle, and later Hill-Bishoppes, and is most probably derived from its position on a hill, the Manor being the property of the Bishop of Winchester, which would account for it being written in the singular. The apostrophising of the letter S is confirmed by all the chief authorities, Toulmin, Savage, Webb, Pring, and my father's 'History of West Somerset.' I may also state that the late Vicar of the parish (a keen historian and antiquary) was most emphatic on this point, and attempted to introduce Bishop's Hill.

Harold A. Jeboult.

Taunton.

[In non-apostrophising the place where the remains of Dr. Crotch lie buried, we followed the form of its name as stated in the legal notices affixed to the door of the church at the time of our visit; and as the various issues of so accurate a book of reference as Kelly's Directory of Somerset and, indeed, 'The Clergy List,' give the same form, we certainly err in very good company.—Ed. M.T.]

BEETHOVEN'S HOUSE.

Dear Sir,—Will you permit me to correct a slight error which found expression in last month's Musical Times? It is there stated that the Schwarzspanierhaus—the Sterbehaus of Beethoven—bears no commemorative mark of the fact that the great master drew his last breath within those walls.

Visitors who approach this interesting spot from the Beethovengasse, which leads into the spacious courtyard, will look in vain for such a sign; but the outside of the building, which forms part of the Schwarzspanierstrasse—and here are situated the rooms which Beethoven occupied—bears a small tablet, which states in the briefest terms the fact, together with the date of the great composer's death.

The inscription, time and weather-worn, is none too clear, and may easily be overlooked. Still, there it is, and in justice to the music-lovers of Vienna, I should like to testify from personal observation that they have not overlooked the sombre days towards the end of March, 1826, whose record makes sad the hearts of musicians.—Yours faithfully,

Frank Merrick.

Clifton, Oct. 13, 1902.

[In reference to the above, the author of the paragraph writes:—'Dr. Merrick's positive evidence is of course conclusive, and it is satisfactory to know that the Viennese have retained the memory of their greatest musician. The memorial must, however, be in a very neglected state, since a search in the position indicated failed to discover it last summer, just as it did more than ten years ago.'—Ed. M.T.]

Answers to Correspondents.

E. F. D.—(1) The second of the two upper notes in Kuhlau's pianoforte sonatinas (e.g., Op. 55, No. 4) should be played with the last note of the triplet. Notational finesse did not engage so much attention in the old days as it does now. (2) The numbers attached to Field's Nocturnes are the same in the Liszt and Peters editions. (3) Yes, Mr. Frederick Dawson was one of Professor Klindworth's most distinguished pupils. (4) Op. 11, 21, 23, 24 and 27 by Volkmann are all original pianoforte compositions for four hands.

Piano.—It is not always an easy matter to explain the vagaries—'readings,' they are politely called—of a 'celebrated virtuoso.' The arpeggio assertiveness of the gentleman (or lady) you heard perform on the pianoforte would appear to be hardly justified by the music. There are some players who apparently do not let their left hand know what their right hand doeth, consequently the notes of the chords are not played together when they should be.

W. T.—The following bass or baritone songs may serve your purpose. 'Rage, thou angry storm' (Benedict), 'Loyal death' (Stainer), 'I'm a roamer' (Mendelssohn), 'The ould plaid shawl' (Haynes), Lyrics, Set 3 (C. H. H. Parry), 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' (J. Sergeant), 'King Charles' (M. V. White), 'Don Juan's Serenade' (Tchaikovsky), and 'A border ballad' (Cowen).

H. G. S.—We believe that the 'portraits' of Rubinstein's pianoforte pieces 'Kamenoi-Ostrow' (Op. 10) are those of the twenty-four maids of honour at the Court of Alexander II. Kammeny Ostrov ('island of stones') is one of the islands on which Petersburg is built; it is a fashionable quarter of the Russian capital.

M. McI.—(1) Do you not mean the opera of 'Ascanio,' not 'Ascario'? If the former, it is the composition of M. Saint-Saëns, and was produced at the Paris Opera House, March 21, 1890. (2) Yes, it was in the existing Town Hall of Birmingham that Mendelssohn conducted his oratorio 'Elijah' in 1846.

A Reader.—(1) You will have to solve the problem of playing two notes in the right hand against three in the left, a matter of practice and perseverance in overcoming a difficulty. (2) An Examiner will give credit for a discriminate use of the pedal, even though its use may not be indicated in the music.

J. R.—The word soli is the plural of solo. In the extract you send us, the use of the word 'solos' would be less pedantic. Technique is a term used in regard to mechanical skill. A player may have a splendid technique, but no soul, as, indeed, is too often the case.

F. R. S.—It would be as well if you were to submit to a publisher your set of waltzes in a pianoforte version; when that has been considered, the full score might follow. It is not every composer who scores his work, or even scores by it—there are scores of cases to the contrary.

Mathematicus.—The organist who promised to play you 'the Giant' after having given you a specimen of every possible combination in an organ containing forty stops, may have been a combination in himself—of practical joking and lilliputian technique.

A. R. C. O.—The works here enumerated are without soprano and contralto solos: 'Festgesang' (Mendelssohn), 'Rock of Ages' (Bridge), 'Zion' (Gade), 'Song of Thanksgiving' (Cowen), 'The Procession of the Ark' from the 'Rose of Sharon' (Mackenzie).

Scopulus.—(1) There is much to be said pro and con in regard to the sonatinas in F and G ascribed to Beethoven, but perhaps the balance of opinion is in favour of the con. (2) Try Naumann's 'History of Music'; the chapters on English music are by Ouseley.

Portion.—(1) Mr. J. Brotherhood, of New York, may be addressed care of Messrs. Novello, 1, Berners Street, W. (2) Mr. Ward Jackson's 'Gymnastics for the fingers and wrist' may be obtained from Messrs. Metzler and Co.

F. B.—For books on the training of boys' voices, consult 'The art of training choir boys' (Primer), by Sir George C. Martin (Novello); 'A treatise on a practical method of training choristers,' by J. Varley Roberts (Frowde); and 'The boy's voice,' by J. Spencer Curwen (Curwen).

J. R. L.—The specification of the Westminster Abbey organ appears in the present number (p. 734); and we gave some particulars of the organ used at the Coronation of Queen Victoria in our issue of February last, p. 102.

Tartan.—Yes, Mr. Maurice Sons is the leader of the Scottish Orchestra, but we do not know the name of the gentleman who is his colleague at the first desk. The leader of the second violins is Mr. Daeblitz.

Gustave.—M. Jouvin's 'Life of Auber' has not been translated into English: the only biographies of the composer in our language are those in the various dictionaries.

G. A. B.—Mr. Joseph Yarwood, the glee composer, was born at Manchester, May 6, 1829, and we have not heard of his death.

P. G. N.—With every desire to help our correspondents in every way possible, we fear it is too large an order to suggest volumes of poems suitable for musical settings.

Horatius.—The song you want is by Fase, and is entitled 'Never mind the rest,' but pray do not apply the advice in its musical sense.

H. A. F.—Try Franklin Taylor's Pianoforte Studies; for a graded selection of pieces see Ridley Prentice's 'The Musician' (J. Curwen and Sons).

Organist.—Ciphering, in an organ, is the result of mechanical disorder, and has nothing to do with false harmonics.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).
(Assistant Lay Clerk, Westminster Abbey)
Mr. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—
"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.
"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.
"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.
"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH."—BROMLEY.—"The title-part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionalism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the Baal scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

"Mr. Montague Borwell was a perfect exponent of the fiery Prophet. He is the nearest approach to Santley I have heard for a long time. The dramatic instinct, the necessary sarcasm, and the devotional spirit of the Prophet were all there. The great air, 'Is not His Word,' being sung with much spirit, the top F rang as resonantly as a bell. The beautiful air, 'It is enough,' was splendidly sung, and Mr. Borwell had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments."—Tonbridge Free Press.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

"ELIJAH."—"Miss Winifred Marwood made a great impression by her rendering of 'Hear ye, Israel.' It was sung as it should be—prayerfully, and not shouted to the people."—Tonbridge Free Press.

"HIAWATHA."—"Miss Winifred Marwood, a soprano of wide range and pleasing method, and Mr. Montague Borwell, a resonant baritone, took the solos in the second scene, and their treatment of the deeply pathetic picture left little to be desired."—Surrey Advertiser.
Address, 56, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.

TO CONDUCTORS, SECRETARIES OF CHORAL SOCIETIES, AND CONCERT GIVERS.

MR. FRED LIGHTOWLER

(BARITONE).

"Mr. F. Lightowler's singing has afforded me very great satisfaction, the beauty of tone and extensive compass of his voice, and the highly artistic and sympathetic feeling with which he sings, make the remembrance of his performance extremely pleasant."—Dr. EDWARD ELGAR.
Terms and Vacant Dates, The Cathedral, Worcester.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

RICHTER CONCERT, Oct. 17, 1902.—"His grand renderings of songs by Schubert, Brahms, and Tschaikowsky touched heights and depths of feeling and power that are only attainable by such a voice linked to such a temperament. Thunders of applause fell to his lot from a critical audience."—Visitor.

NOTTINGHAM, November 18, 1902.—"Remarkable power and purity of tone. Nothing could have been finer than his vocalisation."—Guardian.
Address, 23, Clifton Road, Maida Vale, W.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)
(Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral.)

"MESSIAH."—"Mr. J. Coleman sang 'Why do the nations?' with dramatic power and effective phrasing. 'Behold, I tell you a mystery,' and 'The trumpet shall sound,' he also gave in a highly expressive manner."—Coventry Herald.

MELBOURNE.—"Mr. Coleman, if possible, even enhanced the justly high reputation which he had in Melbourne. He was in his very best form, and was deservedly encored for 'Sons of Mars' (Trotère) and 'The Tempest Fiend' (J. H. Adams)."—Burton Chronicle, Nov. 6, 1902.

GAUL'S "HOLY CITY."—"Mr. Coleman sang his numbers in first-class style, with great pathos and admirable finish, and winning most enthusiastic applause."—Derby Reporter, Jan., 1902.

WORCESTER.—"Mr. J. Coleman met with an enthusiastic reception. That he should have for his only song 'The Young Royalist,' a DOUBLE ENCORE speaks for itself as to the character of his singing."—The Worcester Echo.
Address, The Cathedral, Lichfield.

THE HANDEL PORTRAIT AT GOPSALL.

The most celebrated, and yet the least known portrait of Handel is that at Gopsall, Leicestershire, the seat of Earl Howe, by whose kind permission we are enabled to give a reproduction of the original as our supplemental portrait. This has been prepared from a negative taken by a photographer specially sent from London to Gopsall in order to obtain the best possible result for the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It will be remembered that Gopsall was built by Charles Jennens, Handel's friend and librettist, and an ancestor of Lord Howe. The picture in question, painted at the request of Mr. Jennens, is from the brush of Thomas Hudson (1701-1779), a portrait painter of repute in his day, who numbered among his pupils Sir Joshua Reynolds.

The portrait, life-size, represents Handel in his seventy-second year, three years before his death. As it hangs in the dining-room at Gopsall it presents a magnificent appearance, the canvas measuring 7ft. 8in. × 4ft. 9in. The great composer is seated, and is clad in full court dress—velvet coat and breeches of French grey colour, silk stockings, and black shoes with gold buckles. The coat is trimmed with handsome gold embroidery, and is adorned with lace frills at the wrists. The gold-headed cane, the gilt-tipped sword in its leather-covered scabbard, the three-cornered hat, and the copy of the 'Messiah' at the composer's right hand, are imposing accessories to this splendid representation of the great musician. The face is strong and heavy, with resolute lips, and the bushy dark eyebrows produce a striking contrast to the imposing greyish-white wig so characteristic of the eighteenth century. Half-length replicas of this portrait, also by Hudson, are more familiar than the original, but they by no means give that dignity to the pose which is so marked a feature of this full-length delineation at Gopsall.

We may conclude this attempt at a description of the portrait with a quotation from Dr. Burney in regard to Handel's facial appearance. He says: 'His countenance, which I remember as perfectly as that of any man I saw but yesterday, was full of fire and dignity; and such as impressed ideas of superiority and genius . . . His general look was somewhat heavy and sour; but when he did smile, it was his sire the sun, bursting out of a black cloud. There was a sudden flash of intelligence, wit, and good humour, beaming in his countenance, which I hardly ever saw in any other.' In looking at this portrait, does not the expression on the face premeditate a smile—'a sudden flash of good humour'—in those majestic features?

As a sequel to the article on the history of the 'Messiah' in the November issue of this journal, the following additional information is offered towards completeness in regard to the earliest London performances of the work. On his return from Dublin in the autumn of 1742, Handel completed his oratorio of 'Samson,' which he had begun a year earlier and before his departure to the Emerald Isle. He opened his oratorio season of 1743 on February 18 with 'a new Oratorio, called Samson,' so the advertisement stated, and with this addition: 'Tickets will be delivered to subscribers (on paying their subscription money) at Mr. Handel's house, in Brook Street, near Hanover Square. Attendance will be given from nine o'clock in the morning till three in the afternoon.'*

The scheme of the subscription was extended from six nights to twelve—three of which were to be given to the 'Messiah,' then, and for several years afterwards, simply announced as 'A Sacred Oratorio.' As an interesting side-light on Handel's oratorio venture, the following letter from Horace Walpole may be quoted:—

TO SIR HORACE MANN.

Arlington Street, Feb. 24. 1743.

. . . Handel has set up an Oratorio against the Operas, and succeeds. He has hired all the goddesses from farces and the singers of Roast Beef from between the acts at both theatres,† with a man with one note in his voice, and a girl without ever an one; and so they sing, and make brave hallelujahs; and the good company enjoy the recitative, if it happens to have any cadence like what they call a tune.

Another extract from a private letter written from London to a correspondent in Dublin may also be given, as it bears testimony to the success of Handel in his oratorio career. The letter is dated 'London, March 8, 1743':—

Our Friend Mr. Handel is very well, and Things have taken a quite different Turn here from what they did some time past; for the Publick will be no longer imposed on by Italian Singers and wrong-headed Undertakers of bad Operas, but find out the Merit of Mr. Handell's Compositions and English Performances. That Gentleman is more esteemed now than ever. The new Oratorio (called SAMSON) which he composed since he left Ireland, has been performed four Times to more crowded Audiences than ever were seen; more people being turned away for want of Room, each Night, than hath been at the Italian Opera.

Unfortunately the London newspapers of 1743 may be searched in vain for any references, beyond the advertisements (the first of which was quoted last month) to the three metropolitan performances of the 'Messiah' in that year. But there is a curious rhyming reference thereto, which we give below. It should be noted, however, that the subjoined lines form part of the advertisement of the last performance of the season. This rather important fact has

* Handel's house, which still stands, is now numbered 25, Brook Street. He lived there from the year 1725 till his death in 1759.

† It was customary at this time for the galleries to call for the ballad 'The Roast Beef of Old England' to be sung between the acts and before the play not, we believe, hitherto been pointed out; and the inference may be that Handel, who managed his own concerts, inserted the rhyme as a part of his advertisement, the gentleman who 'wrote extempore' probably being a friend and admirer of the oratorio composer and manager:—

Wrote extempore by a gentleman, on reading the Universal Spectator, on Mr. Handel's new oratorio, perform'd at the Theatre Royal in Covent-Garden.

Ceaſe, Zealots, ceaſe to blame theſe Heav'nly Lays,
For Seraphs fit to ſing Meſſiah's Praiſe!
Nor, for your trivial argument, aſſign,
"The Theatre not fit for praiſe Divine,"
Theſe hallow'd Lays to Muſick give new Grace,
To Virtue Awe, and ſanctify the Place.
To Harmony, like his, Celeſtial Pow'r is giv'n,
T' exalt the Soul from Earth, and make, of Hell, a Heav'n.

The reader may very naturally ask: 'Why do you not give us the extract from the Universal Spectator?' Alas! that periodical cannot at present be traced. May not the 'gentleman' who wrote the above lines have been Charles Jennens?

In conclusion, the remarkable and benevolent performances annually given by Handel at the Foundling Hospital must be mentioned, but as the details of these were set forth in the May and June issues of this journal, in an article on 'The Foundling Hospital and its Music,' there is no need for their recapitulation.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.

'The bottomless well of St. Andrew.' From this originated the fascinating Cathedral of Wells, the outstanding feature of the little city pleasantly situated in the heart of Somerset. If the visitor, like the present writer, is fortunate enough to be favoured with Canon Church as a cicerone, his footsteps will be directed to the springs which burst out at the easternmost part of the Cathedral. 'It is as well to begin at the beginning; here is the fons et origo of everything in Wells,' remarks the genial Canon, who is sub-dean and historian of Wells: moreover, he has resided there for nearly half-a-century, and has thereby acquired a knowledge of 'every stick and stone' in the place. Standing here, in the softened sunlight of a perfect autumn day, one can appreciate the wisdom and taste of the first Saxon missionaries who planted their little church at this tranquil spot where the springs, which rise in the Mendip Hills and percolate through the intervening country, form the pools which give the place its name. Although Wells is riverless, the wayfarer along its main thoroughfare cannot fail to notice on each side of the street the running stream which, like Tennyson's 'Brook,' goes on for ever. For Bishop Beckington, in the fifteenth century, became a liberal benefactor to the city by granting the inhabitants the right to a continuous supply of water from one of these springs, a right which they enjoy to this day. Its ceaseless flow forms a striking feature of the place; for this benefaction the citizens of olden times bound themselves to make a yearly pilgrimage to the tomb of the Bishop, and there 'pray for the repose of his soul.'

Wells is essentially an ecclesiastical city. It cannot claim to be the birthplace of any great man; its history has been singularly uneventful, and it has never supplied a title of nobility. But noble indeed is its chief glory—the Cathedral, which acts as a magnet to a place that, without any disrespect, may be called 'a little out of the way.' Have not the dwellers therein reason to be proud of their loadstone? We shall see.

THE ARMS OF THE CITY OF WELLS.

Twelve hundred years have come and gone since a church first stood by 'the Well of St. Andrew,' and for nearly a thousand years Wells has been the seat of a Bishop, i.e., a Cathedral Church. The Saxon sanctuary (A.D. 705) gave place to the present beautiful building—or, to be more exact, its earliest portion—in the twelfth century, the date of consecration being 1148. Then followed the Nave (circa 1191), and the church was finished and consecrated by Bishop Jocelin, November 18, 1239. Subsequent additions — the Chapter House, the Lady Chapel, the reconstruction of the Choir, with its three easternmost bays, &c.—cover a further period of over a century; and in 1363, when Bishop Ralph died, he was buried before the new high Altar as the finisher of the reconstructed church, the stately fane as it now stands.

'The West front of Wells is a masterpiece of art indeed, made of imagery in just proportion, so that we may call them vera et spirantia signa. England affordeth not the like.' So wrote Thomas Fuller long ago, and the present-day beholder of this marvellous creation in stone is in full accord with the quaint old divine. It is essentially a West front, and not the West end of the Nave, because the two western towers (begun in 1386 and 1424 respectively) project beyond the aisles of the Nave. The splendid exhibition of mediæval sculpture gives it a distinction unique in England. No fewer than 305 figures, many of them life size, occupy places in this sculpture gallery. They represent 'the Church on earth, and the dead rising to life, before Angels and Apostles, standing at the throne of the Judge of dead and living.' Kings and Queens and ecclesiastics of various orders also form a part of this glorious company, and the uppermost tier represents 'Our Lord seated in glory within a vesica-shaped niche,' to crown this conception of sculptured magnificence. The reader may be referred to the excellent photograph of the West front, which he will find on page 791, as an aid to his imagination of this picture in stone. The erection of a scaffold for necessary repairs in 1873 enabled the courteous Sacrist of the Cathedral, Mr. T. W. Phillips, to take a large number of photographs of the figures, the most complete collection of its kind in England, and one that justly merited the unqualified approval of so severe a critic as Mr. Ruskin.

The North porch (circa 1185), one of the most ancient parts of the Cathedral, is a fine piece of architecture. Considering that the designer and his workmen had just emerged from the large methods of Norman building, the exquisite delicacy and refinement manifested in every detail of the interior of this porch is all the more remarkable, and one is thankful that so beautiful an example of twelfth-century artistry has escaped the hands of the restorer. Before passing on to the interior of the Cathedral, the reader may be asked to look again at the view on page 791. On the left-hand side he will see one of the peculiar glories of Wells, called the Chain Gate, above which is a bridge over the public roadway, leading from the Cathedral to the Vicars' Close, of which more anon.

A CAPITAL TOOTHACHE.

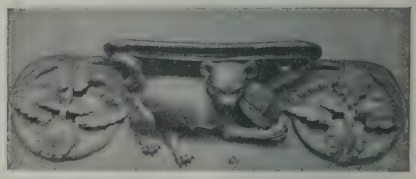
Upon entering the church at the West door one cannot fail to be greatly impressed with a very remarkable architectural feature—the inverted arches, of which there are three, one being shown in our illustration on page 793. It might readily be assumed that this trio of inversions formed part of the original design. But this is not so. Nearly six hundred years ago the increased weight of the central tower had thrust the piers outward, and cracks appeared in the arches of the upper story. No wonder that, in 1338, the whole Chapter were called together on account of the 'shattered condition of the fabric.' The construction of these inverted arches—on the north, south, and west of the central tower—happily fulfilled all expectation; 'their work has stood the test of nearly 600 years, and it has given a characteristic feature to the church.'

The style of the Cathedral is Transitional Norman, gradually passing into Early English, and flowing on easily into the Decorated of the Chapter House and the Lady Chapel. Not the least fascinating part of the building is that of its latest period, the perfectly proportioned 'Procession path' behind the altar, connecting the Lady Chapel with the Cathedral itself, the whole forming a vista of exquisite charm.

A few features of the interior may now be mentioned. The capitals of the piers are most amusing in their conceits. We give a photograph of a typical specimen—'a capital toothache.' The music-gallery, in the Clerestory of the sixth bay on the South side of the Nave, is not so marked a feature as that of the Minstrels' Gallery at Exeter; but two noticeable brackets on the spandrels of the fourth bay on the same side (dating back to the end of the thirteenth century) may have been placed there in order to support a gallery for an organ. The massive double lectern, entirely of brass and with the Bible resting upon it, was the gift of Bishop (formerly Dean) Creyghton, father of the Precentor-composer. It bears the following inscription:—

> Dr. Robt. Creyghton, upon his returne from fifteene years Exile, wth or Soueraigne Lord Kinge Charles ye 2d made Deane of wells, in ye yeare 1660, gaue this Brazen Deſke, wth Gods holy worde theron to the saide Cathedrall Church.

The extraordinary clock in the North Transept causes endless amusement to young and old. It is said to have once belonged to Glastonbury Abbey, and to be nearly 600 years old. The dial plate is six feet in diameter. At every quarter of the hour the figure of 'Jack Blandiver' kicks the bell in a life-like manner; and after this gentleman has performed the operation eight times in succession at the hour, and the big bell begins to toll, four knights (so called) mounted on horseback and stationed above the dial, are set in motion. They rush round, tournament fashion, charging each other with such ferocity that one unfortunate warrior is felled at each encounter, and has barely time to recover his upright position before he is again and again knocked down with resounding clatter upon his horse's back. His three companions fight twenty-four times a day unscathed. On Sundays the 'Knights' are given a day of rest, the mechanism which sets them in motion being detached. Hardly less amusing, though the humour is more subtle, are the old-world misereres, of which sixty-four have escaped destruction, though some have been damaged.



HEY DIDDLE DIDDLE, THE CAT AND THE FIDDLE!

This is unfortunately the case with the specimen of which the above is a photograph,—'Hey diddle diddle, the cat and the fiddle'—as pussy has lost her bow leg!

The stained glass is of rare excellence. So great an authority as Mr. John R. Clayton tells us, in the course of an interesting conversation on the Cathedral, that 'the Jesse window (at the East end of the Choir) is the most beautiful fourteenth-century glass in Europe.' The colouring is so symmetrical, not a heterogeneous mass, but a study in law and order of the highest artistic import. As Canon Church points out the stately and richly-robed figures in this East window—their face and form, their flowing mantles of green and ruby and gold—one recalls the lines of Perronet's famous hymn:—

> Extol the Stem-of-Jesse's rod,
> And crown Him Lord of All.

Reference has already been made (on page 788) to the unique Chain Gate. This is approached by a flight of steps leading from the North aisle of the Choir to the Chapter House. Our illustration shows the peculiar construction of these steps, with their graceful sweep round into the lofty double arches of the portal of the Chapter House. Their continuance 'straight on' reaches the bridge across the public road, and leads down into the Vicars' Close. By this means of exit the Priest and Lay Vicars of bygone days could reach their dwelling-places without coming in contact with the townsfolk, who were often hostile to those who held office in the Cathedral. The Chapter House, octagonal in form, is 'a glorious development of window and vault,' with 'a slender palm-like central pillar, from which spreads the branching roof with manifold radiating arms enclosing the tent-like canopy of stone.' In olden times the Chapter House was the daily home and centre of the community, where each and all held communion and fellowship one with another and with their brethren departed, 'dead, dispersed, or changed and changing.' This noble building rests on the massive arches of the solidly-built Undercroft or Treasury, called, though incorrectly, the Crypt. Here were kept the vestments, ornaments, registers and other precious things belonging to the Cathedral and the Bishop; and in order to add to the security of its massive walls, the Sacristan slept in those dungeon-like regions every night, after having swung to and bolted the huge double doors—of fine thirteenth-century work—in order to further protect the treasures committed to his care.

In speaking of the glories of Wells, Mr. Clayton refers to 'the sense of refinement in detail of every kind' which characterises the edifice. 'The woodwork is superlatively good'; he adds, 'the carving is beyond any other for delicacy and finish, and, in fact, there is no rude work of any kind.' The reader may be tempted to ask if there is no blot on so fair a picture. Alas! there is. The organ case is so ugly as to be a disgrace to its environment. If a new case was found to be necessary for the rebuilt organ of 1854, surely something of a better design could have been devised. But it is not too late to remove this smirch on the architectural beauty of the Cathedral. Will not some wealthy resident in Somerset, or one who is interested in the county, supply the wherewithal for removing so grievous an eyesore?

We may now turn our steps to the Cathedral Library, delightfully situated above the East cloister. The present building dates from the middle of the fifteenth century, and owes its origin to Bishop Bubwith. In discoursing upon its characteristics, Canon Church directs attention to the vestibule with its open timbered roof of Mendip oak, now whitened with age, but strong in its durability. A peculiarity of this mediæval Library is the large assortment of book chains, 285 in number, which remain; they are of three different lengths corresponding to the three shelves of the book cases. The Canon shows how the ring at the end of each chain was passed along a rod above the shelf at which the student sat, and that when the book was placed in position, the rod was padlocked. No music, unfortunately, is to be found therein, but there are some interesting old books. One very valuable treasure of Greek type is a copy of Aristotle and Theophratus, bearing the autograph of Erasmus and containing some annotations probably in his hand. This volume was presented by the learned Dean Turner, 'satirist, herbalist, and physician.' A case containing Turner's books includes a tract by him (circa 1544), entitled: 'The Huntyng of the Romyshe Vuolf, made by Vuylliam Turner, doctour of Phisik.' Another small black-letter tract bears the title: 'A neue booke of spirituall Physik for dyverse diseases of the nobilitie and gentlemen of England.' In these satires he denounces as ravening wolves not only the 'lordlie bishoppes,' but the 'crowish start uppes' of the new Tudor nobility who had fattened upon the spoils of the Church and of the poor; and here is Turner's 'Herball,' printed in 1568, and 'the first of the kind ever written by an Englishman,' and a description of the 'bathes of Bathe.'

In the binding of one of the books there was discovered part of a composition by Dr. Robert Fayrfax (d. 1529), beginning 'Somewhat musing,' the words from Lord Rivers's Lament in prison in 1483, as in p. 100 of the Percy Reliques. Those who wish to know more about the Wells Cathedral Library and its treasures may be referred to an interesting and illustrated paper communicated to the Society of Antiquaries on December 6, 1900, by one of its Fellows, Canon Church, sub-librarian of the Cathedral, who so vigilantly watches over the precious charters (carefully arranged in boxes and catalogued) and volumes deposited in this old-world habitation of venerable tomes.

Before referring to matters musical, a word or two may be said in regard to some of the Bishops of Wells. The places of honour must be given to the three master-builders of the Cathedral—Robert of Lewes (d. 1166), Reginald de Bohun (d. 1191), and Jocelin (d. 1242), of whom old Fuller said: 'God, to square his great undertakings, giving him a long life to his large heart.' We may pass on to William Bytton ('the Saint'), the holder of the See from 1267-1274. He may be designated the dental Bishop, because, even till within comparatively recent years, people afflicted with toothache were wont to flock to his tomb and place their aching jaws upon it, in the expectation of being relieved of their pain. In this connection Mr. John R. Clayton recalls an interesting incident within his personal knowledge when superintending the restoration works at Wells. As it was found necessary to remove the tomb of Bishop Bytton, and as his remains, what were left of them, rested in a heavy stone coffin, the lid was first removed and the skeleton of the Prelate exposed to view. On examining the bones, Mr. Clayton found a perfect set of teeth, of which any lady might have been proud, in the jaw of the Bishop! And this was the more remarkable in that an inscribed plate found in his coffin testified to his death in extreme old age. Mr. Clayton puts forth the very reasonable theory that Bytton—the very name has a toothy sound—had the reputation of being blessed with so perfect a set of teeth, that folks from far and near superstitiously thought he would be endowed with miraculous power after death to cure the ills attendant upon their defective dentition.

Bishops Bubwith and Beckington, as the Cathedral Library and town water-supply benefactors, have already been mentioned, and Bishop Ralph will be referred to later; we may therefore conclude this enumeration with the best known of all the Prelates—good old Thomas Ken (or Kenn), who held the Bishopric from 1685 to 1690. His name is familiar the world over as the author of the morning and evening hymns: 'Awake, my soul, and with the sun,' and 'Glory to Thee, my God, this night.' There is a legend that both these hymns were composed in a grotto which still exists on the terrace of the Palace garden. The stately hall of the Bishop's palace, dating from the later years of the thirteenth century, is most picturesquely situated. The moat which surrounds the buildings is fed by a stream from St. Andrew's Well close by; this old moat and the portcullis and drawbridge invest the place with quite a mediæval environment. The energetic manner in which the swans ring the bell, placed under an overhanging window, for their food is to be commended for its hungry impetuosity.

No article on Wells in a musical journal should omit special reference to the composer Robert Creyghton. The son of the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and born probably in 1639, he became a prebendary of the Cathedral in 1667, and a canon and precentor in 1674. He died at Wells, February 17, 1734. He was passionately devoted to music and composed much church music, of which only a small portion has been printed. He is best known by one anthem, his setting of 'I will arise.' By the kindness of Mr. T. W. Taphouse, of Oxford, the possessor of the book containing the original manuscript of this little gem of an anthem, we are enabled (on p. 792) to furnish our readers with a facsimile (very slightly reduced) of its opening bars in the autograph of the composer.

In regard to the organ, nothing seems to be recorded earlier than about 1620, when Dean Meredith gave £100 for a new instrument and promised a further sum of £100. But the Chapter archives contain 'Articles of agreement between the Dean and Chapter of Wells and Robert Taunton, of Bristol, organ maker, to build a fair well-tuned, usefull and beautifull double organ in the Cathedral, at a cost of 800*l*, or less according to the award of the Surveyor when the work is finished.' This was in 1662. We believe that the name of Taunton is practically unknown in the history of English organ-building, and Dr. E. J. Hopkins was investigating this discovery at the time of his death. The present instrument, of good tone but unsightly case, built by Father Willis, dates back to 1854; it has since been enlarged and now consists of three manuals. The organist sits at the South side of the instrument, so that he can command a view of both Choir and Nave.

As to the chief musicians of Wells, we cannot do better than refer to Mr. West's useful handbook 'Cathedral Organists' for information. The earliest record goes back to Richard Hugo, organist in 1487, but from an antiquarian point of view it may serve to give the payments made to John Clansay (1508):—

(a) Four marcs from two vacant stalls.
(b) All the annual fines and perquisites which would belong to a vicar, not perpetuated, during the life time of Richard Hugo
(c) A house of the annual value of 26/8.
(d) The payment of a deputy for Richard Hugo, as before 40/- ann. with power to appoint a fit deputy, should he become ill or too old.

In 1688, the year of his appointment, Robert Hodge was 'corrected and admonished for breaking windows'; his painstaking energies were evidently misapplied. We may now pass on to Dodd and William Perkins, father and son, who titularly held office (in succession) for nearly eighty years—1781 to 1860. William Perkins composed a florid and effete double chant in E, traditionally known as Malibran's chant, from the circumstance that the great singer joined in it at Wells Cathedral, August 22, 1830. During the organistship of Dodd Perkins one of the chorister boys was James Turle, subsequently organist of Westminster Abbey. From The Musical Times obituary notice of that revered church musician we extract the following reference to the period of his choristership at Wells—1810-13:—

> In later years he would sometimes recall his experience of the ways and manners of cathedral services of that time, for the astonishment of those who listened. The Nave of the sacred edifice at Wells, it would appear, was the recognised playground of the singing-boys, and there they were wont to indulge a juvenile passion for stone-throwing, and such like potentialities of mischief.

If anybody then cared about painted windows—which is doubtful—he trembled for the storied glass of Wells while the urchins of the choir pursued their gambols. Young Turle distinguished himself as a stone-thrower by sending a missile through St. Andrew's nose, and the fact is said to have been remembered long after by a sacristan who, pointing out the damage, remarked: 'That was done by the present organist of Westminster Abbey.'

To William Perkins succeeded Charles Williams Lavington, acting organist, and organist from 1842 to 1895. The memory of Mr. Lavington is justly revered. A native of Wells and a chorister in the Cathedral, he practically held the office of chief musician for more than half-a-century. During this long period of service he most faithfully and conscientiously discharged his responsible duties. His refined taste, under a sensitive and gentle manner, and deep religious feeling, left their mark on the services, and he won the respect of all who knew him or came under the influence of his modest personality. Upon the death of Mr. Lavington, in 1895, Dr. P. C. Buck, now of Harrow, held the post for the next four years.

The present holder of the office is the Rev. Dr. Thomas Henry Davis, born September 25, 1867. A native of Birmingham, Dr. Davis was educated at the famous King Edward School, and after taking, at the age of nineteen, his B.A. degree at London University, he became a mathematical master in his old school. As a boy of sixteen he became organist of St. Matthew's Church, Birmingham, and studied music under Dr. Belcher. From 1892 to 1895 he held a curacy at St. Mary's Church, Warwick; in the latter year he was appointed a Priest Vicar of Wells, frequently taking the organ at occasional services. On the resignation of Dr. P. C. Buck in 1899, Dr. Davis was appointed organist after competition. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, and took the degree of Mus. Bac., London, in 1889 and that of Doctor in 1901. He is conductor of the Wells Musical Association, which is now rehearsing

Sir Hubert Parry's 'Judith.' Dr. Davis is the only ordained Cathedral organist in England; probably the only one since the eighteenth century.

On the occasion of our visit, Evensong was unaccompanied, the day being Friday. An old-world character was imparted to the music, in that Farrant in G, and Gibbons's 'O clap your hands' had been selected. In listening, from the region of the Triforium, to these strains of past centuries—sung, and admirably sung, by the full-voiced choir below—the antiquity of these quiet resting-places and the charm of their hallowed associations impress one very strongly, and the stress of London life is, for the moment, forgotten.

Who knows but that, among that bright set of choristers, there may be a future organist of Westminster Abbey—another James Turle! A former organist of Wells referred to above, Mr. C. W. Lavington, was also a chorister of the Cathedral, and so was Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, the recently-appointed organist of Chichester Cathedral. Dr. Charles Parsons, a medical man residing at Dover and a former Wells chorister, published by subscription, in 1855 a collection of Cathedral music — four services and eight anthems, forming quite a remarkable achievement. These things should surely encourage the present boys to press forward and make their mark. While on the subject of the choristers, we may be permitted to express the hope that a resident Choir School may become a feature of Wells. At present the choristers are town boys, not altogether a satisfactory arrangement. As one of the houses in the precincts of the Cathedral could be made available for such a worthy purpose, it is to be hoped that this matter will merit the attention of the Cathedral authorities with a prospect of ultimate fulfilment.

ENTRANCE TO THE ORGANIST'S HOUSE, WELLS.
(Specially photographed for The Musical Times by Messrs. Dawkes and Partridge, Wells.)

The following morning—Saturday, November 8—happened to be Founder's Day of the College of Vicars, when the name of the benefactor, Bishop Ralph, who died in 1363, is annually celebrated. The College of Vicars is a large corporate body, holding its present charter from Queen Elizabeth. The Vicars possess their own ancient hall, where in former days they dined in common, while one of the brethren read to them for edification (or to aid digestion) from the quaint pulpit over the fireplace. This old room contains an interesting painting of the founder, Bishop Ralph of pious memory, with the Vicars kneeling before him. After Matins, the Priest and Lay Vicars—the senior Lay Vicar being the octogenarian Mr. Thomas Wicks—with the choristers make their way, surplice clad, on this commemoration day to their little fifteenth-century chapel situated at the end of the Vicars' Close, another of those unique appurtenances of which Wells can boast. A shortened form of Morning Prayer is sung, the music including Special Psalms (84, 122, 130) to Blow's single chant in E minor, Rogers in D for the Te Deum, and the same composer's anthem 'Behold, now praise the Lord'—all according to tradition. This special service is an exceedingly interesting relic of past times, and is analogous to Obiit Sunday at St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Finally, the more one studies our splendid English Cathedrals the more one becomes impressed with their varied characteristics and traditions—historical, architectural, ecclesiastical, and musical. Each edifice exercises its own peculiar spell, and Wells is by no means an exception by reason of its varied interests, its poetic environment, and its delicate beauty. 'There is no place,' said Professor Freeman, 'where you can see so many of the ancient buildings still standing, and still put to their own use'; and if those stones, hoary with the age of many centuries, could cry out, they might say to us, in the words of James Russell Lowell:—

> We remain
> Safe in the hallowed quiets of the past:
> Be reverent, ye who flit and are forgot,
> Of faith so nobly realised as this.

Acknowledgment for much kind help freely rendered in the preparation of this article, is due, and is hereby tendered to the Rev. Canon Church, Sub-Dean of Wells, and the Rev. Dr. T. H. Davis, Organist of the Cathedral; to Mr. T. W. Taphouse (always so willing to render invaluable aid); and, for the generous use of photographs, to Mr. T. W. Phillips, the well-informed Sacrist of the Cathedral; and to Messrs. Dawkes and Partridge, photographers, of Wells—both the latter gentlemen being Lay Vicars of the Cathedral.

TWO CHRISTMAS HYMNS & TUNES.

1. 'CHRISTIANS, AWAKE.'

The recurrence of Christmastide brings with it certain traditions of which old father Time will shortly remind us. One of these, as deep-rooted as any perhaps, is the singing of Christmas hymns and carols, not in the services of the church only, but in the home, and by country carollers not a few, as they go from house to house on the eve of the Nativity, sounding their strains of holy mirth under a starlit sky. Many of these hymns and their music have become so ingrained in our affections that we take them as a matter of course, with scarcely a thought of their origin or history. The following chit-chat on two popular Christmas hymns is offered in the hope that it will be of sufficient interest to be considered at least seasonable, if not acceptable. The first may be classed 'Ancient' and for the 'grown-ups'; the second 'Modern' and for the bairns, to adopt the pretty Scotch designation of the rising generation.

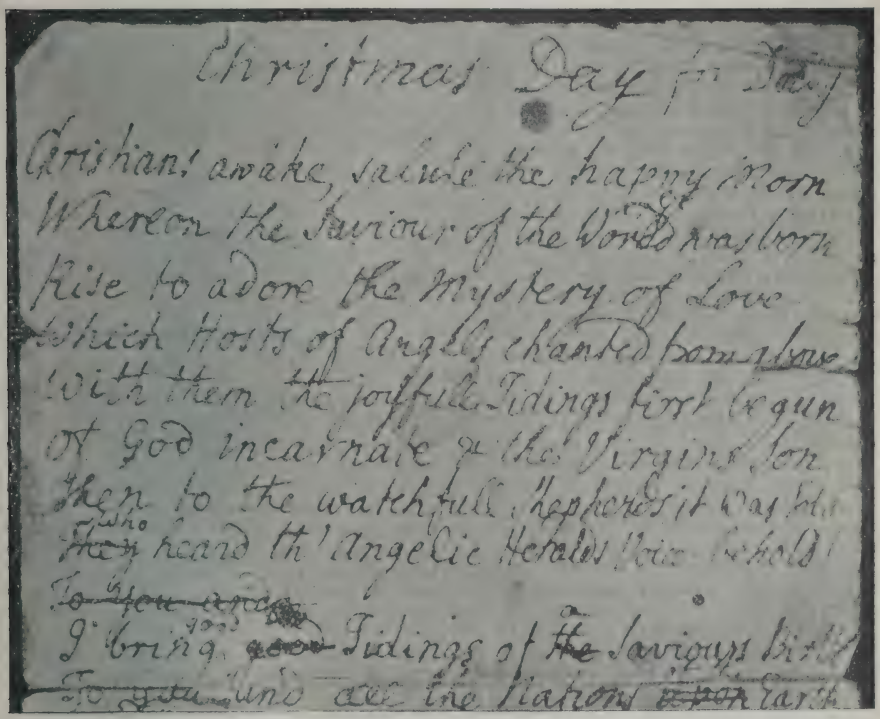
'Christians, awake, salute the happy morn,' was written by John Byrom, the Manchester poet and stenographer. He was born at Broughton, near Manchester, on February 29, 1692, and therefore had a birthday only once in every four years. Educated at Merchant Taylors' School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, he took his B.A. in 1712, and two years later was elected to a fellowship. Then he travelled abroad, and at Montpelier studied medicine, but he took no qualifying degree. On his return to London he invented a system of shorthand, and, in order to increase his income, taught his method. He also formed a secret shorthand society, and in 1742 obtained from Parliament the sole privilege for twenty-one years of teaching his system, which, however, in spite of its merits, has long since been superseded by swifter methods. Still, Byrom, who was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, ranks as a pioneer in an invaluable and indispensable adjunct to our modern life. In 1740 he succeeded to the family estates, and the easier circumstances of his life resulting therefrom doubtless stimulated his poetic muse. He enjoyed the friendship of such men as Bishop Butler, John Wesley, and William Law, and his correspondence with these and other of his contemporaries, especially on religious subjects, furnishes some interesting glimpses of the great men of his day. He died September 26, 1763. A fine of £5 was levied on his estate because he was not buried in woollen!

Byrom was an enthusiastic Jacobite. Here is one of his epigrams :—

> God bless the King, God bless our faith's defender,
> God bless—no harm in blessing—the Pretender;
> But who pretender is, and who is king,
> God bless us all! that's quite another thing.



Christians, awake, salute the happy Morn
Whereon the Saviour of the World was born
Rise to adore the Mystery of Love
Which Hosts of Angels chanted from above
With them the joyful Tidings first begun
Of God incarnate & the Virgins Son
Then to the watchfull Shepherds it was told
Who heard th' Angelic Heralds Voice: Behold

FACSIMILE OF THE AUTOGRAPH OF 'CHRISTIANS, AWAKE' (LINES 1 TO 10).
(Specially photographed for THE MUSICAL TIMES by Dr. Henry Watson.)

Another Byromic squib, often attributed to Dean Swift, is of a more musical nature, and although so well known, it may be quoted on the score of appropriateness and completeness :—

> Some say that Signor Bononcini,
> Compared to Handel, is a ninny;
> While others say, that to him, Handel
> Is hardly fit to hold a candle.
> Strange that such difference should be > 'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

Byrom's poems were not printed till 1773, ten years after his death. Through the friendly offices of Dr. Henry Watson, of Salford, we are enabled to furnish our readers with a facsimile of the first ten lines of Byrom's famous Hymn for Christmas Day, 'Christians, awake.' The original autograph is preserved in the Chetham Library, and permission to take a photograph of it—which Dr. Watson has been good enough to do specially for THE MUSICAL TIMES—has been kindly granted by Mr. W. T. Browne, of Chetham College.

It will be observed that to the title Byrom has added (in pencil) the words 'For Dolly.' The verses were therefore designed by their author as a Christmas gift to his daughter Dorothy, born 1730, died, unmarried, 1797. A copy of the hymn, printed on a broadside, was stitched up with Adams's Manchester Weekly Paper for 1751; and as Byrom wrote in his Journal, under date 'Xmas 1750: The singing men and boys, with Mr. Wainwright, came here and sang "Christians, awake,"' circa 1750 is not far wrong as an approximate date of its composition. In its original form the poem consists of forty-eight lines, divided into two sections of thirty-two and sixteen lines respectively.

The tune. Its paternity can be traced to John Wainwright, one of a family of musicians of that patronymic, of whom the first to disentangle them, biographically speaking, was the Rev. Henry Parr. John Wainwright, baptized at Stockport, April 14, 1723, held the organistship of the Collegiate Church (now the Cathedral), Manchester, for less than a year, 1767-8, but he had previously been deputy-organist. Wainwright had the reputation of being a good performer on the organ, and the celebrated Joah Bates used to say that his own ideas of a grand style of organ-playing were received 'from hearing old Wainwright at the Collegiate Church of Manchester.' He died January 28, 1768, and his remains were interred in the Parish Church, Stockport, but the exact location of his grave is unknown. A proposal has for some time past been on foot to provide a memorial window, or brass tablet, to Wainwright in Stockport Church, and the honorary secretary to the committee and organist of the church, Mr. Charles Swain, Lowfield, Stockport, will be very glad to receive subscriptions towards that commemorative object.

The tune appeared, unnamed, in 'A collection of Psalm Tunes' composed by Wainwright, and published in London about 1766. But it most probably made an earlier appearance in a Psalmody entitled :—

> A | COLLECTION | of | TUNES, | suited to the several METRES commonly used in publick Worship, set in four PARTS, and | on the most easy KEYS; | with an | INTRODUCTION | to the | art of singing | and | plain composition, | By C. ASHWORTH. |
> London:
> Printed and sold for J. Buckland, at the Buck, in Pater-Noster-Row.

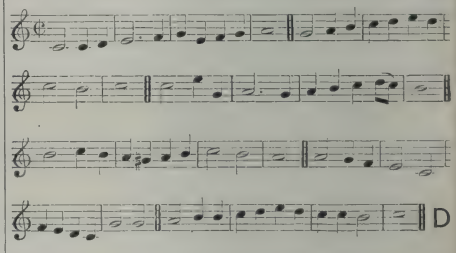
The compiler of this book, the Rev. Dr. Caleb (not Charles, as his first name is sometimes given) Ashworth, is described in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' as 'a dissenting tutor.' In the 'advertisement' prefixed to his Collection, Ashworth naïvely says :—

> The tunes are set on the most easy keys, and the price is fixed as low as possible; the compiler being determined not to get any thing by it.

All the tunes 'are set' in either the key of C, A minor, G or E minor—that is to say, no tune has more than one sharp in the key-signature; but at the end of the first tune (in G) we find the direction 'Pitch at A,' and so on, as in the example below, his object being to promote facility in reading by reducing the number of sharps in the key-signatures.

In Ashworth's book the tune to 'Christians, awake,' appears in the following 'peculiar' metrical form, of which we give the melody only :—

PECULIAR MEASURE. MORTRAM. OLD 50TH. PSALM TUNE.



The 'D' at the end is an indication that the tune is to be pitched in that key.

No composer's name is given, and the name 'Mortram' may be a misprint for Mottram, a place near Stalybridge. The date 1760 has been assigned to Ashworth's book, and as the copy in the late Sir John Stainer's library contains the written date '1763,' there is good ground for accepting this as the period of publication. The tune—notice the simplicity of its stepwise melody—is exceedingly popular in the north of England. It is often sung in Lancashire and Yorkshire as a prelude to performances of the 'Messiah' at Christmas. In this connection Dr. Coward, of Sheffield, in response to a request for information, writes us under date of November 14 :—

> Both at Huddersfield and Sheffield we always sing 'Christians, awake' before the 'Messiah,' if the oratorio is performed within a few days of Christmas Day, and the singing of the hymn is such a heart-warming thing that not a few go to the performance just for the joy of it. Somehow after a good sing of 'Christians, awake' one feels 'Christmassy.' In most cases printed slips containing two verses of the hymn are distributed amongst the audience, unless the words are printed on the programme. Of course the organist and orchestra play for all they are worth.

2. 'ONCE IN ROYAL DAVID'S CITY.'

A century separates the two hymns forming the subject of this article. In the year 1848, Mr. Masters, of New Bond Street, issued a little book, something less than 6 × 4 inches in size, bearing the following title:—

HYMNS FOR LITTLE CHILDREN.

By the author of "The Lord of the Forest," "Verses for Holy Seasons," and "The Baron's little daughter."

"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise."—St. Matt. xxi. 16.

The little book appeared anonymously, except that the dedication, 'To my little godsons,' is signed 'C. F. H.' But ladies—and the versifier was of the gentler sex—have been known to change the final initial of their names, and thus it was that Cecil Frances Humphreys (born in 1823) became in 1850 the wife of the Rev. William Alexander, now the Archbishop of Armagh. Not the least interesting thing about this little book—which, by-the-way, includes the hymn 'There is a green hill far away'—is a prefatory note which reads thus:—

NOTICE.

The title of this little book shows it to be of a kind which stands in as small need as any of preface or explanation. Children, and those interested in children, will feel at once whether it suits them or not. These few lines however are prefixed, because the writer of the Hymns wished for some kind of clerical imprimatur, and the Clergyman to whom she applied, thinks and hopes that they will not only be found useful in the way which she earnestly desires, but will also win a high place for themselves in the estimation of all who know how to value true poetry and primitive devotion.

It seems right to add, that the profits of the publication, if any, will be applied to the support of a school for deaf and dumb children, maintained altogether by voluntary offerings, in a small town in the North of Ireland.

Hursley, March 28, 1848. J. K.

The 'J. K.' who wrote the above 'Notice' is none other than John Keble! The Archbishop of Armagh, in response to a request as to the whereabouts of the 'small town in the North of Ireland' above referred to, writes: 'The name and place of the school to which you refer was School for Deaf Mutes, Strabane. It has for many years ceased to exist as a separate entity.' The hymn 'Once in royal David's city' is founded on the words in the Apostles' Creed, 'Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary,' and the next sentence forms the heading to 'There is a green hill far away.' Both these devotional lyrics have so far escaped the tinkering hands of ecclesiastical 'improvers.' Long may they remain unscathed!

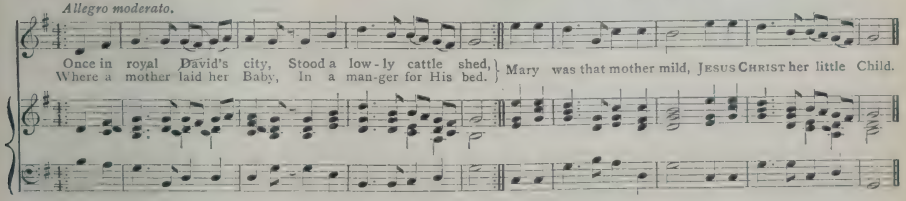
Gounod, in composing Mrs. Alexander's 'There is a green hill,' said 'The words seem to set themselves to music.' When this song first appeared the author of the words was given as Longfellow! Tennyson bore strong testimony to the gifts of this poetess when he declared that he would be proud to be the author of her 'Legend of Stumpies Brae.' In a letter to the present writer—dated 'April 25, 1892,' three years before her death—Mrs. Alexander said: 'I am very sorry that I am unable to give you any information on the subject of your letter. I am not at all musical, and was not even aware that the music to my hymn "Once in royal David's" was composed by Dr. Gauntlett.' How curiously this reads in connection with Gounod's remark referred to above!

The music. It is not every composer who can write childlike music. But in the present instance the late Dr. Henry John Gauntlett (1805-1876) gave proof that he possessed that rare gift. The familiar music to Mrs. Alexander's words made its first appearance in the year 1858 in a collection of tunes published by Mr. Masters, bearing the following title:—

HYMNS FOR LITTLE CHILDREN. By the author of "The Baron's little daughter," &c.

Set to music with pianoforte accompaniment by H. J. GAUNTLETT, M.D.

As probably very few organists or those connected with Sunday Schools, &c., have any knowledge of the original form of the tune, we have pleasure in giving it as subjoined:—



Allegro moderato.
Once in royal David's city, Stood a low-ly cattle shed,
Where a mother laid her Baby, In a man-ger for His bed.
Mary was that mother mild, JESUS CHRIST her little Child.

The hymn and tune obtained wide popularity when they appeared in the Appendix to 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' issued in 1868. The tune is there called 'Irby,' probably after one of the villages in Lincolnshire so named. For this collection Gauntlett harmonized the strain for four voices; but the process has destroyed the sweet simplicity of the original by the introduction of the bustling lower-voice notes of the last two lines, the said quavers encumbering a melody that should be sung lightly. In ordinary church services the tune is very effective if pitched in F and sung by all the voices in unison. An intelligent choirmaster will call attention to the narrative character of the hymn, and the importance of a distinct enunciation of the words which tell the old, old story to the children so beautifully.

FACSIMILE OF A CHARACTERISTIC ALBUM LEAF.

Wesley appears to have been first fired with his Bach enthusiasm by George Frederick Pinto (1787—1806), who, though cut off in the flower of his youth, was, according to Wesley, 'one of the greatest musical geniuses that Europe ever produced.' Pinto introduced Wesley to 'the 48,' and Charles Frederic Horn (1762—1830), a former organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, was a similar medium in regard to the organ trios of Bach, which at that time were in manuscript. Horn published on his own account twelve of Bach's clavier fugues arranged as string quartets, and Wesley and Horn issued in 1809-10 the organ trios, but in the form of an adaptation 'for Three Hands upon the Piano Forte.' A reprint of the Preface to No. 1, which is full of interest, may be found in The Musical Times of October, 1896, in a series of articles on 'Bach's Music in England.'

A larger public came under the influence of this Bach crusade in the organ recitals given by Benjamin Jacob at Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars Road, the scene of the ministrations of the celebrated Rev. Rowland Hill, in the first decade of the last century. Benjamin Jacob (of whom we give a hitherto unpublished portrait) was a very distinguished organist and, so far as we can discover, the first to give organ recitals as we now understand the term in England. The Surrey Chapel organ is said to have been the first—certainly one of the earliest organs in England—to have independent pedal pipes. Wesley has left an interesting autobiographical reference to these recitals which may be quoted:—

> Jacob planned with me selections from the works of Bach and Handel as a matter of a grand morning performance at Surrey Chapel, with the consent and approbation of the late Rev. Rowland Hill [Minister of the Chapel].
> Among the organ pieces were inserted two of Bach's beautiful and brilliant Sonatas with a violin accompaniment. I had been a fine performer on that instrument many years before, but had long disused it. However, on the present occasion I resolved on resuming it, and accordingly set to practise these pieces so as to be completely qualified for a public performance of them.
>
> Mr. Jacobs caused a list of every article [i.e., a programme] to be printed and circulated in every quarter where the tickets of admission were deposited; and as the performance was entirely gratuitous, the invitations were readily enough accepted.
> The chapel was very numerously attended, and the performance occupied to the best of my recollection from three to four hours. The whole was executed with accuracy and precision, and the hearers professed themselves universally gratified and satisfied with every portion of it.

And was it not to Benjamin Jacob (or Jacobs, as his name is often spelt) that Wesley wrote those extraordinary Bach letters, published by the late Miss Eliza Wesley? In these letters Wesley refers to his idol as 'Saint Sebastian': and he says: 'Huzza!—old Wig [Bach] for ever; and confusion of Face to Pig Tails and Mountebanks'—the 'Pig Tails and Mountebanks' being the Handelian doctors of music and others who had not the enthusiasm of Wesley as an out-and-out Bachist.

Two more extracts from the Wesley-Jacob letters must suffice:—

The 'Saints in Glory' Fugue, by which I mean that in E major, four sharps.

Remember our Cause. 'Good will towards Men is at the Bottom of it; and when Sebastian flourishes here there will be at least more musical 'Peace on Earth.'

In addition to Wesley, Horn and Jacob, Vincent Novello ultimately joined 'the Sebastian Squad,' as Wesley designated this coterie of Bach worshippers. It is probable, however, that none of the quartet was quite so red hot in the cause as 'Old Sam.' An amusing instance thereof is thus recorded. One evening, after a certain supper party at which Wesley had met some congenial spirits, a hackney coach was summoned in the small hours of the morning to convey Samuel, the Bachist, home. But before he could be prevailed upon to enter the vehicle, he insisted upon going up to the driver, whom he thus addressed in the more or less broken tones of exuberant conviviality: 'Coachman, do you know John Sebastian Bach?' 'No, sir, I don't,' was the reply of the Jehu, 'but get in; it'll be all right.'

Wesley proposed the publication of an English translation of Forkel's 'Life of Bach,' which, though announced in December, 1808, was not issued till 1820. But of more importance to the furtherance of the Bach cause in England was the publication, by Wesley and Horn at their expense and risk, of the Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues. The work made its appearance in four books, between September, 1810, and July, 1813, bearing the following title:—

S. Wesley and C. F. Horn's | new | and | correct edition of the | Preludes and Fugues | of | John Sebastian Bach.

Book 1st. | Price to Subscribers 9s. To Non-Subscribers 12s. | Entd. at Sta. Hall. | London, Printed for the Editors, by Rt. Birchall, No. 133, New Bond Street.

Although the name of Horn appears on the title-page, Wesley seems to have been the actual editor of this the first English edition of the '48,' as each copy bore his signature. In its complete form the work cost no less than thirty-six shillings! The original subscribers numbered 152, though some of them entered their names for more than one copy. The Preface, most probably by Wesley, is of special interest. Its opening words may be quoted.

Introduction.

It seems to be with some stupendous Works of Art, as with those of Nature: the surprize and Admiration they excite, render Praise not only superfluous, but also show it inadequate to the Subject producing them.

Among such Instances we conceive the following Pieces of Harmony to be meritoriously enumerated.

The 48 Preludes and Fugues, the first 12 of which are here presented to the Musical World (in a more correct manner than they have ever yet appeared, even in the Country where they were constructed) have always been regarded by the most scientific Musicians (the Germans) as matchless Productions.

These introductory Remarks are not designed as a panegyric upon Compositions which have perpetually delighted the candid Lover of Truth, Science, Taste, and Expression, and even extorted the Approbation of those whose Prejudices had formerly superseded their better Judgement.

The use of these signs to indicate the subject and its treatment—inversion, diminution, augmentation, &c.—were doubtless invented for this, the fourth issue of Bach's immortal work.

The proposal of Wesley to publish by subscription the Credo from the great B minor Mass proved abortive, but his enthusiasm in the Bach crusade waxed stronger than ever. At his 'Musical Morning Party'—in other words, a morning concert—on June 3, 1809, Wesley introduced Bach's church cantata, 'Jesu, priceless Treasure,' to an English audience. A year later—May 19, 1810—the programme of his concert was largely made up of Bach, one notable addition being, however, Wesley's own fine motet 'In exitu Israel,' for a double choir, 'composed for this occasion.' For other references to these earliest performances of Bach's music in this country, in which Wesley had the active co-operation of Vincent Novello, the reader is referred to the articles above mentioned. If only for his ceaseless activity as the great pioneer of Bach in England, the name of Samuel Wesley deserves to be held in honoured remembrance.

In 1811 Wesley conducted the Birmingham Musical Festival. On that occasion the profits realized the sum of £3,629, and a Beethoven symphony was performed, 'probably the first instance of any work by this master in Birmingham.' A ball took place after each evening performance, and 'parties of Dragoons paraded the streets in order to keep the thoroughfares clear.'

In addition to his teaching engagements, concert-giving, and appearances as a public performer, Wesley was a very successful lecturer on Music, at the Royal Institution and elsewhere. The earliest known date of these discourses is 1811. This was one year after the birth of his dearly-beloved son 'Sammy,' subsequently known to the world as Samuel Sebastian Wesley—his second name, of course, being after his father's great idol, John Sebastian Bach. 'Little boy blue' and 'Sammy sixpence' were two of the terms of endearment bestowed by his father upon the future composer of 'The Wilderness.'*

For seven years—1816 to 1823—Wesley suffered a relapse of his old malady, which prevented him from following his professional avocations. In 1824 he became organist of Camden Chapel, now the Parish Church (St. Stephen's), Camden Town. This was the only organ appointment held by him, though he was an unsuccessful candidate for the organistship of the Foundling Hospital Chapel in 1798 and St. George's Church, Hanover Square, in 1824. At the Foundling, John Immyns, an amateur, was elected through the influence of Joah Bates; this appointment caused Wesley to compose his humorous song (published anonymously) 'The Organ laid open, or the True Stop discovered.'

His last appearance in public was probably at a concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society, Exeter Hall, August 7, 1834. On that occasion he accompanied the anthem 'All go unto one place,' which he had composed on the death of his brother Charles. The closing scene, outside his home circle, of his strenuous life was an exceedingly interesting one. On September 12, 1837, he was present at Christ Church, Newgate Street, when he heard Mendelssohn play upon the organ. The old English organist 'expressed his delight in terms of unmeasured approbation' at the Bach and extemporaneous performances of the young German musician. At the express desire of Mendelssohn, who wished that he could thereafter say he had heard Samuel Wesley play, the veteran took his seat at the keyboard, 'and,' to quote the words of one who was present, 'extemporized with a purity and originality of thought for which he has rendered his name ever illustrious.' An incident of that occasion was related to the present writer by the late Miss Eliza Wesley, the daughter of old Sam and his devoted companion in his old age. Upon hearing her old father play, Miss Wesley was so much moved that she felt obliged to leave the church. When Mendelssohn came down from the organ loft he said to her friend, Miss Emett, 'Where is Miss Wesley?' 'She was so overcome,' was the reply, 'that she had to go outside.' Mendelssohn, excellent English scholar though he was, seemed puzzled at this use of the word 'overcome,' but upon having it explained to him he at once entered into Miss Wesley's feelings. This meeting of the two great disciples of Bach—Wesley at the age of seventy-one, and Mendelssohn aged twenty-eight—was in the nature of a Nunc Dimittis to the senior of the two musicians. Wesley never left the house after that day. A month later—on October 11, 1837—he died at his residence in Islington. His remains are interred in the same grave as that of his father, the great hymn-writer, in the churchyard of old Marylebone Church, where a monument is erected to their memories. The music at the funeral was under the direction of the late James Turle, organist of Westminster Abbey, and among the Abbey choristers who sang on that occasion was Master Walter Macfarren, now senior professor at the Royal Academy of Music. The Times report of the funeral stated that there was a mistake on the coffin plate in regard to the date of Wesley's death, but the nature of the error is not stated.

As an organist Samuel Wesley was one of the greatest players of his day. De Quincy called him 'the great foudroyant performer on the organ.' He was in great request at the opening of new organs. Here is a copy of a curious handbill announcing one of these events:—

SEVENOAKS.

October 17, 1788.—This is to give notice, that the magnificent Organ left to the parish of Sevenoaks by James Wright, Esq., late of Greenwich, will be opened in a grave and patriotic manner by the celebrated Mr. Wesley, on Sunday, the 28th of October.

At the same time a Collection will be made for the relief of the widows and children of those brave seamen that fell, and also those wounded in the late glorious victory of Admiral Nelson over the French fleet on the 1st of August.

In regard to the executive side of Wesley's musicianship, we cannot do better than quote from a series of articles on 'Cathedral Music and Composers' which appeared in The Musical Times during the year 1851, and written from personal knowledge of Wesley by the late Edward Holmes.

* A Biographical Sketch of Dr. S. S. Wesley appeared in The Musical Times of May and June, 1900.

In the flower of his age there is no doubt that Wesley would have done himself honour in improvising on the same pianoforte with Mozart or Beethoven; and yet with powers which no musician of his time approached, with scholarly acquirements, a witty turn in conversation, and a mind enriched by reading, which rendered him the ornament of every company in which he appeared, he was accessible and encouraging in society. Wesley had the repose of character which distinguishes men of conscious power and unquestioned position. He never shewed any airs of superiority; his native disposition was simple and social; and to be on a good footing in any house in which he was a visitor and a friend, was a sufficient introduction to him. If you had sympathy with music, and took means to win his regard, he would soon play to you, and with you, and converse most delightfully about his art, placing himself on the easy level of perfect sociality and companionship.

It was impossible for any young musician to pass an hour with him without improvement. If he played a prelude of his favorite Bach, you learned to distinguish and appreciate the best passages from his fine emphasis and accent. To see him playing merely, was delightful, he was so immersed in the pleasure of the thing. A movement of his head, a glance of his eye, conveyed commentaries on the music of deep meaning to the initiated; and in his favorite sequences of harmony, he rolled from side to side almost unable to contain the transports of his pleasure. I see before me still this great artist, whose personal description would do almost for that of Mozart—an intellectual head and prominent eye, the figure slight and rather under the middle size, with small hands and feet, characterised the appearance of both. Wesley played with his fingers much bent in the old manner—he had a great execution, but his enthusiasm transported him over all mechanical and manual difficulties. In the heat of invention he did the boldest things, and always with success.

My opportunities of hearing Wesley on the organ were not frequent, but one musical holiday, to which Mr. Novello introduced me, is still fresh in my memory. Our day of music was to begin at noon, in the German church at the Savoy, where there is an old-fashioned beautiful organ by Snetzler. Of all the London organs this was one of the most favorite instruments of Wesley; and he seems to have looked forward to this day in high good humour, for in his invitation to his friend Novello, he begged him not to "stuff his pockets too full of the works of Rossini." After music in the morning, the two genial organists did not intend, for that day, to descend again to the commonplaces of life, but were to repair to Hampstead, to the house of a friend, to dine and have more music. The party in the church was only four, and the music, which consisted entirely of Bach's fugues, was played in the easy and effective form of duets. Wesley kept almost entirely his seat at the Bass, and played with every one in turn, giving to each, as he came, the choice of his own fugue. When all was over, Wesley had to play extempore—and he treated the organ in a manner, which, to a young man who had never heard any of Bach's trios, appeared extraordinarily new and difficult. He began with a soft air, and then with his right-hand on the swell, his left on the diapasons of the great organ, and his feet sliding over the pedals, he made it the subject of a trio, of which the parts for the two hands continually crossing or involved together, produced a very beautiful effect. A more difficult mode of improvisation cannot be imagined; it discovered the most profound head and the most refined taste.

Samuel Wesley was a prolific composer. His choral works include the oratorios of 'Ruth' and the 'Death of Abel' (Part I.), a Mass, a Confitebor, a Harvest Cantata, Odes, Motets—In exitu Israel, Dixit Dominus, Exultate Deo—and other Latin church music, a Morning and Evening Service in F ('dedicated to all choirs'), in addition to many glees, vocal duets, songs, &c. The instrumental compositions consist of symphonies (7), overtures (2), violin concertos (10), a violin sonata, organ concertos (2), a quintet, string quartets (2), trios (2), a trio for three pianofortes, a large number of pianoforte pieces, and much organ music. The majority of these compositions remain in manuscript.

A HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED PORTRAIT OF SAMUEL WESLEY.

(From a pencil drawing in the British Museum.)

Versatility characterised the extraordinary mental equipment of the elder Wesley. A good classical scholar from his youth, he had an extensive knowledge of general literature. A brilliant conversationalist, his wit was always keen and his sarcasm sharp-pointed; thus, in intellect and attainment, Wesley had every claim to be ranked among the most remarkable men of his day. Nature had endowed him with an abnormally mercurial temperament which touched the opposite extremes of mad fun and excessive depression. Next to his wonderful musicianship must be placed his epistolary powers. He lived at a time when letter-writing was an art and when a leisurely mode of life offered facilities for its cultivation. Many of the letters to his attached friend, Vincent Novello, and others, not only give abundant proof of Wesley's cleverness and the manner of the man, but their unconventional phraseology no less than their grotesque humour invest these effusions with a quaintness which is irresistibly funny. Here, for instance, are examples of beginnings and endings: 'Doctor know-well-o,' 'your umble sarvant to cumhand,' 'Wednesday, Jule-High the thurd.' Two letters, written in his forty-seventh year, may be given as specimens of his merry moods:—

S.W. feels the UTmost satisfaction in REturning his Acknowledgments for the MInute mention of the Circumstances attending his Tune, in which there is not discoverable any Trait of the FAstidious Disposition of most musical Criticks, which is as clear as SOL at Noon Day: the Author however fears that the Partiality of Friendship may have operated to pronounce too favourable an Opinion of a Composition which many may perhaps consider only LA-la after all.

24th of June [1812].

On the reverse Wesley has written:—

To Mr. Novello, who hath not as yet received the same.

The next, also dated '1812,' is in 'old Sam's' most characteristic vein:—

Dear N.—The necessity of shaving, dressing, and some of the other 'Blessings of this Life,' prevent my coming to South Street* this eve., as I otherwise should, but I shall certainly be with you on Wednesday morning, Deo Volente.

You remember the Parish Clerk's Psalm of his own composing, upon the arrival of King William, after James's shabby run-away trick.

Britons rejoice! I say rejoice!
King William is come:
Therefore sing we, with Heart and Voice
The Hymn that's called TE DUM.

S.W.

The following letter, from the collection of Mr. W. T. Freemantle, of Rotherham, is interesting in its references to Handel and Charles Wesley:—

Euston Street,
24 March 2 Tuesday

Sir

In reply to your Note I have to inform you that the three Hymns which I transcribed in the Fitzwilliam Library are unquestionably autographical: I am well acquainted with the Hand Writing, having seen Abundance of it; and it exactly corresponds with all the other Specimens of Handel's Penmanship which cannot easily be mistaken.—Moreover I know the whole History of these Tunes, & the Circumstances of Handel composing them at the Request of a particular Friend of my Father, who wrote the Hymns as the Title Page announces.

I am Sir,
obed^{ty} yours
S. Wesley

P.S. Handel has written only the Melody, with a figured Base, which I have ramified for a choir.

* The Portuguese Chapel, South Street, Grosvenor Square, of which Vincent Novello was organist.

An immense quantity of Wesleyana—letters, compositions, reminiscences and autobiography, and miscellaneous documents of various kinds—are preserved in the Department of Manuscripts at the British Museum. Much of this interesting and valuable material relating to one of England's great musicians, and throwing various side-lights upon his many-sided personality, was bequeathed to the nation by Samuel Wesley's devoted daughter, the late Miss Eliza Wesley.

ODD THOUGHTS.

The first announcement of a new oratorio cannot fail to have abiding interest. We, therefore, present our readers with a miniature copy of a handbill lately circulated in Leeds:—

In commenting upon the above announcement, 'J. W. D.,' the editor of the Musical World, said:—

Need we say how anxiously the criticism of our local correspondent, Mr. Gooch, is awaited? By a coincidence due to the season, Handel's Messiah was performed the same evening at two different places in Manchester.

Sir George Martin has been made by the King a Member of the Royal Victorian Order. It would be difficult to define the range limit of congratulations to the worthy organist of St. Paul's Cathedral which this well-deserved honour has called forth, and in which The Musical Times very heartily joins.

The subjoined tone-picture is No. 4 of a series of pen-and-ink sketches which were printed, possibly privately, by C. F. Dörfling, at Leipzig, in 1842, under the title 'Nouveauté Musicale.' The booklet, kindly lent to us by the Honourable Mrs. Herbert, of Llanover, was presented to her mother, wife of Sir Benjamin Hall (afterwards created Baron Llanover of Llanover), by Friedrich Carl Meyer, librarian to the Prince Consort. The name of the artist who drew these exceedingly clever sketches is unknown, but in an explanatory note we are told that he wished by means of figures to express the life inherent in notes, and that he tried 'in these operettas faithfully to observe the double unity of dramatic action and of melody.' The following description is given of the Barcarole:—

> Fishermen are bidding farewell to their wives and sisters; one woman entrusts her child to her husband. The weather is fine; the boats glide smoothly under lofty arches (signs for tying notes). But the weather changes: the sky becomes covered with clouds; the sea becomes stormy; the boats rise and fall with the waves; one breaks over the ship, and two men fall into the water. The fishermen in despair raise their hands to heaven. The tempest increases in fury; a boat founders; six fishermen are engulphed; one inanimate body is seen floating. Sea-gulls (rests) skim over the surface of the water. Some of the boats, with the lighthouse as a guide, hasten to return to the port. The mother in tears, waiting on the shore, receives back her child into her arms.

Thus, we may add, all ends happily as well as Barcarolly!

Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted the first part of the programme of an interesting concert given by the Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union, in Bermondsey Town Hall on the evening of the 13th ult., when his Coronation March, various songs and part-songs, and 'The Cricket on the Hearth' overture (much applauded) were performed in the hearing of a crowded audience. The remainder of the evening's music consisted of Parts 2 and 3 of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' Trilogy (conducted by Mr. Borland). The full orchestra (50 performers) and choir (90 voices) gave proof of their executive zeal and enthusiasm in the art, and the preparation of the music must have afforded them untold pleasure in their leisure hours. As we have on previous occasions remarked, the spread of a love of music among the people, and the philanthropic and artistic possibilities resulting therefrom, are of the highest importance in the life of the community; and we gladly call attention to the work so successfully carried on at Bermondsey both for its own sake and as an example to be followed far and wide.

The splendid philanthropic work done in the various 'Settlements' in London and elsewhere calls for high commendation and encouragement. As a case in point, in which music occupies a prominent place, we may refer to the Bermondsey Settlement. The prospectus of the Music Section, now in its twelfth season, and under the able direction of Mr. John E. Borland, is a record of remarkable activity. An elementary sight-singing class, glee- and part-song society (fee one shilling each, per term), string band (fee one shilling and sixpence per term), instrumental classes, solo singing, public lectures, &c., enter into the curriculum of this busy centre of light and leading. In addition to the foregoing there is a flourishing choral and orchestral union, the choral section of which assists at church oratorio services in the neighbourhood. The long list of important works performed under Mr. Borland's direction bears testimony to the enterprise and industry of these musical Bermondseyites. Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Charles Stanford, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor have found their way to the concerts in the capacity of composer-conductors.

The announcement that the season just concluded is the last of the Richter Concerts—since 1887 under Mr. Vert's management—has been received with genuine regret. As one of the foremost musical institutions in the way of London music-makings the concerts have existed for twenty-three years, though not all the time under their familiar name. It was in the year 1877, when Wagner visited these shores for the last time to conduct the concerts given under his name at the Albert Hall, that Hans Richter appeared for the first time before an English audience. As a matter of fact, Richter did the lion's share of the work in conducting those concerts, while Wagner, to a great extent, looked on.

We have before us the programme-book of the first concert in London for which Dr. Richter was entirely responsible. It took place in the familiar locale, St. James's Hall, on May 5, 1879, and was the first of four 'Orchestral Festival Concerts,' of which the third was devoted to chamber music, and the remaining three to orchestral and vocal selections. The orchestra, with Herr Hermann Franke as leader, consisted of 110 performers, and the programme was as follows:—

Part I.

Kaisermarsch ... ... Wagner

Scene, 'Blick' ich umher' (Tannhäuser) ... ... Wagner
Herr Georg Henschel.

Introduction to Act III. (Die Meistersinger) ... ... Wagner

Duet, 'Wie aus der Ferne' (Der Fliegende Holländer) ... Wagner
Frau Schuch-Proska and Herr Georg Henschel.

Aria ... ... (Die Entführung aus dem Serail) ... ... Mozart
Frau Schuch-Proska.

Overture ... ...(Manfred)... ... ... Schumann

Part II.

Symphony, No. 7, in A major (Op. 92) ... ... Beethoven

'A typical Richter programme' will be the natural comment on the above selection. True, but the programmes in the earlier period of the concerts were more eclectic than they have been of recent years. The name of Mendelssohn in the scheme of the concert on the 3rd ult. almost gave a shock to the 'superior' person, but in the old days of 'the Richters' we find the Italian and Scotch symphonies, the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, the 'Hebrides' and 'Ruy Blas' overtures, and even that to 'Athalie'! Someone recently raised the question whether a Haydn symphony had ever been played in London under Richter. To this we can answer 'yes,' and to save the reader the trouble of making reference to The Musical Times of June, 1885, we herewith reprint a record of that rather rare event:—

> At the second Concert Herr Richter actually presented a Symphony of Haydn to his patrons—as, it may be, a cold douche in the midst of a prolonged hot bath. The old master's delightful art could scarcely have proved acceptable to those who love the 'maddening excitement' of modern music. If it were acceptable, then we cannot sufficiently admire the wide taste that takes in such far-sundered extremes.

Old 'Papa' Haydn must not be neglected. Amid so much modern music that is tuneless and formless, his genial strains are as 'streams in the desert.'

The annual Livery banquet of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, which took place on October 28, was an unusually brilliant function. The Master, Mr. C. D. Hoblyn, presided, and among the distinguished guests were the Lord Mayor and Sir Alexander Mackenzie. The music, which forms an important feature at these gatherings, was this year supplied by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, and the most distinguished student of that Institution, Mr. Adam von Ahn Carse, received at the hands of the Master the silver medal of the Company. The speech of the evening came from the lips of Sir Frederick Bridge, one of the most amusing of after-dinner speakers. In the course of his remarks, Sir Frederick referred to a little difficulty which had come before the Court during the year in transferring a member of their Company to the Ironmongers' Company. But the obstacles had been overcome; and he ventured to think that it was easier for a musician to become an ironmonger than it would be to turn an ironmonger into a musician! The Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, in presenting the medallist to the Master, referred to Mr. Adam von Ahn Carse's varied attainments in music, and said if he (Sir Alexander) had only known that Sir F. Bridge intended to make a reference to ironmongers, he would have asked his young friend to favour the assembled company with a solo on the kettle-drums. In thus letting off the steam of his pawky humour, Sir Alexander Mackenzie ran the risk of causing his audience to boil over with indignation; but so subtle was the joke that they did not appear even to simmer!

At a recent meeting of the Deutsche Musik-Verein, Herr Richard Strauss in the chair, it was decided to issue, under the auspices of the Society, a critical edition of the works of Franz Liszt, edited by Herr August Goellerich.

The name of Dr. F. H. Cowen, as conductor, was inadvertently omitted from the notice of the Cardiff Musical Festival in our last issue. In expressing regret at this oversight it is hardly necessary to refer to Dr. Cowen's conducting achievements: are they not known and read of all men?

Among the oddities to hand during the past month are the following:—

> The Irish songs from 'Die Meistersinger.'

The compositor who set this may have been on 'trial.' The next can also be traced to where type is not unknown:—

> Messrs. Novello have published the 'Hymn Tuner' by the Rev. J. B. Dykes.

The last is from an inquiry addressed to a firm of music-publishers:—

> Please quote me per doz. for small plasters (Westminster) suitable for choir boys.

Perhaps a quotation for Psalters may touch the spot!

There was a Professor nam'd Prout,
You have heard of his fame no doubt;
He found much to admire in Handel's 'Messiah,'
And set it all right, did old Prout.

BACH'S CHRISTMAS ORATORIO.

The great St. Matthew Passion and the mighty B minor Mass have overshadowed the Christmas Oratorio of the greatest of Cantors. It was composed five years after the first-named work and when Bach was aged fifty. The oratorio preceded Handel's 'Messiah' by seven years, its date being 1734, and the autograph of the entire work is entitled by its author: 'Oratorium Tempore Nativitatis Christi,' with the addition of the initials 'S. D. G.' (Soli Deo Gloria), inscribed at the end of its six parts or sections. These sections stamp the work with a peculiar individuality and make it unlike any other oratorio, in that the entire composition was not intended to be sung at one performance. The first portion is assigned to Christmas Day; the second and third portions to the two following days; the fourth to the Feast of the Circumcision of Christ. New Year's Day; the fifth to the Sunday following; and the sixth to the Festival of the Epiphany.

As in the Passion music the narrative of the Evangelist forms the groundwork of the design. It is given out in recitative, interspersed and elucidated by choruses, chorales, airs and duets. Part II. opens with a charming Pastoral Symphony. Curiously enough this is immediately followed by a recitative having the same words as that which comes after Handel's Pastoral Symphony in the 'Messiah'! The movement by Bach, however, is original and much more extended than the Pifa of his great contemporary. Bach, like Handel, did not disdain to use up old material. Three works were drawn upon for the Christmas Oratorio—(1) a 'Drama per musica,' composed in honour of the Queen of Saxony in 1733, (2) 'The Choice of Hercules,' a work of similar character for the birthday of the heir-apparent in the same year, and (3) a 'Cantata gratulatoria,' complimentary to the King on his arrival at Leipzig in 1734.

Concerning its chorales, so typical a feature of Bach's church music, Sir George Macfarren said: 'The harmonisation of the chorales proves the author's infinite command of the powers of combination. Highly remarkable as it is for its musical beauty, it claims further admiration for its expressive fitness to the several situations in which these tunes occur. Some of the tunes are set plainly for the voices, with directions that certain instruments are to be in unison with each part, and the organ in unison with the whole. . . . Other of the chorales are arranged with figured accompaniment for the orchestra, and these stand out in strong contrast to those more simply set.'

The first performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio in England was given by the defunct Bach Society, at the Hanover Square Rooms, June 13, 1861, under the conductorship of Sterndale Bennett. Parts 1 and 2 were performed by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, December 13, 1870, under John Hullah's guidance, and the entire oratorio formed the concert given by the Royal Choral Society, under the late Sir Joseph Barnby's direction, at the Royal Albert Hall, December 15, 1873. Parts 1, 2, and 3 were given by the Bach Choir on April 6, 1878, with Mr. Otto Goldschmidt as conductor.

The present writer retains a very vivid recollection of a performance of part of the work in Westminster Abbey many years ago, and the wonderful effect of the old Cantor's music among surroundings so appropriate thereto. The church is without doubt the true home of those reverent strains, whereby Bach has so greatly enriched ecclesiastical music, and in so doing added lustre to his splendid genius. Spitta says: 'No other work by Bach contains a richer collection of charming and easily comprehended melodies than the Christmas Oratorio.' Need anything more be said?

A CAMBRIDGE COLLEGE ORGAN.

The organ in St. John's College Chapel, Cambridge, was originally built by Robert Dallam, of Westminster, in the year 1635. Some of Dallam's work still remains; but Messrs. Hill rebuilt the instrument in 1839 and made further alterations and additions in 1868 and 1889. The organ has now been entirely rebuilt by Messrs. Norman and Beard to the following specification:—

Great Organ (16 stops).		Swell Organ (14 stops).
Double Open Diapason	16 feet	Lieblich Gedackt	16 feet
Open Diapason (large)	8 ,,	Open Diapason	8 ,,
Open Diapason (medium)	8 ,,	Stopped Diapason	8 ,,
Open Diapason (small)	8 ,,	Pierced Gamba	8 ,,
Stopped Diapason	8 ,,	Echo Dulciana	8 ,,
Hohl Flöte	8 ,,	Vox Angelica	8 ,,
Quint	6 ,,	Flute	4 ,,
Harmonic Flute	4 ,,	Principal	4 ,,
Gemshorn	4 ,,	Fifteenth	2 ,,
Principal	4 ,,	Sesquialtera (4 ranks)
Twelfth	3 ,,	Double Trumpet	16 feet
Fifteenth	2 ,,	Horn	8 ,,
Full Mixture (3 ranks)		Hautboy	8 ,,
Sharp Mixture (4 ranks)		Clarion	4 ,,
Posaune (harmonic)	8 feet	Tremulant.
Clarion (harmonic)	4 ,,

*Great Reeds to Choir.

* By this contrivance the Great Organ reeds, which are voiced on heavy pressure wind, can be transferred to the Choir Organ for solo Tuba effects.

Choir Organ (10 stops).		Pedal Organ (11 stops).
Double Dulciana	16 feet	Great Stopped Bass	32 feet
Open Diapason	8 ,,	Great Bass (open wood)	16 ,,
Dulciana	8 ,,	Violon (wood)	16 ,,
Stopped Diapason	8 ,,	Double Dulciana (metal)	16 ,,
Viol di Gamba	8 ,,	Lieblich Bourdon	16 ,,
Suabe Flute (open wood)	4 ,,	Flute Bass	8 ,,
Gedackt Flute (stopped metal)	4 ,,	Principal	8 ,,
		Fifteenth	4 ,,
Principal	4 ,,	Mixture (3 ranks)

Cremona	8 ,,	Trumpet	8 ,,

Couplers.

Swell to Great.	Swell to Pedal.
Choir to Great.	Great to Pedal.
Swell to Choir.	Choir to Pedal.

There are 11 composition pedals, and 10 pneumatic pistons: 5 to the Great Organ, 4 to the Swell, and a reversible piston to No. 58. Messrs. Norman and Beard's tubular pneumatic patent is applied to all the mechanism, except the manual to pedal coupling action. The reeds, except the Hautboy, Cremona, and Pedal Trumpet, are on heavy pressure wind. The various wind pressures are:—

Manual flue work, Cremona, and Hautboy	3½ inches
Pedal flue work and Trumpet	3½ ,,
Swell Reeds	6 ,,
Great Reeds	8 ,,
Action and Pedal Trombone	8½ ,,

The Organ is blown by three hydraulic engines. The pedal board is Willis's pattern, and there is a balanced swell pedal.

The reopening of the reconstructed instrument took place on the 4th ult., when the order of service included a chant by the late Dr. Garrett (for many years the honoured organist of St. John's College) and Wesley's 'Ascribe unto the Lord.' Sir Walter Parratt gave an organ recital, of which the following was the programme:—

Andante Religioso	Liszt
Prelude and Fugue in C major	J. S. Bach
Musette	Dandrieu
Pastorale—'Nun danket alle Gott'	Herzogenberg
Fantasia in G major	Hubert Parry
Choral Vorspiel—'O Welt, Ich muss dich lassen' (His last composition.)	Brahms
Fantasia and Toccata	Professor Stanford

The service was accompanied by Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, organist of the Chapel, who has supervised the reconstruction of the organ.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

First in order of date and importance was that held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday, October 26, 'in thanksgiving for the recovery from sickness of His Majesty King Edward VII.' On that occasion, the King and Queen being present, the music included Sir George Martin's 1897 Jubilee Te Deum in A, and Sir Hubert Parry's Coronation Anthem 'I was glad.' These and the rest of the service music, sung by a specially augmented choir, accompanied by the band of the Royal Artillery and the organ, were rendered under the experienced direction of Sir George Martin.

The twenty-ninth Annual Festival of the London Church Choir Association (so long and ably conducted by Sir George Martin) was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 20th ult. The Choir consisted of about 1,000 voices, comprising over fifty Metropolitan Church choirs, and conducted by Dr. Walford Davies, with Mr. F. B. Kiddle as organist. The anthem selected for the occasion was Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father,' Orlando Gibbons's Amen being sung after the Benediction. The canticles were sung to the setting by Robert Cooke in C, and Smart's Te Deum in F concluded a service worthy to rank with those which have preceded it. The principal object of the Association is to afford mutual encouragement and support to individual choirs in the practice of Anglican church music, and therefore deserves every encouragement.

The jubilee of the consecration of the church of St. Mary Magdalen, St. Leonards, on October 29, was celebrated by an anthem recital, with Mr. F. W. Maggs and Mr. C. H. White at the organ. The selection included the names of Arcadelt, Farrant, Bach, Handel, Rheinberger, Clarke-Whitfeld, Attwood, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Goss, Stainer and Dvorák. Where was Wesley?

The 200th monthly 'Sunday afternoon for the people' (representing a period of eighteen years) at the church of St. Michael and All Angels, Folkestone, was held on the 2nd ult. On this occasion the music was chosen entirely from that composed by the vicar (the Rev. E. Husband) during the thirty years he has been connected with the church. Mr. Husband is veritably a tripartite host in himself: parson, organist and composer!

A selection from Haydn's 'Creation' was given at Brixton church on the afternoon of the 2nd ult., under Mr. Douglas Redman's conductorship, as one of the oratorio services which have proved so very successful.

It has taken 189 years to complete Kew Parish Church, 'begun A.D. 1713, finished A.D. 1902.' No wonder that a festival service of thanksgiving was held in commemoration of the event. This took place on the 9th ult., the King's birthday, when the music performed was largely Handelian,—'Zadok the priest'; the 'Occasional' overture, &c.—in addition to Smart's Te Deum.

The inauguration of the four-manual organ, munificently presented to the Town Hall, Dover, by Dr. E. F. Astley, J.P., took place on the 5th ult., when Mr. H. J. Taylor, organist to the Corporation, gave two performances with success. We hope to give the specification of this recent addition to Municipal instruments in our next issue.

In connection with its approaching centenary the Sunday School Union offers three prizes for 'the best pieces of music adapted for use on Sunday School anniversary or other Festival occasions.' Sir Frederick Bridge has consented to be the adjudicator, and all particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, at 57, Ludgate Hill.

SIR HUBERT PARRY ON SEVENTEENTH-CENTURY MUSIC.*

Anyone who passes directly from the first volume of the Oxford History of Music (The Polyphonic Period, by Professor Wooldridge) to the third, which has just appeared, will probably feel rather a shock at the abrupt change of atmosphere. One springs from the domain of purely ecclesiastical choral work into a breezy sphere of youthful attempts to bring a vivid, throbbing interest into music, to express song and laughter, tears and misery, in such a way that even music without words should convey to its hearer a sense of what it meant.

Although the opening remark of the Preface that 'the seventeenth century is, musically, almost a blank, even to those who take more than the average interest in the Art,' seems at first sight discouraging to the intending reader, one finds that there is no lack of material in these delightfully-written and closely-printed pages. For the historian it proves to be a most suggestive century; it shows the slow growth of secular music; of instrumental music shaking itself free from the fettering principles of choral writing. Things temporal, as opposed to things spiritual, had been so rigorously excluded from church choral compositions that even rhythm was avoided, because it represented the idea of physical action, of dancing, light-hearted movement, and was therefore on the wrong side of the hard and fast line drawn between that which was sacred and that which was secular or profane. Music wished to become more worldly, but found it impossible if sixteenth-century methods of choral writing were to be closely adhered to; a secular style was required, and it originated naturally enough in the music of the people, essentially rhythmic. For the accompaniment of rhythmical songs simple harmonies were wanted; dance music for stringed instruments gave an impulse in the same direction; and finally the popular use of the lute proved a most powerful factor in the introduction of chords as a means of accompanying a melody.

A certain amount of preliminary work had been done before the beginning of the seventeenth century, but a definite attempt at dramatic music was made in the year 1600, when Giacopo Peri's 'Euridice' was performed in Florence. The music, following the action of the play, was very simple in construction, and its interest to its hearers must have been largely due to their instinctive feeling of what it might lead to. Composers of all nationalities eagerly threw themselves into the new opening, but one stands out pre-eminent, Claudio Monteverde. A professional viol-player, he realised that intervals which had always been considered too abrupt and difficult for voices to take were easily played on a stringed instrument, no difficulty in making sure of an augmented fourth there!—and he proceeded to use discords in what was for his time a peculiarly daring manner: to use them as a means of representing keen emotion. Of the one fragment extant of his opera 'Arianna,' it is said that 'it moved all who heard it to tears,' while his 'Orfeo' contains the most dramatic music of his time.

The manuscripts which have been preserved of Cavalli's operas show how closely he followed in Monteverde's footsteps, although his music tended more towards simplicity of design and clearness of construction than dramatic colouring. In his opera 'Giasone' (1649), he established the principle of an introductory symphony in movements which, though quite distinct, are related to each other in character; a principle which was afterwards to evolve on the one hand into the French overture, in which a serious slow movement was succeeded by a fugue, and on the other into the Italian introductory sinfonia, generally consisting of an allegro, a slow movement, and a finale.

Later on the music of Carissimi shows clearly the steady progress that the new ideas had made, for he brought them to bear on sacred music, and did much towards its secularization. French opera is generally supposed to have been influenced by the Italians through Cavalli, who was in Paris in 1660, but it always kept essentially national characteristics in its dance-tunes and chansons. It reached its high-water mark in the time of Lulli. All of his works present the same definite type—the opening overture, the prologue, with its alternate chorus and ballet, followed by the play, distinguished by its fine declamatory recitative.

Organ music also made rapid strides in development in this century. The realisation of the fact that, if there were no words to give listeners a definite idea, the music must do it, led to a musical 'subject' being systematically introduced and continued throughout a composition. There is a long and famous roll of Italian organist-composers, while Sweelinck, of Amsterdam, is a familiar name, and the Danish composer Buxtehude wrote fine music of a genuinely instrumental character; but it was in Germany that the most extraordinary activity was shown:—

> Organ music may indeed be said to be the first branch of art in which Germany asserted herself as an independent musical nation; and even the great achievements of her composers in the lines of choral music, which were among the greatest glories of the eighteenth century, were arrived at through the adaptation for vocal purposes of the style they had evolved for contrapuntal organ music.

Johann Pachelbel especially, whose work must have been well known to J. S. Bach, wrote some of the finest Choral-Vorspiele of the time.

Meanwhile, in England, composers had been writing music for the virginals; there are wonderful collections preserved in our old libraries of dance-tunes, pavans, galliards, and allemandes, of fantasias, and elaborate sets of variations on popular tunes, which are full of intricate and ingenious devices. The description given by Sir Hubert Parry of characteristic compositions by Orlando Gibbons, Byrd, Bull, and Farnaby is full of interest, and is illustrated by many musical passages. It is worth while to compare the variations (p. 87, ex. 68, p. 88, ex. 70) taken from Benjamin Cosyns's Virginal Book in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace with the music as given in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book (pp. 6, 16) which was published in full by J. A. Fuller Maitland and W. Barclay Squire in 1899, for the two books differ in a remarkable degree.

English church music was also showing signs of new life; anthems containing solo music, technically known as 'verse' anthems, are heard of as early as 1610; a very fine one was composed by Orlando Gibbons in 1618, and Barnard's great collection of sacred music, published in 1641, contains anthems by William Byrd in which solo passages alternate with chorus; but although this important step in advance had been made, the devotional contrapuntal style remained essentially the same. A long interval of enforced silence during the Puritans' sway, due to their pronounced aversion to church music, produced a great change, for it led to a marked development of secular music. Numbers of collections of 'ayres' for solo voices with tablature for the lute appeared; Robert Jones published his 'First Book' in 1600, a second in 1601, and a third in 1608 (not 1605, as stated on p. 193). Books of Consort Lessons, Fancies or Fantasias written for groups of instruments of various kinds, and especially the characteristic English masque, gave scope to the talent of such men as Morley, Gibbons, Campion, Lock, and others. When church music again came to the front at the time of the Restoration the result was shown in greater richness of harmonisation, a keener sense of rhythm, and in the definite adoption of declamatory solo music.

Pelham Humfrey, John Blow, Benjamin Rogers, and others helped to lay the foundation of the new kind of church music, but they all were overshadowed by the extraordinary genius of Henry Purcell. His anthems reach the highest point of that time. They differ largely from the old church music in the solo and ensemble pieces that they contain instead of the old massive chorus, also in the amount of instrumental scoring, for they are often preceded by symphonies written in two movements at least, which are almost equivalent to overtures. Purcell showed his variety of resource in choral work in his music for plays and operas, and especially in the numerous odes, secular and sacred, which were the forerunners of the cantatas and oratorios of a later date. The intention of making the music as apt as possible to the spirit of the words is evident both in the choral and solo writing, expressive harmonies being employed to bring out particular passages with intense vividness, while as for tunefulness—

> Probably no composer except Schubert has ever had a readier fund of melody; and it always rings true and characteristic of the country to which he belonged.

Here we must pause, for in the space at our disposal it is only possible to touch on some of the results of seventeenth-century artistic activity. Sir Hubert Parry does not allow us to depend altogether on his graphic verbal descriptions, but prints a large number of musical passages to illustrate various points. It is unfortunate that in these examples so many errors have escaped detection in the proof-reading—accidentals are omitted or wrongly placed (exs. 159, 167, 179, 217, 224, 242) and wrong notes occur (exs. 140, 171b, 216, 290a, &c.)—one looks for greater accuracy in a work of this high standard. Sir Hubert Parry has obviously ransacked foreign and home libraries for manuscripts and seventeenth century publications, but he has wisely avoided any attempt to give an exhaustive list of compositions or composers, which would have unnecessarily overweighted the book, and delayed the successful completion of a great and arduous piece of work.

RICHARD STRAUSS'S 'FEUERSNOT' IN BERLIN.

The latest work of Richard Strauss—the one-act opera 'Feuersnot'—has had a career of rapid success in its own country. It will probably be successful in other countries too in time; but it is in many respects so very Teutonic, that it would be rash to predict its quick dissemination elsewhere. An important stage in its progress was its first production in Berlin on October 28, before an audience musically very representative, but socially not so brilliant as it would have been had the Court not chosen that evening for a visit to Madame Sarah Bernhardt. The production was a triumph. Those who know the ways of the Berlin public assert that it is a long time since the composer of a new opera has been honoured by ten recalls, and that Herr Strauss's personal popularity in Berlin—where he is one of the conductors of the Opera—had little influence on the verdict of the public.

It is in many ways a work to which it is difficult to apply the ordinary canons of criticism, for it has moments of everything from opera bouffe to grand opera; and yet it leaves the hearer with a remarkable impression of homogeneity. The orchestra is treated with unparalleled freedom, and the main interest of the work centres in it; but it is hardly just to say that it is too symphonic, for Herr Strauss never allows considerations of purely musical development to hamper him in the attainment of dramatic effect. Those who know his orchestral works only will be surprised and delighted at his extraordinary mastery over choral effects; and it is hardly an exaggeration to say that some of the most important choruses come very near to the invention of a new art-form. He can create atmosphere by means of a chorus almost as deftly as by means of instruments. And as regards beauty of orchestral colour and ingenuity of scoring, 'Feuersnot' is equal to his greatest symphonic works; while in directness of utterance and beauty of melody it surpasses them. True he draws somewhat on folk-song, but to such melodies as that of the opening of Kunrad's address from the balcony—and to one of Kunrad's chief leitmotives—the epithet 'beautiful' cannot justly be denied, and moreover they are unmistakably Straussian.

The plot of Herr Ernst von Wolzogen's 'Singgedicht' is derived from an old Dutch legend, and he brings it into connection with the celebrations of Midsummer Eve and the lighting of the Johannisfeuer—the symbolical significance of which, as a glorification of the senses, is familiar in German literature. The scene is laid in Munich in the 'fabelhafte Unzeit' (the fabulous No-time—or Bad Time), and on Midsummer Eve Kunrad der Ebner is roused from his abstraction by the children asking for fuel for the bonfire. He suddenly realises how foolish he has been to neglect life and love for the sake of his old moth-eaten books, and bids the boys put them all into the fire. And then his eyes fall on Diemut the Burgomaster's daughter, and he promptly woos her and kisses her. She is enraged and plans revenge. She simulates affection for him, and promises him a midnight meeting if he will ascend to her room in a basket which she promises to draw up. But she leaves him dangling in mid-air and calls the people to scoff at him. He summons his magic power to his aid and causes all the flames to be extinguished, and tells the people that they cannot burn again till the maiden consents to be his. She quickly appears at the window and takes him in. Then all the people turn to her and urge her to yield. The two choruses—that which is sung when darkness comes, which ends in an outburst of rage against Kunrad; and that in which the anger of the people is turned against the too coy Diemut—are the two most striking moments of the opera. After the people have left the stage we come to the extremely beautiful and dramatic excerpt which was heard recently at a Queen's Hall Concert. Then, gradually, a light is seen in Diemut's room, and suddenly all the flames burst out, and the opera ends in a pæan of love.

So much has been said in the German criticisms of 'Feuersnot' about the topical allusions made in the speech addressed to the crowd from the balcony of Diemut's chamber by Kunrad, that it may be worth while to see what they are. Kunrad may be taken as typical of the new spirit as represented by the author and composer. He tells the people—who have been speculating as to his parentage and country—that the house in which he has been living was that of Master Reichardt, 'the ruler of spirits'—that is Wagner. Now Wagner means in German 'the daring man.' Kunrad continues: 'though Reichardt did much for you and your city you cast out "the daring man"—den Wagner. But you did not drive out the restless new spirit which is always spoiling for a fight (stellt sich zum Strauss). Still many another good man and true came (Wohl zogen will' wackere Leut') to you, but all in vain. You remain in loveless outer darkness, and only from a maiden's love can light come again.' The whole is so ingeniously done that it seems quite natural, and would be passed over by anyone not on the watch. Herr Strauss's way of accompanying this harangue deserves attention, and contains much instruction as to the ethics and uses of musical quotation. When Kunrad talks of Wagner as 'the noble ruler of spirits' the Walhall motive in all its serene dignity is heard from the brass—a noble tribute to his power. The words referring to his banishment are sung by Kunrad to the 'Flying Dutchman' theme—which adds point to the bitter satire, for the 'Dutchman' was the least daring of Wagner's works. The allusion to Strauss is accompanied by a motif from his own opera 'Guntram.' But then does not Hans Sachs quote 'Tristan' musically, and does not Leporello quote 'Figaro'?

One instance may be given of Strauss's ingenuity in the metamorphosing of themes. The subject which accompanies Kunrad's first wooing of Diemut is, in its first form, powerfully expressive of her indignation. By a change of rhythm and harmony it becomes a deliciously piquant illustration of her mockery. In augmentation a part of it represents 'Feuersnot' (Fire-famine), which is due to her rejection of him; and finally it appears in yet another rhythmic and harmonic guise, as the hymn of triumphant love. The performance at Berlin under the composer's direction was admirable, the orchestra being specially praiseworthy, as its task was probably the severest ever set to an operatic orchestra. The chorus, too, did wonders, and Fräulein Destinn as Diemut and Herr Berger as Kunrad were excellent musically and dramatically. All the scenes of popular gaiety and indignation went with irresistible swing. Those who read the libretto can have little idea of its excellence for stage purposes, for it hangs together remarkably, and moves swiftly to a climax and is full of human interest. And it is the human interest of the music which is its chief virtue, for Strauss can write a popular dance which will set the heads wagging, though it is made up of three themes moving at once, and can catch the atmosphere of merry-making as truthfully as that of metaphysical romance.

Braille Music Notation for the Blind. By Edward Watson. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

This volume, the latest addition to Messrs. Novello's Primer series, comes forth bearing this hall-mark: 'The official text-book of the British and Foreign Association for the promotion of the education and employment of the blind.' In the year 1829, Louis Braille, a sightless Frenchman, invented a system of expressing the sounds both of music and of speech (and also numerals) by means of raised dots, embossed into thick paper, to be deciphered by the touch of the finger. Five years later he improved his method, and in 1888 an International Congress, held at Cologne, decided upon the use of the Braille system (for music) in France, England, Germany, and Denmark. The mysteries—for mysteries they certainly are to those who are blessed with the precious sense of vision—of this invaluable Braille aid to those who are deprived of sight, Mr. Watson's treatise seeks to unfold. As the book is intended for sighted people—teachers of the blind and the much larger number of musicians who must feel a sympathetic interest in their sightless brethren—the Braille notation is given in a printed form as an equivalent to the usual raised dots. It would not be possible within the limits of our space to give any idea of the scope of Mr. Watson's pages. The book should be studied for its own sake and for the sake of those for whom it has been so industriously prepared.

In order however to excite curiosity, and as furnishing a specimen of the notation, we give, from Mr. Watson's Primer, the following example, first in Braille, and secondly in ordinary notation. How simple it seems in comparison!

Coronation March. By Frederic H. Cowen.
God save the King. Arranged by Edward Elgar.
Te Deum laudamus in B flat. By C. Villiers Stanford.
Te Deum laudamus (Thanksgiving for Victory). By Arthur Sullivan. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

The primary object of a full score is for conducting purposes, but the secondary use to which it can be put is of hardly less importance, perhaps even greater than the first. In stating this we have in mind the student of instrumentation, to whom the advantage of having the material for analysing full scores is an invaluable aid to his artistic equipment. Example is better than precept, and however well a book on orchestration may be written, even by an expert, the secrets of the art can best be learned by observation—first, the hearing ear, and then the analytical eye.

The foregoing remarks may serve as a preliminary to calling attention to four works enumerated above, which are all by modern English composers. Dr. Cowen's brilliantly-scored March was written to commemorate the recent Coronation, and for half-a-crown one can see what Dr. Elgar is capable of doing for 'God save the King' when he 'turns it on,' orchestrally speaking. That important part of an orchestratist's equipment—the proper and restrained use of instruments when accompanying voices—is admirably demonstrated by Sir Charles Stanford in the score of his popular Te Deum in B flat; and an outstanding feature of Sullivan's posthumous Te Deum is the orchestration for strings, brass instruments, and organ. No apology need be made for calling attention to the beautiful and artistic manner in which these scores have been engraved.

The Song of Love. Words by Rev. J. Cartmel-Robinson. Music by Clarisse Mallard.

Love's Philosophy. Poem by Shelley. Music by Robert C. Parke.

The Watchful Pilot. Words anonymous. Music by Thomas Adams.

[Charles Woolhouse.]

Miss Mallard has a scholarly pen, and at times is happily inspired. Her 'Song of Love' attests to the truth of both these statements. The words have an old-world ring about them that is well reflected in the music, which moreover possesses daintiness and refinement. 'Love's Philosophy' has been attempted by many composers who have viewed Shelley's lines from various standpoints. Mr. Clarke's reading is of the Allegro con fuoco type, with a staccato bass, and much agitation for the right hand. The vocal part is however well laid out for the voice, and the song would be effective if dramatically delivered. The words of 'The Watchful Pilot' are stated to be a production of the year 1780. They relate the approach to England of a gallant ship, and each verse ends with the announcement by the Pilot of the lessening depth of water. There is a sturdiness about the music that befits the subject, and the song may be recommended to baritone vocalists.

Pange Lingua. A Hymn of the Passion. By James Baden Powell.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This is a setting of the well-known hymn of Venantius Fortunatus (530-609), which for many centuries has been associated with Passiontide. It here appears both with the original Latin words and those made familiar in England by the lines beginning 'Sing, my tongue, the glorious battle.' The Precentor of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, takes far too serious a view of his vocation to compose music to these time-honoured words in any arbitrary fashion. For instance, the Ancient Plain-song melody, always associated with them, is retained for the verse 'Crux Fidelis!' whenever it is heard, or suggested, in full or in part; thus he happily retains the old-world flavour of the hymn, at the same time adding to its artistic beauty. The other verses are variously treated—chorus, duet, solo, &c.—as the subject-matter seems to demand. The hymn is scored for strings, wood-wind, trumpet, horns (2), trombones (3), euphonium and drums, with organ. In the instrumentation Mr. Baden Powell has endeavoured to obtain effects of tone rather than elaborate filigree. Moreover, simplicity, without feeble monotony, has been his set purpose throughout, and the practical nature of his undertaking is shown in the organ accompaniment to the vocal score, which is quite complete in its instrumental support. We believe that the 'Pange lingua' has never before been set to music as a whole in cantata form; and this thoughtful composition should ensure acceptance on the part of those who can appreciate sacred music that is devotional in spirit and artistic in aim.

Love's Caprice. Song. Words by T. Campbell. Music by Garnet Wolseley Cox.

Impromptu for Pianoforte. By E. Silas.

Samhain, or All Hallowe'en. Cantata. Written by Annie Patterson. Music by the Rev. W. Houston Collisson.

The Office for the Holy Communion. Composed by Basil Harwood.

[Weekes and Co.]

The above compositions, selected from a parcel received from Messrs. Weekes and Co., merit the attention of musicians. We have on previous occasions commented on the talent shown by Mr. Cox, and 'Love's Caprice' is a pleasant proof of his facility for musical expression. The song requires a vivacious singer, and may demand some little study, but, given these conditions, it can scarcely fail to please owing to its unconventionality. The 'Impromptu' is written on the initials 'D. G. B.,' those of the lady to whom the piece is dedicated. Presumably the influence of the source of inspiration does not end with the announcement of the three notes, and imaginative players may weave pleasing thoughts into the effective little piece, a bright example of this experienced composer's skill.

The cantata by Mr. Houston Collisson is 'written and composed expressly for the Dublin Musical Festival' (Feis Ceoil), 1902. Its romantic subject is neatly treated by the librettist, and the music is appropriately bright and melodious. It requires two soloists—a soprano, and baritone.

Dr. Basil Harwood's earnestness and experience as a church composer are a guarantee that the essential elements in the setting of the service of the Holy Communion would be forthcoming. His music comprises, in addition to the obligatory numbers, a Sursum Corda, Benedictus, Amen after the Prayer of Consecration, Agnus Dei, post-Communion, and Amen after the Blessing. The part-writing will present no difficulties to fairly-trained choirs.

Six Christmas Songs. Composed by H. Heale.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Miss Heale is to be commended for the selection of the text for her Christmas Songs, set for four voices. The words of the first and second—'Hark! along the street' and 'We hear the bells on Christmas Day'—are by Longfellow, the third, 'Oh! lovely voices of the sky,' by Mrs. Hemans, the fourth, 'Lo! now is come our joyful'st feast,' by George Withers, and Milton and Pope have been laid under a contribution respectively for 'It was the winter wild' and 'Hark! a glad voice.' The most important in design and dimension of the set is the last-named. Miss Heale writes with keen perception of contrast, and consequently secures variety and excellent effects. Although termed part-songs, the vocal writing possesses considerable independence, and while difficulties are avoided musical interest is sustained. Of the other numbers we prefer the settings of the lines by Mrs. Hemans and George Withers. The music of the former reflects the bright and genial sentiment of the text, and the latter is a 'righte merrie dittie.'

Ballade. En Printemps. Sonnet. L'Absence. Cantique D'Amour. Notturno. By Stepán Esipoff.

Ein Kinderfest. Books I. and II. By Arnold Krug.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Stepán Esipoff's pieces may be warmly recommended to pianists in search of short compositions of moderate difficulty. The 'Ballade' has a touch of melancholia common to pieces so named, but it finds a corrective in the brightness of 'Spring.' There is a good deal of significance in the 'Sonnet,' an appropriate sentiment of regret in 'Absence,' amorous tenderness in the 'Song of Love,' and romance, tinged with sombreness, in 'Night.'

The character of 'Ein Kinderfest,' which consists of ten little pieces, can be best gathered from their several names, which are (in Book I.):—'Jacky on horseback,' 'Lizzie dances,' 'Dolly's boating trip,' 'Playing at soldiers,' 'Tea-time'; and (in Book II.) 'Smashing pots,' 'Dance,' 'Jacky shaking the plum-tree,' 'A bicycle ride,' and 'Farewell.' There can be no doubt that programme-music of this kind is educationally sound, as the interest of such bright little pieces as these is considerably increased to little folks by titles that help to stimulate the imagination.

Te Deum Laudamus in D. By Henry Purcell. Latin arrangement by R. R. Terry.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The noble Te Deum in D of Henry Purcell, 'made for St. Cecilia's Day, 1694,' is set to English words; therefore, when a Latin version is called for, the task of the editor of such is to make a skilful adaptation of the music to the authorized Latin text. In the present instance this duty has been carefully discharged by Mr. R. R. Terry, of Westminster Cathedral. As indicating the reverent care with which he has carried out his task, it may suffice to quote from his preface: 'Time values only of notes have sometimes been altered to fit the quantities of the Latin syllables, but nothing written by Purcell has otherwise been changed.' The Bicentenary edition of the Te Deum, prefaced by Sir Frederick Bridge, has been followed in regard to the text of the music.

Benedictus in B flat. By F. J. Read.

Te Deum in A flat and Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in G. By E. W. Naylor.

Lo, my Shepherd is Divine. By R. F. Martin Akerman.

(Novello's Services and Anthems for Men's Voices.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Dr. Read has set the 'Benedictus' in a simple but emphatic manner. Notable features of the composition are admirable accentuation of the words and effective organ accompaniment. It is one of the best arrangements for male voices that we have seen. Dr. Naylor's music always shows adept use of knowledge and experience. His Te Deum is based partly on two chorales, the progressions of which give solidity to the music. With a few exceptions the voices are written for in two parts, tenor and bass only. The accompaniment possesses considerable independence, and greatly adds to the effectiveness of the setting. In the Magnificat Dr. Naylor has made skilful use of a version of the 'Tonus Peregrinus,' as employed in certain verses of the Magnificat in J. S. Bach's cantata 'Festo visitationis Mariæ.' The progression known as the 'Dresden Amen' is also effectively introduced. In the Nunc dimittis the composer divides his singers into first and second choir, but the music is by no means difficult. Its interest is very great. Mr. Akerman's anthem is laid out for baritone, first and second tenor, and first and second bass. It is an excellent piece of choral writing, but demands a well-trained choir to do it justice. Under such interpretative conditions the anthem would prove very effective, the calm confidence of the words being loftily and impressively expressed by the music.

Dr. Henry Coward has been appointed conductor of the Mid-Derbyshire Choral Society and the Preston Choral Society. There were 77 applicants for the latter post, but in default of finding a suitable man among that number, the Committee thereupon offered the appointment to the distinguished Sheffield chorus-master.

THE REVISED EDITION OF HANDEL'S 'MESSIAH.'

Unusual interest was excited in the performance of Handel's 'Messiah' given at Queen's Hall on the 12th ult., under the auspices of the Royal Society of Musicians. This venerable Institution is three years older than the great oratorio, and Handel showed his practical sympathy in its benevolent aims by bequeathing to its treasury the sum of £1,000. Moreover, the conductor's chair was occupied by Dr. Prout, Professor of Music in the University of Dublin, the city wherein the 'Messiah' was first performed nearly 160 years ago.

These elements of appropriateness were, however, naturally overshadowed by the practical outcome of Professor Prout's work upon the familiar oratorio in the preparation of a performing edition. Is it a success? is the question one immediately raises and expects to be asked. We have no hesitation in replying 'Yes.' In support of this opinion we may refer to one or two outstanding features of the performance. The balance of tone between the voices and orchestra was excellent, though it might have been improved with the infusion of some male singers into the alto section of the chorus, in order to produce a more penetrating tone. (In Handel's time all the altos were men.) A greater concentration of the players might have tended to increased effectiveness. And here it should be recorded that the chorus were placed in front of the orchestra, an arrangement which enabled the voices to be well heard, and if both sections of performers had been more 'banked up,' so to speak, the results would have been even tonally better. The effect of the alternation of ripieni and tutti in the orchestra was charming and, moreover, exactly in accordance with Handel's own conception. After such a demonstration of what the great master really intended, surely the 'go-as-you-please' days of interpreting this noble work will belong to the past.

The question of 'additional accompaniments' has given rise to so much controversy that only the slightest reference thereto may be made. One listened with satisfaction to 'The people that walked in darkness' purged of harmonies and orchestration that are not by Handel. The same remark (in regard to orchestration) applies to the Pastoral Symphony, which was revealed in its pristine beauty, with the exception of some soft pedal notes on the organ, which, had they been available in England in Handel's day, he would surely have employed. The non-use of the trombones in 'Lift up your heads' also calls for full commendation.

The diapason tone of the organ in Queen's Hall does not 'tell' very satisfactorily, but one was able to form a judgment of the appropriateness of the Professor's organ part which he has conscientiously written as an adjunct to the score. We may specially instance 'His yoke is easy.' This chorus has been so blatantly sung in the past that its interpretation the other evening came as a revelation. The new organ part, combined with the alternations of piano and forte in the vocal portions, made it a new song and, moreover, Handel's own light-and-shade intentions were carried out. The rather sprightly melody of this chorus is such as to cause flippancy in the rendering if it is sung in too rapid and jerky a manner, but this is a travesty of the original which no conscientious conductor, having in mind the sacredness of the words, would tolerate for a moment. With this reservation in regard to its rendering, a new beauty has been discovered in Handel's sacred oratorio.

Considering that the singers forming the chorus were not a permanent body of vocalists, always rehearsing under one conductor, and the limited opportunities they had of rehearsing together, their efforts were on the whole praiseworthy. Here and there—e.g., the scornful 'He trusted in God'—one missed the 'Sheffield make,' but that 'poetising of the music,' getting behind its crotchets and quavers, seems unprocurable in London so far as chorus singing is concerned. The band was excellent, and as the players were almost all members of the Society, they seemed to play with that verve which indicated entering into the spirit of the thing, not as a mere paid task, but as though their hearts were in it.

The names of the soloists are a sufficient guarantee of their fitness for the duties entrusted to them: Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, the last-named taking the place of Mr. Andrew Black, absent through indisposition. Mr. Fountain Meen was at the organ, and Dr. W. H. Cummings accompanied on a Broadwood pianoforte the recitatives secco with rare discrimination and judgment. Professor Prout, who kept his forces well in hand, received a well-merited tribute of applause from a crowded and deeply-interested audience. The occasion was one that will become memorable in the history of the greatest of oratorios.

BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

Delightful music-makings, each performance lasting ninety minutes and the programmes pleasantly varied, were inaugurated by the great pianoforte firm on the evening of the 6th ult., at St. James's Hall. Herren Ernst von Dohnányi and Fritz Kreisler discoursed on the pianoforte and violin respectively, and Miss Muriel Foster charmed every one, as she always does, by her artistic and sympathetic singing.

The programme of the second concert, on the 20th ult., included Sir Hubert Parry's Duet in E minor for two pianofortes, a product of the early seventies; the first performance in England of Herr Stephen Krehl's quintet in A for clarinet and string quartet (Op. 19); Mozart's Trio in E flat for clarinet, viola, and pianoforte (Köchel, 498); some pianoforte solos by Sgambati, daintily played by Miss Fanny Davies; and songs well rendered by Mr. John Coates. Mr. Victor Benham was associated with Miss Davies in the Parry duet, and Mr. F. Korbay accompanied. The hero of the evening was, however, the incomparable clarinettist, Herr Kammervirtuos Mühlfeld, of the Meiningen Orchestra, whose delicious tone and exquisite phrasing charmed every listener. Herr Krehl's quintet is a well-written and clever work, of which the allegretto and finale are the best sections. As players on stringed instruments, Herr Mühlfeld had as efficient colleagues in the quintet Herren Abbass, Funk, Piennig, and Wendling.

It is the intention of the promoters to include in the programmes works of contemporary musicians, both British and Foreign, and to bring forward some of the less frequently heard compositions of the classical masters. The scheme and the manner in which it is being carried out merit encouragement, and those who favour these Broadwood concerts may count upon a rich enjoyment of music that is very refreshing in its influence upon the listener.

THE MEININGEN ORCHESTRA.

When the late Hans Von Bülow in 1880 assumed conductorship of the private band of the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, that body of players enjoyed no special reputation. He it was who established its fame, and under Herr Fritz Steinbach, who succeeded him, that fame has not in any way diminished. As Wagner's music at Bayreuth, so that of Brahms is held in special honour at Meiningen. Von Bülow was a staunch champion of the Hamburg master, and the same may be said of General-Musik-Director Steinbach; the former, however, fought when prejudice was at its strongest. Fritz Steinbach was appointed in 1886, but now having succeeded to the posts at Cologne rendered vacant through the death of Dr. Wüllner, he has sent in his resignation; thus the future of the band is uncertain.

Large audiences attended all the five concerts daily given at St. James's Hall between the 17th and 21st ult. inclusive. Expectations ran high; nevertheless, on the whole, they may be regarded as fulfilled. The music of Brahms naturally formed a prominent feature in the programmes. When, many years ago, Dr. Richter first played Beethoven's nine Symphonies in chronological order, it seemed as if the music in all its grandeur was revealed to us for the first time. In like manner the four Brahms Symphonies at these concerts were rendered with such life and impulse, with such a spirit of romance, that one felt their power in quite unaccustomed degree; the conductor seemed to be re-creating rather than giving a rendering of the music. Brahms's Violin Concerto in D was included in the scheme, with Madame Marie Soldat as soloist.

As an interpreter of Beethoven, Herr Steinbach was good, although the performances of the 'Leonore' overture, No. 3, and the Eighth Symphony were not specially remarkable. Schubert's Unfinished Symphony had not full justice rendered to it; the first movement was fairly good, but the Andante was dragged. Two of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos were played with great spirit; but what of the harpsichord, or pianoforte part, of which the analyst rightly made mention? Next to Brahms, the conductor seemed most successful with modern works: Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and especially Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini.' Two concertos were given: Beethoven in G, with Mr. Leonard Borwick as the solo pianist, and the Brahms, for violin, with Madame Marie Soldat. The orchestra consists of a fine body of players, especially as regards the wood-wind, in which department the tone and phrasing were exceptionally fine. We conclude this brief notice of the interesting series of concerts by congratulating General-Musik-Director Steinbach and his excellent players on their success.

London Concerts.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Owing to the severe indisposition of Mr. Henry J. Wood, an element of novelty has been imparted into these concerts at Queen's Hall by the engagement of various conductors. For the first of the series on October 25, the services of M. Edouard Colonne were secured, not altogether a very happy selection, as the two principal works were Brahms's First Symphony in C minor, and Richard Strauss's tone-poem 'Don Juan,' the French conductor not unnaturally being heard to greater advantage when directing the music of his own countrymen than that of the Fatherland. A notable feature was the brilliant pianoforte playing by Miss Adela Verne in M. Paderewski's 'Polish Fantasia.'

The second concert, on the 8th ult., was conducted by Kapellmeister Emil Paur, who secured a remarkably finished performance of Mendelssohn's rather neglected 'Scotch Symphony.' Dr. Edward Elgar directed a very fine rendering of his brilliant 'Variations on an original theme,' and M. Ysaye was heard at his best in Bach's Violin Concerto in E. Miss Muriel Foster may be said to have increased her reputation by her dramatic singing of Berlioz's fine song 'La Captive.'

On the 22nd ult. a large audience greeted Dr. Edward Elgar as he made his way to the conductor's rostrum. The concert opened with Weber's 'Euryanthe' overture and closed with the Coronation Ode of the composer-conductor. The intervening numbers of the programme were two songs contributed by Fräulein Therese Behr, Grieg's pianoforte concerto in A minor (Mr. Arthur de Greef, soloist), Richard Strauss's Love-Scene from 'Feuersnot,' and six unpretending little pieces (or tone-pictures) for orchestra, entitled 'Dornröschen' ('The Sleeping Beauty') by Humperdinck, played for the first time in England. Dr. Elgar conducted with keen artistic perception and commendable freedom from virtuoso antics; his subjugation of the orchestra in their accompaniments to the vocal solos calls for special praise.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

The Autumn Series took place on the 3rd, 10th, and 18th ult. For the most part Wagner and Beethoven reigned supreme, but at the final concert a magnificent interpretation was given of the 'Symphonie Fantastique' of Berlioz. Mention should also be made of the beautiful rendering of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto at the second concert, with Herr Fritz Kreisler as soloist. The other vocalists at the concerts were Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Ben Davies, Madame Blauvelt, and Frau and Dr. Felix Kraus.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

It is said 'opportunity makes the man,' and certainly the talent and great ability of Mr. Arthur W. Payne as a conductor of orchestral music have been made especially prominent by his able direction of the concluding Promenade Concerts which terminated on the 8th ult. If the programmes were void of novelties, it may be recorded that Miss Adela Verne played on October 23 for the first time in England César Franck's 'Variations Symphoniques' for pianoforte and orchestra, and that Dr. Elgar's 'Coronation Ode' was sung on October 31.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The only Saturday afternoon concerts calling for record were those taking place on the 1st and 15th ult., when Dr. Cowen conducted an orchestra largely consisting of members of the London Philharmonic band. On the former occasion excellent renderings were given of Tchaikovsky's fantasie overture 'Romeo and Juliet,' Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, and Mr. Arthur Hervey's tone-picture 'On the March,' the last-named being performed for the first time in London since its production at the recent Cardiff Festival. Mr. Victor Benham was the solo pianist in Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto in E. The chief features on the second occasion under notice were effective performances of Dr. Cowen's 'Phantasy of Life and Love,' and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

VARIOUS CONCERTS.

Amongst the long list of artists who recently have sought public favour, congratulation is due to Miss Elsie Hall, the young Australian pianist, who gave a recital with marked success on October 30 at Steinway Hall. Her performances were marked by refinement, taste, and technical fluency.

The efforts of so sterling a musician as Mr. E. H. Thorne certainly merit mention, and his chamber concert on the 1st ult. at Queen's (Small) Hall was distinguished by the first production of a pianoforte trio by Mr. Algernon Ashton. The work suffers from the common fault of over-development, but it is admirably written and attests to the composer's scholarship. The performers were Mr. E. H. Thorne, Mr. Hubert Hunt, and Miss Almond.

Mention is due of a pleasing Sonata di camera in A flat for violin and pianoforte by Mr. R. H. Walthew, played for the first time on the 7th ult. by Miss Dorothea Walenn and the composer at Steinway Hall. The work, as its name indicates, is small in dimension and unpretentious, but it is essentially pleasing and scholarly.

An interesting trio of works imparted distinction to the concert given by the South London Choral Association, at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell New Road, on the 24th ult. Choral music was well represented by Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' while Miss Gertrude Venables played the solo part of Weber's Concerstück for pianoforte with admirable grasp of its technical difficulties and poetical significance. The band (ably led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse) and chorus, in number two hundred, again gave proof of their zealous attainments and the excellent training they receive from Mr. Leonard C. Venables, who conducted the concert with his usual skill.

The series of six popular concerts, organised by Messrs. Erard to take place at the Royal Albert Hall on successive Saturday evenings, was initiated on the 15th ult., when Miss Margaret Macintyre and other artists, Madame Clara Novello Davies's Glee Singers and the band of His Majesty's Scots Guards took part in a miscellaneous programme.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, November 16.

With the resumption of its performances, towards the end of October, by the Concert-Verein, our concert season may be said to have commenced. In the pieces forming the programme of the opening performance, the orchestra of this young Society, under Herr Loewe's zealous direction, again exhibited a most marked improvement in every respect. This was particularly noticeable in the overture to Peter Cornelius's 'Der Barbier von Bagdad,' and in Berlioz's 'Queen Mab,' from the 'Romeo and Juliet' symphony. The programme also included Beethoven's fifth symphony, with the conductor's interpretation of which (as with that of the other symphonies of the master) I am somewhat at variance. Herr Loewe belongs to the numerous class of modern conductors who, in following the example set by Hans von Bülow, seek to emphasize certain specially significant passages essential to the structure of the entire work by means of a ritardando. They do so, however, to the detriment of the rhythm and natural progression of the whole, thus diverting the hearer's attention rather than concentrating it, by markedly dwelling upon a detail however important in itself.

The Philharmonic Society, under Herr Joseph Hellmesberger's direction, opened their first concert of the season with the 'Carneval' Overture by Dvorák, and gave us a first hearing in Vienna of Tchaikovsky's symphonic fantasia, 'Francesca da Rimini,' the performance concluding with Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony. The rendering of these works was truly magnificent.

Considerable interest attached to the first public performance given by the pupils of the newly-established advanced class for pianoforte playing, or 'Meisterschule,' in connection with our Conservatorium, which is under the direction of Herr Emil Sauer. Five pupils—three ladies and two gentlemen—were the solo executants, and in concertos by Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Henselt, Schumann, and Sauer, rendered a very good account of themselves. Their performances clearly demonstrated the excellence of the teaching they had received, and reflected great credit upon the earnest spirit and high aims prevailing at the Institution to which they belong.

Amongst the distinguished executants who have visited us recently may be instanced, in the first place, the pianist, Herr Friedberg, of Frankfort-on-Main, a mature but most unassuming artist, whose interpretation of works by Beethoven and Brahms deservedly met with much appreciation. Ondricek and Hubermann attracted the most favourable attention amongst violinists; the former more especially in the Beethoven Concerto, the latter as a superb interpreter of the classical chamber Sonata. Two other violinists, Fräulein Marie Herites and a blind artist, Herr Grasse, likewise deserve to be mentioned as being decidedly superior to the ordinary run of virtuosi.

At a concert given by the Tonkünstler Verein, we were made acquainted with a very characteristic quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, by J. Miroslow Weber, a native of Prague, and leading violinist at the Royal Opera, Munich. A comic opera of his, 'Die neue Mamsell,' has been produced at Munich, and several chamber compositions from his pen have obtained prizes at Vienna, St. Petersburg, and elsewhere. The new quintet is decidedly interesting, being brightly written, and replete with charming colour effects. It is, moreover, extremely well scored, showing the eminently practical hand of its composer.

Signor Alessandro Bonci, an excellent lyrical tenor, has been giving some highly successful vocal recitals, creating in fact quite a sensation; the directors of our Imperial Opera are making arrangements for his appearance in some leading parts.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At Dr. Lawrence Walker's first and second subscription concerts, on the 7th and 8th ult., the 'Kruse Quartet' (consisting of Professor Kruse and Messrs. Inwards, Ferin, and Walenn) gave admirable performances of chamber music. Dr. Walker, with Professor Kruse, played in Brahms's Sonata (Op. 100) for pianoforte and violin, and in Schumann's pianoforte Quintet. The least known piece performed was the Andantino and Presto (for strings) from Verdi's Quartet in E minor. It is no doubt a clever composition, but is hardly likely to live or add to its composer's fame, and in fact it seems almost a pity to awaken it from the oblivion that has already fallen upon it.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first of the orchestral concerts promoted by Messrs. Stockley and Sabin took place in the Town Hall on October 27. The Hallé orchestra, under Dr. Richter, gave a familiar programme, concluding with Beethoven's symphony in C minor. Mr. Ffrangcon Davies replaced Herr Van Rooy at very short notice, and sang some Wagner excerpts with complete success.——The Halford Concerts Society started their season in the same hall on the next evening. The novelties were Sir Charles Stanford's symphony, 'L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso,' and Irish Rhapsody in D minor. The composer conducted, and he and his compositions were cordially welcomed. Mr. E. von Dohnányi gave a delicate rendering of the solo part in Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto.——The second concert took place on the 11th ult.; Mr. Granville Bantock conducted a fine performance of his very striking symphonic poem, 'Dante,' heard for the first time here. It is a 'musical portrait' of the poet, and is, of its kind, a masterly work. The 'Don Juan' of Richard Strauss was another novelty, and one that excited much interest. Miss Giulia Ravogli was an acceptable vocalist. Mr. Halford sustained his reputation as conductor.

On the 6th ult., Mr. Max Mossel began his new series of drawing-room concerts at the Grosvenor Rooms. The evening was given up to M. Saint-Saëns, who played the pianoforte part in his Trio in F (Op. 18), and Quartet in B flat (Op. 41), and some solo pieces. The audience were delighted with his finished performance. The other players were Mr. Max Mossel (violin), Mr. H. G. Ketèlbey (viola), and Mr. J. C. Hock (violoncello). Madame Kirkby Lunn renderered with taste a number of songs by Saint-Saëns. ——Mr. Karl Johannessen resumed his historical chamber concerts in the Temperance Hall on the 8th ult. The first two programmes were devoted to the music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the artists being Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch, Mrs. Elodie Dolmetsch, and Miss Mabel Johnston. Very delightful were the performances upon the harpsichord, clavichord, lute, and viols.—— The Birmingham Chamber Concert Society, with the Max Mossel String Quartet as executants, gave the first concert of the season in the Masonic Hall on the 18th ult. Mozart's String Quartet in E flat (No. 16 in Breitkopf and Härtel's complete edition), and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25), formed the programme. Mr. Howard Hadley was the pianist, and Miss Marguerite Saunders sang. The performances were extremely good.

Bare mention of the various recitals must suffice. Madame Margaret Milward gave a vocal recital on October 29, singing seventeen songs; Miss Hannah Bryant played pianoforte solos. The music was entirely Russian.——On October 30, Kubelik appeared in the Town Hall, and was enthusiastically received. Miss K. Goodson was the pianist, and Madame Amy Sherwin the vocalist.——On the 3rd ult., M. Paderewski charmed an immense audience in the Town Hall at the second Harrison Concert.——The next evening M. Saint-Saëns gave an organ recital in the Town Hall, playing chiefly his own compositions. He was most enthusiastically received.——Miss Violet Myers gave a vocal recital on the 5th ult., assisted by Mr. Herbert Fryer, pianist. A good programme was well rendered.

The only choral concert to be noticed was the matinée at the Birmingham Royal Society of Artists on the 15th ult. Mr. W. Sewell's newly-formed male-voice choir then made its début, singing a number of part-songs.——The Birmingham Sunday School Union concluded its annual festival in the Town Hall on October 25. A chorus of 600 voices performed Mr. Thomas Facer's new cantata, 'Sons of the Empire.'——On the 13th ult. the Church of England Sunday School Association held a festival in the same hall, when a choir numbering 600 voices sang a number of pieces under the direction of the Rev. W. Wale.——On Hospital Sunday (October 26) Paladilhe's 'Messe Solennelle' was performed with full chorus and orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. F. W. Beard.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A new local instrumental quartet has been formed, consisting of Messrs. M. Alexander, H. Hunt, E. Lane, and P. Lewis. With Miss May Lock at the pianoforte, they gave their first concert at the Victoria Rooms on the 6th ult. The works performed were Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41), Rheinberger's Quintet in C (Op. 114), and Miss Lock and Mr. Alexander took part in Beethoven's Sonata in F, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 24). The large audience appeared highly gratified at the excellent manner in which the compositions were interpreted. Miss A. E. Phillips was the vocalist, Miss E. Bennett accompanying.

The Saturday Popular Concerts which proved so successful last season have been resumed in Clifton and, as before, prominence is given to performances on the organ by local players. The organists who have already appeared at the concerts are Mr. Hubert Hunt (Bristol Cathedral), Mr. C. W. Stear (Holy Nativity), Mr. W. E. Fowler (All Saints', Bristol), and Mr. Cedric Bucknall (All Saints', Clifton).

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Miss Maude Powell and Miss Florence Etlinger, contralto, gave a pleasant song and violin recital, in the Molesworth Hall, on October 30. It was the first visit of the fair violinist to Dublin, and she pleased a critical audience by her fine playing of Esposito's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata (in which she was joined by Miss Bessie Ruthven) and some of the Brahms-Joachim Hungarian dances. Miss Florence Etlinger, who possesses a fine voice of good compass, was heard to advantage in songs by Elgar, Scarlatti, Schumann, and Chaminade. Miss Constance Greene and Mr. C. W. Wilson played the accompaniments.

At Miss Pauline Elsner's concert on the 6th ult., the attractions were the Kruse Quartet and the concert-giver's sister, Mrs. A. McC. Stewart, who as Miss Alex Elsner held a prominent position amongst our local vocalists. The concert was honoured by the presence of their Royal Highnesses The Duke and Duchess of Connaught.——The same afternoon at the Royal Irish Academy of Music a recital was given, at which Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees, violoncellist, and Mr. Randal Woodhouse, vocalist (two new professors at this Institution), had an opportunity of displaying their respective attainments. Both created a distinctly favourable impression.

At the Royal Dublin Society's Monday afternoon recitals the programmes have been provided by the Verbrugghen and Mossel string quartets and by Mr. C. W. Perkins, the talented organist of the Birmingham Corporation.

Organ recitals have been given in St. Patrick's Cathedral by Mr. Charles Marchant (the Cathedral organist) and Sir George Martin, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral; and in St. Bartholomew's Church by Mr. W. Vipond Barry, the organist of the church; and we have had a visit from M. Paderewski, who played to probably the largest audience ever assembled in the Theatre Royal.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The month has been conspicuous for the number of recitals that have been given by the younger generation of professional music-makers. Chief in interest among these may be mentioned the vocal recital of Miss Stuart Reid, who had the congenial assistance of Mr. Robert Burnett, baritone, and Mr. Tivadar Nachèz, violinist. Miss Reid, who is one of the best of our local sopranos, sang a long and varied programme of great artistic merit in Italian, French, German, English, and even in the Scottish Doric; all with admirable grace, finish, and insight, and with remarkable display of vocal technique. The concert was altogether most interesting, and the audience large and enthusiastic.

Another recital of great charm was that of Miss Edith Walton, who in a delightful programme of pianoforte music showed progress in the strength and beauty of her technique, a larger grasp of meaning, and a greater power of placing it before her audience.

Other recitals of considerable local and musical interest have been those of Miss Margaret McLauchlan and Mr. D. Millar Craig, pianoforte and violoncello; Mr. Julian Clifford and the Hon Margaret Henniker, pianoforte and vocal; Miss Helen and Mr. Peter McGregor (brother and sister), violin and pianoforte; Miss Neil Fraser and Miss May Meldrum, voice and pianoforte; and Miss Agnes Janson. Miss Janson, who had as associates Messrs. Maurice Sons and Reinhold Tramm, gave a very fine rendering of Schumann's cyclus 'Woman's Life and Love' and some songs of Mr. Tramm's own composition.

Professor Niecks's first Historical Concert took the form of a recital of violin music—'From Senaillé to Rode'—performed by that admirable violinist, Mr. Maurice Sons. Mr. Sons is so well known as the leader of the Scottish Orchestra that the fact of his being a specially-gifted soloist is sometimes overlooked. Much of the music was such as one is not likely to hear elsewhere, and on this account, and also because of the beauty and brilliance of Mr. Sons's performance, the concert was a most interesting and enjoyable one to the large audience assembled in the University Music Class Room. Miss Marion Richardson was the vocalist, and Mr. Scott Jupp an admirable accompanist.

At the first of his Chamber Music Concerts, Mr. Denhof had as his coadjutors M. Ysaye and Miss Muriel Foster, and the event proved one of considerable musical importance. The Sonatas for pianoforte and violin of Brahms (Op. 100) and Rubinstein (Op. 19) were the outstanding items in a varied and artistic programme, and each received a whole-souled and most subjective rendering. Miss Muriel Foster made an extremely favourable impression in songs by Brahms, Wagner, and Scarlatti.

The Edinburgh Society of Musicians has made a most auspicious commencement to its meetings for music-making. The first concert of the season was undertaken by Mr. Paul Della Torre, in conjunction with Mr. H. Dambmann and Mr. Harry Murray, and drew a crowded gathering of members and associates. The 'Kreutzer' Sonata of Beethoven, Rubinstein's Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, and the Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello of Saint-Saëns were each rendered with great beauty and distinction.

The concerts of the Sunday Society have achieved considerable prominence lately through the action of a section of the 'unco' guid,' who have been urging the managers of the Royal Infirmary to decline receipt of the proceeds of one of the concerts given by the Society for the benefit of that Institution!

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(from our own correspondent.)

The fine organ by Messrs. Lewis and Co., which was formerly in the concert hall at the Exhibition, has now been erected in the new Art Galleries, and recitals are being given twice weekly. Among the performers since the opening of the organ have been Messrs. Berry, Walton, Hutton Malcolm, and Hirst.

An organ and choral recital of exceptional interest was given in Claremont Church on October 31. Mr. Hutton Malcolm, the accomplished organist of the church, played ten pieces by French composers, illustrative of the organ music of the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, and the church choir sang effectively Saint-Saëns's 'The Deluge,' a short oratorio not previously heard in Glasgow. The solo music was given by Misses Macfarlane and Mackay and Messrs. Adams and Fleming.

The recital given on the 4th ult. by three young local musicians, Miss Jenny Taggart (vocalist), Miss Rana Taggart (violinist), and Mr. A. M. Henderson (pianist), was in all respects a complete success. Interest was specially centred in the performance of Mr. Henderson, who has just completed his period of training in Berlin, and who on this occasion made his début in his native city. His excellent technique and fine musical feeling were exhibited in Scharwenka's 'Romanza Appassionata' in B minor and Gavotte in C minor, and, associated with Miss Rana Taggart, in Schumann's Sonata in A minor for pianoforte and violin.——Kubelik's recital on the 6th ult. was an event of the first importance to violinists. His superlative technique and, withal, absolute certainty of intonation and absence of roughness were the amazement of everybody.

On the 11th ult. Clydebank Choral Union, under Mr. W. J. Clapperton, performed Gade's 'The Erl King's Daughter.' The accompaniments were played by members of the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, and a trio of excellent soloists (Misses Emily Davies and Maud Santley, and Mr. Robert Burnett) contributed not a little to the successful performance.

Those who were present at the Verbruggen Quartet concert on the 17th ult. enjoyed an unusually fine performance of chamber music. The programme included Schumann's Quartet for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, Godard's Six Duettini for two violins, and Tchaikovsky's String Quartet (Op. 11). The highest point of excellence was reached in the slow movement of the Tchaikovsky Quartet, where the perfect ensemble and attention to detail gave evidence of most careful and intelligent rehearsal. Mr. Philip E. Halstead, who was the pianist, besides taking part in the Schumann Quartet, contributed two solos, for which he received a well-deserved recall.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(from our own correspondent.)

The first of the series of Chamber Concerts organised by Miss Ellicott and Miss Hirschfeld for the present season was given in the Gloucester Guildhall, on October 23, when an interesting programme was adequately performed by Miss Hirschfeld (pianoforte), Mr. John Saunders, (violin) Mr. J. E. R. Teague (violoncello), and Miss Hilda Wilson, a welcome vocalist, who introduced a new song composed and written by Mrs. Ellicott (wife of the Bishop of Gloucester), entitled 'Sleep beloved, sleep.'

A musical festival on quite an imposing scale, held in the Parish Church, Ledbury, on October 23, attracted a large attendance from a wide area. The band and chorus numbered 100 performers, under the baton of Mr. Tom Woodward. The works performed were Handel's 'Zadok the Priest,' Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' and Elgar's 'Imperial March.' The soloists were Mrs. Percy Somers-Cocks, Madame Marian Blinkhorn, Mr. G. Banks (Hereford Cathedral), and Mr. C. Woodward (Lincoln Cathedral).

A most encouraging report of last year's working was read at the annual general meeting of the Gloucester Choral Society, over which Mr. Joseph Bennett presided. Both as regards numbers of performing members and subscribers the Society reached high-water mark.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(from our own correspondent.)

The second of the Philharmonic Society's concerts took place on October 28, when Miss Ada Crossley was the vocalist and Miss Gertrude Peppercorn the pianist. The latter's interpretation of Beethoven's concerto in E flat was distinguished by clear insight into its meaning, and by much executive skill. Miss Crossley's admirable singing met with its just reward, and the orchestra, under Dr. Cowen, ably rendered Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' fantasia. The third concert of the same Society occurred on the 11th ult., when the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The vocalists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Lillie Wormald, and Mr. William Green.

The Liverpool Orchestral Society has given two concerts, on October 25 and the 8th ult. The first organization has given two concerts—one on October 25 at the Philharmonic Hall, and the other on the 8th ult. at the Gymnasium. The first programme was of special interest, as it included Richard Strauss's tone poem, 'Death and Transfiguration,' and Liszt's symphonic poem, 'Orpheus,' both being performed for the first time in this city. Under Mr. Rodewald's skilled direction a particularly fine rendering of both works was achieved, and Elgar's two military marches were also splendidly performed. Miss Muriel Foster was the vocalist, and she gave songs by Elgar and Granville Bantock with rare intelligence and artistic appreciation of their widely divergent features. The second concert was chiefly noteworthy for a distinguished performance of the dream-music from Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel,' a careful rendering of Brahms's First Symphony, and for the fine singing of Mr. Webster Millar.

The first of three Richter concerts was given on the 4th ult. at the Philharmonic Hall, the main interest centreing in an admirable performance of Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2, played for the first time in Liverpool. ——Nearly sixty years have passed since the initiation of the Societa Armonica, and the 127th concert was given in the small concert room of St. George's Hall, on the 14th ult., to a large and critical audience. Mr. Carl Fuchs, the talented violoncellist, was the soloist in Eckert's concerto, and Miss Helen Jaxon's fine voice was heard to advantage in 'Elizabeth's Greeting.' Mr. V. V. Akeroyd, whose devotion to this Society is worthy of all praise, conducted the orchestra, the chief work being Schumann's Symphony in D minor.

Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a song and pianoforte recital at the Philharmonic Hall on the 8th ult., when these favourite artists afforded much pleasure to their many friends in this city.

Mr. Schiever's first concert was given on the 15th ult., when Miss Margie Bennett increased largely the favourable opinion which is held here of her executive skill and her intelligence in pianoforte playing. Quartets by Haydn and Brahms, and Dvorák's F minor trio (Op. 65) were played.——Mr. W. I. Argent's initial concert took place on the 6th ult., when the programme consisted of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' The Commemoration Concert of the College of Music took place on the 10th ult. The College has now been in existence for ten years, and during that time it has done much useful work. Mr. Carl Courvoisier conducted the orchestra of past and present students.

Mr. Thomas Shaw's series of popular concerts at Hope Hall commenced with every success on the 15th ult., the vocalists being Miss Marion Wild, Miss Edith Randles, Mr. J. Halton Morris, Mr. W. H. Atkinson and the Liverpool Cymric Union; while among the instrumentalists were Mr. E. S. Redfern, Mr. H. Van Damme, and Mr. Shaw's orchestra.——Mr. Isidor Cohn's pianoforte recital at the College of Music on the 3rd ult. was devoted to the works of Beethoven.——At one of the Sunday Society's concerts, which always command large attendances, Mr. Alfred Ross, one of our best local violinists, gave further evidence of his great talent.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Among the multifarious enterprises of musical Manchester the Hallé Concerts are naturally pre-eminent. At the second, on October 23, the symphony was Mozart's in C major, commonly known as the 'Jupiter,' though Dr. Richter protests against the title on the double ground that it is not of the composer's invention and conveys a false idea of the music. He prefers the description 'Mit der grossen Schlussfuge.' This was played in a no less masterly manner than the Beethoven and Wagner selections which have in London been much too exclusively associated with Dr. Richter's name. Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, who replaced Mr. Van Rooy (indisposed) at short notice, was thoroughly successful in Hans Sachs's two principal monologues and in Wotan's part in the final scene of 'Die Walküre.' At the third concert on October 30, a subtle and telling performance was given of Brahms's Second Symphony, and Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus, as pianoforte soloist, confirmed previous highly-favourable impressions in renderings of Beethoven's Third Concerto, Liszt's 'Campanella,' and Chopin's F minor Fantasia, the 'Campanella' being astonishingly good and the Fantasia quite correct as to notes, though the interpretation seemed a little immature. At the same concert the orchestra gave a most exquisite performance of the 'Fair Melusina' Overture.

On the 13th ult. the concert was choral for the first time this season, and the Hallé Choir, on the whole, justified their reputation in Bach's great Mass, studied here for the first time about a year ago. The expression was best in the brighter choruses. In the 'Sanctus' Dr. Richter's beat seemed to be slower than the singers were expecting, and at first they were not perfectly together. The soloists were Miss Fillunger, Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. Webster Millar (of Manchester), and Mr. Austin (of Liverpool). The instrumental parts were all magnificently played, Mr. Fogg being at the organ. The fifth Hallé concert on the 14th ult. was remarkable for the violin-playing of Mr. Fritz Kreisler and the first performance in Manchester of Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini.' Of this mighty symphonic poem, or 'Ouverture-Fantaisie,' a rendering vastly superior to any that I have heard before was given, the precision of detail being no less admirable than the dramatic point with which everything was delivered. In going over the parts, printed in Russia, Dr. Richter had detected twenty-two mistakes. Mr. Kreisler made a considerable impression with his performance of Bach's E major Concerto and the Rondo Capriccioso by Saint-Saëns.

At the second concert of the Brodsky Quartet, held on the 12th inst., Mr. Speelman was back in his place at the viola desk, and a large audience listened with delighted appreciation to the Second String Quartet by Novacek,—the young Bohemian string-player and composer who died recently in New York—Mozart's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, and Beethoven's late String Quartet with the 'difficult resolve' Finale.

On October 24 a highly-successful vocal recital was given by Miss Nora Meredith—a most promising young soprano, who, after some years at the Royal Manchester College, continued her training under Madame Blanche Marchesi.——Mr. Isidor Cohn's Beethoven Recital on October 27 was fairly successful.——At the second 'Gentlemen's' Concert on the 5th ult. the honours were shared between Mr. Kreisler and Madame Sterling.

At Mr. Brand Lane's first concert, on the 8th ult., the Manchester Philharmonic Choir, of which he is conductor, sang agreeably in part-songs by Elgar and others; Mr. Kocian played violin solos with technical agility but rather weak tone, and a long series of songs was given by Miss Beach Yaw, Miss Ada Crossley, Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Denis O'Sullivan and Mr. John Coates.

Two recitals of violin, pianoforte, and vocal music were given on the 17th ult., the one by Miss Henrica Jones, and the other by Mrs. Max Mayer, the programme being in each case perfectly artistic, and the standard of performance for the most part high.——At the first 'open practice' at the Royal Manchester College of Music, performances of striking excellence were given by a young contralto in Mrs. Hutchinson's class, and by a young lady pianist who has studied under Mr. W. H. Dayas.——A mere enumeration must suffice of performances by visiting concert, recital, and opera parties. The Carl Rosa Company gave a week of opera, beginning on October 20, and the Moody-Manners Company another week, beginning on the 10th ult., there being in neither case anything unusual in the répertoire. The visits of the Harrison party, with Madame Patti, on October 22, M. Paderewski, on October 28, Kubelik, on the 4th ult., and the recital by Messrs. Plunket Greene (who was in exceptionally fine voice) and Leonard Borwick, on the 10th ult., must also be recorded.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Considerable interest attached to the annual concert of the Northern Musicians' Benevolent Society, which took place in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on October 27. Sir Alexander Mackenzie has been President of the Society since its formation thirteen years ago, and has from time to time shown considerable interest in its welfare. The committee, desiring to mark their appreciation of their President's support, conceived the idea of selecting the music for this year's concert entirely from his works, and inviting Sir Alexander to conduct. This proposal was carried through with considerable success, the works performed being the Coronation March, 'The Cricket on the Hearth' overture, Dramatic Suite 'Coriolanus,' Ballade for orchestra 'La Belle Dame sans Merci,' Romanza for violoncello and orchestra (the solo charmingly played by Miss Gertie Smith), 'The Little Minister' overture, and songs 'Lift my spirit up to Thee' and 'Gentle dove, thy voice is sad,' the vocalist being Miss Jenny Taggart. The orchestral works were all very creditably played by the Society's orchestra of 100 performers, under the composer's direction, and at the close of the concert Sir Alexander Mackenzie was accorded quite an ovation. On the Saturday previous to the concert the hero of the evening was the guest of the Pen and Pallet Club at a supper given in his honour.

Messrs. S. and A. Oppenheim, assisted by Mr. Knoblich, gave an interesting concert of chamber music in the Assembly Rooms, Newcastle, on October 30, at which Chaminade's Trio in A minor (Op. 34), and Smetana's Trio in G minor (Op. 15), were performed. Miss Perceval Allen sang very acceptably.

Concerts given by M. Kubelik and by Madame Albani and her party complete the record of the month's music.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There is little to record this month in reference to music in Norwich and the district round. After the Gargantuan musical feast provided by the Festival, music-lovers in the district require a little rest.

The annual concert given by the Railway Guards' Universal Friendly Society, on the 6th ult. was, however, most successful, St. Andrew's Hall being crowded by an enthusiastic audience. Miss Evangeline Florence and Miss Ada Crossley were heard to great advantage, while Miss Ethel Barns (violin) delighted every one with her refined and artistic playing. Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Charles Phillips completed the quartet of singers, and the managers of the concert are to be congratulated on the success of their enterprise.

The first Saturday Popular Concert and Organ Recital of the winter season, under the auspices of the Corporation, took place on the 8th ult. in St. Andrew's Hall, and was attended by the outgoing Mayor and Sheriff and a large audience. Dr. Bunnett, the Corporation organist, opened the recital with a specially composed Overture for organ, which met with a cordial reception, and Miss Teresa Blamy, an old favourite at these concerts, and the Rev. H. W. Koblich were the vocalists, the latter replacing at short notice Mr. S. Hemmings, who had been announced to sing.

The Norwich Philharmonic Society and the recently-formed Norwich Choral Society will give concerts in the Spring under the baton of Dr. Bates, their conductor.

The funeral of Mr. William Heaver, the late East Anglian correspondent of The Musical Times, whose death was referred to in the November issue, took place on October 20, and was marked by extreme simplicity. Many of the choir of Saint Peter Mancroft Church, Norwich, where the first part of the funeral service was held, were absent on account of the Festival rehearsal then proceeding, but their places were kindly filled by lay clerks from the Cathedral, and other colleagues of the late Mr. Heaver, who attended to pay the last tribute of respect.

Mr. Arthur H. C. Taylor, the well-known, energetic and courteous assistant-secretary of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival, has been unanimously appointed assistant-secretary of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Funds and secretary of the Local School of Music, positions held since their initiation by the late Mr. Heaver. Mr. Arthur Taylor was also, on October 24, the recipient of a gratifying and well-deserved testimonial at the hands of the Chorus, the Musical Festival Committee, and officials, consisting of a travelling-case and a purse of gold, in recognition of his valued services as assistant-secretary for the past ten years.

The Great-Yarmouth Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Haydon Hare, will give Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha' at their first concert on December 18.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTR

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Sir Alexander Mackenzie delivered his i lecture on the 'Life and Works of Liszt,' in t Hall, on the 10th ult., before a crowded audi both the discourse and its musical illustrations we appreciated. The latter were performed Margaret Elzy (pianoforte), Miss Eleanor Coward and a large choral contingent from the Sheffield Union. Under the direction of Dr. Coward, 'Pater Noster,' 'Ave Maria,' and 'Ave Maris were sung by the chorus. On the same date the Choral Society at Wentworth gave a perform Handel's 'Alexander's Feast,' under Mr. W. J. I

The Sheffield Musical Union's concert on the was of a unique character. Two festival no Dr. Coward's 'Gareth and Linet' and Mr. Cc Taylor's 'Meg Blane'—were performed und respective conductors. At the hands of this go-ahead Society the two works received adequate treatment, the chorus-singing being marked by those qualities—accuracy, intelligence, artistic finish, and healthy enthusiasm—which are the features of Dr. Coward's choir-training. A very efficient orchestra, composed entirely of local instrumentalists, played the scores of both works so admirably as to intensify the widely-felt regret that so capable an instrumental body cannot be permanently existent. The soloists were Miss Clara North, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Mr. W. S. Jessop at the organ and Mr. J. H. Parkes as leader of the band did excellent service.

The Rotherham Choral Society performed 'Elijah' on the 20th ult., in the Drill Hall, Rotherham, under the direction of Mr. T. Brameld. The principals were Madame Goodall, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Fowler Burton. Mr. Henry Parkin led the orchestra. The same work was performed on the 23rd, at Oxford Street Free Church, where Mr. Joseph Kaye's labours are bearing good fruit.

Recent visits of MM. Kubelik and Kocian have given pleasure to interested audiences.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A NEW CANTATA.

Quite the most interesting event of the past month that I have to record is the production by the Harrogate Choral Society, on the 14th ult., of a new cantata by Dr. E. W. Naylor, entitled 'Arthur, the King.' The composer is a Yorkshireman, and a few years ago one would have identified him as 'son of Dr. Naylor,' the late organist of York Cathedral, but this cantata is in itself sufficient evidence that he can dispense with any such introduction. It is, indeed, a work deserving much more thorough analysis and criticism than can be given to it here. The libretto has been arranged by the composer from Tennyson's 'Passing of Arthur,' supplemented very ingeniously by passages from others of Tennyson's poems. These additions are made chiefly with the object of concocting a part for the Lady of the Lake, who in Tennyson's poem is a mute personage. The cantata has a fully-developed overture, a prologue, and an epilogue, the rest being divided into separate scenes, entitled respectively 'Gawain,' 'The Battle,' 'The Lady of the Lake,' 'Modred,' 'Excalibur,' 'Avilion,' 'The Barge,' and 'The King.' The music shows not only exceptional technical power and an acute literary faculty, but considerable individuality. One is not perpetually haunted by the consideration of 'where one has heard that before.' Probably more practical experience would suggest modifications, such as the avoidance of unvocal progressions for the chorus and of orchestration that obscures the soloist when the voice part should be prominent. But the only essential fault that seems to me to call for criticism is that the work is not 'all in a piece.' There is a perceptible difference between the choral and solo portions of the work, and, if modern progress in music points to anything it is in the direction of unity in a work of art. Modern symphonies, from Beethoven to Brahms; dramatic music from Gluck to Wagner; and those latest developments, the symphonic poems of Liszt and Strauss, all aim at diversity in unity, so that we may safely regard this not as a mere fashion but as a phase in development. In Dr. Naylor's work the romantic, mystical character of the poem is much more happily realised in the solos than in the choruses, the music flows much more easily and seems to be more sincerely felt. The 'Excalibur' portion, in which the casting of the magic sword into the lake is described, touches perhaps the high-water mark of the work, the music being not only intrinsically beautiful, but fitting the situation, words, and mood of the poem 'like a glove.' The performance, conducted by Mr. C. L. Naylor, was exceedingly creditable, considering the novelty and difficulty of the work. Mr. Andrew Black sang the beautiful and familiar lines allotted to King Arthur most sympathetically, and Miss Winifred Wynne and Mr. Joseph Reed were able representatives of the other chief parts.

LEEDS CONCERTS.

Leeds has been rather active in musical matters this month. The performance of 'Israel in Egypt' by the Philharmonic Society, on October 22, to which I alluded last month, seems to have been exceedingly brilliant. According to all accounts the choir was at its best, and, stimulated perhaps by thoughts of the Sheffield performance a few weeks before, sang with exceptional smartness and force. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mrs. James Wilson, Messrs. H. Brearley, Herbert Parker and E. P. Stead, and Sir Charles Stanford conducted.

On the 7th ult., Dr. Elgar gave special interest to a concert of the Leeds Choral Union by conducting his Coronation Ode and 'Caractacus.' Both were effectively sung, the spirit and swing of the former being well caught by the chorus. The principals were Madame Medora Henson, Miss Nellie Chisholm, Mr. H. Brearley, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. C. Knowles. The Leeds Bohemian Concerts, which allow for the hearing of chamber music under conditions of unwonted ease—including therein the consumption of tobacco—were resumed on the 12th ult., when Mozart's G minor Quintet was finely played, and Brahms's B flat Sextet was creditably played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Haigh, Nichols, Giessing and Bolton, a competent and promising 'team.' The last event I have to record is an exceptionally interesting subscription concert on the 19th ult., when the programme included two works by Richard Strauss, the 'Don Juan' fantasia and 'Wandrer's Sturmlied,' in addition to more familiar works, such as the 'Pathetic' Symphony. The singing of the Philharmonic Chorus in the 'Sturmlied' was exceedingly fine. Dr. Richter conducted.

BRADFORD.

By a curious coincidence I have to begin my account of Bradford doings, as I had those of Leeds, with Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' which was given by the Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Cowen, on October 24. The soloists in a generally creditable performance were Miss Hyde, Madame Goodall, Miss Bradley, Messrs. Chandos, Herbert Brown, and Uttley.——On October 29 Mr. S. Midgley resumed his Chamber concerts for their twentieth season. With the aid of the Bradford String Quartet, he gave Raff's Pianoforte Quintet in A minor (Op. 107), in addition to quartets by Haydn and Beethoven, and Miss Lilian Hovey was the vocalist. At the second concert, on the 12th ult., Mr. John Dunn joined the concert-giver in playing Richard Strauss's Sonata in E flat (Op. 18), and Miss Ada Beecroft sang. The first of the Subscription Concerts took place on October 31, when Dr. Richter gave a fine performance of Richard Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' realising well the breadth and warmth of this genuinely inspired tone-poem. Schubert's great Symphony in C was another important feature of the programme, as were three Wagner scenes, which were sung by Mr. Andrew Black.

On the 10th ult., Kubelik and Backhaus visited Bradford, and played charmingly; and the next evening the Bradford Old Choral Society, under its new conductor, Mr. J. W. Fitton, gave a bright performance of 'The Hymn of Praise,' in which Miss Ethel Wood, Miss C. Bradbury, and Mr. Albert Collings were the principals. Stanford's 'Revenge,' and Sterndale Bennett's 'Naïades' overture, which latter was neatly played, were also included in the programme.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

A welcome and interesting revival of Handel's 'Jephtha' was given on the 18th ult., by the Keighley Musical Union. It was welcome because the West Riding devotion to Handel is usually concentrated on two or three famous works, to the exclusion of all the rest. 'Jephtha,' with Sullivan's artistic additional accompaniments, certainly deserved revival, and proved most enjoyable, and even though the weight and dignity of the music was not quite completely realised, it was sung with great spirit. The principal parts were taken by Miss Estella Linden, Miss J. Bateman, Mrs. Day, and Messrs. Maxwell and Herbert Brown. Mr. Summerscales conducted.

The York Symphony Orchestra, chiefly amateur in its composition, has made great strides of late under the energetic rule of Mr. Noble, the Cathedral organist. This was shown in the concert it gave on the 20th ult., when a most creditable performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker' suite was given, together with some classic overtures and other things. The Hon. Norah Dawnay was the vocalist, and sang with excellent expression and good taste.

The Halifax Choral Society gave, on the 7th ult., a fine performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' the admirable refinement of the orchestral work under Dr. Richter being a noteworthy feature. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Messrs. W. Green, Ivor Foster and Sheldrake were the principal vocalists.——The Halifax Orchestral Society, which has done a good work in fostering among its members a love for good music, has attained its majority, and began its twenty-first season on the 13th ult., when Beethoven's Eighth Symphony was introduced (!) to Halifax, and was played with much spirit under Mr. H. van Dyk's direction, and the first movement of Beethoven's C minor pianoforte Concerto was artistically played by Mrs. van Dyk.——On the 20th ult. Mr. H. F. Webster gave a concert which was of special interest in that it introduced, for the first time in Yorkshire, Richard Strauss's music to Tennyson's 'Enoch Arden.' The reciter was Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, the pianist Mr. Henry Bird.

At the Huddersfield Subscription Concert on the 4th ult., Liza Lehmann's 'Daisy Chain' song-cycle was sung by Madame Sobrino, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. O'Mara, and Mr. Denham Price, and at one of the same series on the 18th ult., Madame Blauvelt, Miss Muriel Foster, and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan were the vocalists, Miss Maud Powell being the violinist.

One of the Wakefield chamber concerts, which are always interesting and enjoyable, took place on the 13th ult., when pianoforte music played with brilliance and good taste by Miss Evelyn Suart, and songs sung with great intelligence and vocal power by Mr. Meux, furnished the programme.

Miscellaneous.

Miss Ilona de Györy read an interesting paper at the opening meeting of the twenty-ninth session of the Musical Association on the 11th ult. The subject of her discourse was 'Hungarian Music of a thousand years,' and the following is a synopsis of the lecture: National Music as character-sketch of the Nations—Western and Eastern Music—Origin of the Hungarian people—Relationship with other Eastern Music—Their style in art and poetry—Language with influence on their Music—Historical Epochs—War Songs of the Pagans—Christianity introduced—Hymns—Minstrels, Ballads, Romances—Time of the Renaissance—Italian influence under the Kings Louis the Great and Mathias Corvinus—Two distinct directions: popular and artistic Music—The Gipsies appear—Musical character of the divided country during the inner wars—Important musical epoch under Francis Rákóczy—Modern Times.

The prospectus of the public competitions known as the Stratford Musical Festival, an institution now in its twenty-first year, is, as heretofore, a comprehensive document. As a new feature in the scheme we notice with satisfaction the introduction of a competition, headed 'Commercial Choirs,' of mixed voices, 25 to 50 in number, 'each choir consisting of employees of one firm or the families of such employees.' This not only opens up far-reaching possibilities, judged from educational and recreative points of view, but is a practical application of the old saying that a counter-tenor must be a young man employed in a shop. May there be many entries of this and the other classes in the competitive ledger. Mr. John Graham (70, Dacre Road, Upton Manor, E.), the unwearying secretary of the Festival, will gladly receive names of competitors.

A selection of Purcell's music to the 'The Fairy Queen' was associated with Mr. Charles Fry's costume recital of Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' at the Royalty Theatre, on the 15th ult., and made the occasion of musical interest. The quaint flavour of the master's old-world strains was quite in harmony with the simple form of Mr. Fry's stage arrangements, and the music was capitally played by the London Organ School String Orchestra, conducted on this occasion by Mr. Edward G. Croager. 'You spotted snakes' was well sung by Misses Kate Bensted, Shilton, and Blanche Newcombe.

The following deaths have to be recorded with regret:—Mr. William Gregory (on October 23), well known in musical circles in Nottingham and as manager to Messrs. Arthur Wilson, Peck and Co., Ltd.; Mr. Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S.E. (on the 2nd ult.), the eminent throat specialist; Mr. Edward Cuzner, for fifty years a member of the choir of Chester Cathedral; Mr. Charles Ackerman, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, who died at sea on October 31, when returning home from a professional tour in Canada; and Mr. Nicholas Hanhart, so long connected with the Sacred Harmonic Society.

The King and Queen have been graciously pleased to accept copies of the glee entitled 'Requital,' by Dr. Alfred King, which gained the prize in the competition organised by Mr. W. A. Everington. The glee was sung for the first time by the Abbey Glee Club on the 11th ult., by Messrs. George May, Albert James, Bertram Mills, and Robert Hilton, when it evoked great enthusiasm.

Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and a miscellaneous selection, including two movements of Beethoven's First Symphony, were given at the Borough Polytechnic Institute on the 15th ult. by the Choral and Orchestral Societies under the direction of Mr. Henry J. B. Dart.

Professor Prout discoursed on 'The Autograph of the 'Messiah' and the various editions of the work' before the London Section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians on the 8th ult., his remarks greatly interesting a large audience.

Correspondence.

ODES BY PURCELL.

Sir,—I should be very much obliged if you would allow me to ask whether any of your readers can tell me of a complete copy of Purcell's Ode, 'We reap all the pleasures,' There is a copy in the composer's autograph—in the Buckingham Palace Library, but unfortunately it is unfinished.

Also, I should be glad to hear of any copy of the Ode for Queen Mary's Birthday, 1694, other than that in the Library of the Royal College of Music. It begins, 'Come ye sons of Art.'—Yours truly, Crowshott, Highclere, Newbury. G. E. P. Arkwright.

MR. MESSING.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the article on 'Old Musical Times' in your current issue, you mention the name of a Mr. Messing, 'the corno-cromatico' player. I have a portrait of a person of the same name. Under it is printed: 'Fredk. James Messing, well known by the name of the Mad Fidler; he was a member of the Royal Society of Musicians, and was by them interred in St. Pancras Churchyard; died Augt. 4th, 1798, aged 44.' He is represented with the violin and bow in the left inside pocket of his coat. Will he be a relative?—Yours faithfully, Edinburgh, Nov. 11, 1902. Robt. A. Marr.

HANDEL'S 'MESSIAH' AND APPLAUSE.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me space in your paper to ask why, during the performance of Handel's oratorio 'Messiah,' the audience are allowed to mar the work by adding their applause? Are we to use those solemn words merely as a peg on which to hang Handel's most glorious and illustrative music? For instance, last Wednesday evening, when it was performed for the first time from Professor Prout's new edition—and it was most interesting to note the differences of reading—we all (audience and orchestra) rose to our feet for the 'Hallelujah' chorus. Why did we do so? Was it from mere habit; and if so, how did that habit originate? As an act of faith and devotion, I suppose. Be it so, but after hearing the words 'And He shall reign for ever and ever, King of kings, and Lord of lords! Hallelujah!' the bulk of the audience broke out into tremendous applause. Was this not incongruous? It was nothing less than profanity. It could not occur if the oratorio were performed in a cathedral or church. Surely we are not so dense as to need the ecclesiastical atmosphere, arches, vaulting, &c., to remind us of the story which the words teach us. No: the building ought not to be the test of our intellect.

I should like to suggest that on future occasions when the 'Messiah' is performed in a secular building, the conductor should ask the audience to refrain from applause—a request which would immediately imply that it was owing to the sacredness of the oratorio.

I suggest this from an artistic as well as devotional point of view. Will some of your readers give their opinion on the subject?—Yours faithfully,

Henry S. Sidebotham.

8, Queen Square, Bloomsbury, W.C.
November 15, 1902.

[We thoroughly endorse the views so well expressed by our correspondent, and join in his protest. At the recent Sheffield Musical Festival a request in the programme-books asking for abstention from applause had results which added to the impressiveness of the sacred works there performed, and prevented unseemly interruptions.—Ed. M.T.]

Foreign Notes.

Berlin.—An interesting feature of the second concert of the season of the Royal Orchestra, conducted by Herr Weingartner, was the performance of the little-known symphony of Berlioz's, 'Mourning and Triumph' (Op. 15), which was given an excellent interpretation.——Considerable success attended the concert given on the 8th ult. by Signor Ferruccio Busoni, with the co-operation of the Philharmonic orchestra, when a number of new works obtained a first hearing, including Dr. Elgar's arrangement for concert performance of the prelude and finale of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' the overture to 'Les Barbares,' by Saint-Saëns, and symphonic fragments from a drama, 'Le Pêcheur d'Island,' by Guy Roparty.

Breslau.—The opening concert of the season of the Orchester Verein included the first performance of Tchaikovsky's symphonic ballad, 'The Woywode,' a posthumous work by the Russian master and very favourably received.

Coblenz.—An excellent performance was given at the first concert of the season by the Musik Institut, of Mozart's resuscitated Mass in C minor. The programme also included a masterly interpretation by Herr Carl Straube, of Wesel, of Max Reger's Fantasia and Fugue on the name of Bach, for organ.

Cologne.—Under the conductorship of Herr Fritz Steinbach, the newly-appointed director of the Conservatorium, the opening Gürzenich concert of the season was dedicated to the memory of the late Dr. Franz Wüllner. The performances consisted of Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony and Brahms's 'Requiem.'

Crefeld.—The fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the excellent Concert-Gesellschaft was celebrated by a musical festival, on October 26 and 27, under the direction of Herr Müller-Reuter. Among the principal works produced were Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Schumann's 'Spanisches Liederspiel,' Richard Strauss's symphonic poem, 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and Beethoven's Choral Symphony.

Frankfort-on-Main. — The well-known Rühl'sche Gesangverein has just celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation with a very fine performance of Beethoven's 'Missa Solemnis.' The Society has been for the last eighteen years under the able direction of Professor Bernhard Scholz.——A new Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte, by Ernst von Dohnányi, was produced for the first time at a recent Museum concert with great success. The executants were Professor Hugo Becker and the gifted young composer.——The first performance took place on the 11th ult., at the Stadt Theater, of Engelbert Humperdinck's new fairy opera 'Dornröschen' (The Sleeping Beauty) with considerable success.

Leipzig.—The oratorio 'Judith,' by the late August Klughardt, was performed for the first time on the 2nd ult. by the Singakademie, under Herr Wohlgemuths' conductorship, producing a very marked impression.

Milan.—The Home for Aged Musicians, founded by Verdi, was formally opened on the recent anniversary of the composer's birth. Up to the present, nine candidates for admission—mostly operatic singers of both sexes, have been received at the magnificent institution, where provision has been made for sixty inmates. In connection with the 'Home,' there is an interesting museum, containing objects relative to the life and works of its generous founder.

Munich.—An interesting performance took place recently, in the Frauenkirche, by the Lehrer Gesangverein, under Professor Gluth's direction, of a Requiem, by the Italian composer Asola, a contemporary of Palestrina. The manuscript work was recently brought to light by Dr. Schulz, the librarian of the Royal Library.

Prague.—The new opera 'Enoch Arden,' by Robert Erben, achieved a brilliant success on its recent first performance at the German theatre under the composer's direction.

Brief Summary of Country and Colonial News.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

Blackpool.—Mr. H. Whittaker gave his only concert of the season at the Tower on the 7th ult., when the chief feature of interest was the appearance of the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, whose contributions included Caldicott's glee 'Winter days' and the following part-songs, 'Happy eyes' (Elgar), 'O lovely May,' 'Autumn,' 'Farewell,' and 'The Maiden' (Brahms), 'The Storm' (Rogers), and two part-songs for ladies' voices 'Heaven' (Smart) and 'Spinning Chorus' (Randegger), all of which were excellently rendered.

Burton-on-Trent.—Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed for the first time here, on October 21, under the direction of Mr. T. E. Lowe. There was a complete orchestra and choir of 170 performers, and the solo vocalists were Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The performance was, from all points, entirely successful.

St. Albans.—An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was given by the Oratorio Society on the 13th ult. at the County Hall. Miss Maggie Purvis and Mr. Gwilym Richards were the solo vocalists. The second part consisted of a miscellaneous selection, which included 'Hail, bright abode' (Tannhäuser), the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's violin Concerto, splendidly played by Mr. Bernhard Carrodus, a couple of the same composer's 'Songs without Words,' scored for orchestra; Mr. German's popular 'Henry VIII.' dances, and part-songs for the choir. There was an efficient band of forty players, and Mr. J. Dryhurst Roberts ably conducted.

Sidcup.—Herr E. Grimm gave the first of a series of chamber concerts, on October 28, and is to be congratulated on the undoubted success attending this undertaking, which adds a new and interesting feature to the musical life of Sidcup. The programme included Beethoven's Trio in C minor and Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, both of which were admirably rendered by Miss Dobson (pianoforte), Mr. Ernest Bloxham (violin), and Herr Grimm (violoncello). The vocalist was Miss Beryl Clive.

Wellington (N.Z.).—The Wellington Orchestral Society gave its second concert of the present season in the Choral Hall on September 16, under the conductorship of Mr. Robert Parker. The principal work performed was Schumann's fine Pianoforte Concerto in A minor, the solo part in which was admirably played by Miss Dora Judson. The orchestra of forty-five performers was heard to great advantage in Nicolai's overture to 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' Edward German's 'Henry VIII' dances, and in Sullivan's 'Overtura di Ballo,' while an interesting novelty was presented in the Tarantella for flute and clarinet by Saint-Saëns, with orchestral accompaniment. The solo parts in this effective work were capably played by Messrs. C. J. Hill and H. Moschini. Madame Eveleen Carlton was the vocalist.

Wigan. — The Wigan and District Philharmonic Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' at their first concert this season in the Drill Hall on October 29, under the direction of Dr. E. C. Bairstow. The choir maintained an excellent quality of tone throughout, and the orchestra was efficient. The conductor is to be congratulated on the results obtained.

Windsor.—The annual concert of the Choir of St. George's Chapel took place on October 29, and was attended, as usual, with great success. Sir Walter Parratt and Dr. C. H. Lloyd played a pianoforte duet; Mr. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, contributed several items, and, with Mr. Hubert Hunt, played his charming Suite in A for pianoforte and violin; and Mr. A. M. Goodhart composed for the occasion a capital part-song, 'This is the house that Jack built.' Mr. Martin Akerman's trios were admirably sung by the choristers, and Dr. Cooke's Canon (9 in 1), 'Let's have a peal,' was rapturously encored.

Answers to Correspondents.

M. F.—There can be no doubt that Mendelssohn in his Rondino for pianoforte in E (Op. 16), known as 'The Rivulet,' fully intended that particular bar of five beats. The autograph, of which a transcript is before us distinctly gives it; and, moreover, the first edition of the little piece, the proofs of which passed through Mendelssohn's hands, agrees with the manuscript. The bar has been altered by different editors in various ways, but without authority or improvement. As a matter of fact, the lengthening of the bar hardly affects the rhythm of the passage, and in the tranquil flow of its semiquavers one has the feeling that any accentuation would destroy the poetic import of the composition. The piece was composed at Coed-dû, near Holywell, North Wales, when Mendelssohn, as a young man of twenty summers, stayed there. It was suggested by a pretty stream which still flows on amid surroundings that are very picturesque.

Ignota.—The following choruses for equal voices with pianoforte and violin accompaniment may be suitable:—'Choral Dances,' by Florence Marshall (accompaniment for pianoforte and strings); 'Songs of the Wood,' six two-part songs, by H. A. J. Campbell (accompaniment for pianoforte and two violins); and 'Ring out, wild Bells,' trio, by Henry Lahee (accompaniment for pianoforte, two violins, organ, and bells). Messrs. Novello will, on application, send you lists of violin trios and pieces for pianoforte arranged for eight or sixteen hands.

Seel.—Much information concerning the late Sir Arthur Sullivan appeared in these columns last year. See the article on him in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' and that in 'Grove's Dictionary of Music.' The souvenir of Arthur Sullivan by W. J. Wells, published by Messrs. Newnes, may also be consulted. The field of songs, anthems and part-songs is so extensive that it provides an embarras de richesse in the way of musical illustration to a lecture on the above composer.

E. W.—There is no accounting for the ridiculous nonsense—or as a Frenchman called it, 'Thomas Rott'—written by novelists about music. The heroine who played 'an overture without accompaniment of any kind' on the violin, is just the sort of young lady whose lover would perform the '(H)eroica' symphony on the banjo. They both probably came to an untimely end (13 in a bar) in Vol. III.

A. S.—The following pianoforte pieces of moderate difficulty may meet your requirements: 'Chanson de Matin' (Elgar), 'Valse Gracieuse' (German), 'Bohemienne' and 'Conte de Fée' (Godard), 'From Golden Days' and 'The Rivulet' (Hofmann), 'Chant d'Avril' and 'Arietta' (Lack), 'Air de Ballet' (Pitt), 'Polka Bohème' (Rubinstein), 'Valse Mignonne' (Schütt), 'Marche Militaire' and 'Solennelle' (Tchaikovsky).

A Constant Reader.—The figuring information you require can be obtained from any book on harmony. But the figuring is not everything. Many a bass is disfigured thereby. You should endeavour to get a grasp of the chords themselves and their progressions by ear analysis, and to look upon the figurings as convenient labellings and nothing more.

S.—Grieg's pianoforte and violin Sonata in C minor was performed at the Popular Concerts of March 30, 1889, and March 15, 1890, and perhaps more recently. If you apply to Messrs. Chappell, 50, New Bond Street, they might be able to supply you with the programme-book of one of the above dates; it would contain an analysis of the work.

Pakeha (New Zealand).—It is difficult to express an opinion as to whether such passages as you quote are coincidences or not. The fact that one of the pieces is a Rondo Burlesca may account for the composer making use of the themes in the more serious composition. Many thanks for your kind wishes for 'the good old M.T.'

D. S. W.—Holiday courses for teachers wishing to study the management of class-singing are sometimes held in London, but we are unable to state whether any will be arranged for during the Christmas vacation. Have you read the articles on Class-Singing in the issues of The Musical Times of January and February, 1900?

E. L.—The composition remains your copyright unless you assign your rights to anyone else. Upon its publication it becomes subject to the laws of copyright, which you will find are clearly set forth in the article 'Copyright,' in Stainer and Barrett's 'Dictionary of Musical Terms.'

W. H. R.—Handel's 'Jephtha'—his last oratorio—was begun January 21, and finished August 30, 1751. It was produced at Covent Garden, February 26, 1752. The libretto is by Dr. Thomas Morell, who also wrote that for 'Judas Maccabæus.'

Torquil.—The following are the pianoforte compositions by Sir Arthur Sullivan: 'Thoughts,' two pieces subsequently published as 'Reverie in A' and 'Melody in D'; 'Day dreams' (six pieces); and 'Twilight.' They may be obtained through any music-seller.

J. H. P.—See the answer to A. S, with the following additional pieces: 'Valse de concert,' Op. 69 (Moszkowski); 'Intermezzo en octaves' (Leschetitzky); 'L'éspiègle' (Raff); 'Prelude' (Rachmaninoff); 'Rustle of Spring' (Sinding); 'Danse des Elfes' (Sapellnikoff).

G. E. A.—We cannot 'place' the masters of music. Each one has his own particular niche in the temple of fame, and to discuss the 'relative position' of this one or that is an unprofitable expenditure of time.

G. G. B.—Ambroise Thomas died February 12, 1896, Edouard Lalo departed this life April 23, 1892, and Charles Gounod joined the majority October 19, 1893. All three composers drew their last breaths at Paris.

Analysis.—The portion of the Mozart sonata which you are inclined to consider as 'the second section of the second subject' is episodical in character,—notice the modulations—and should therefore be so regarded.

A Beginner.—The intervals of the augmented fourth and diminished fifth are diatonic if the two notes forming the interval are in the key. You are probably confusing the term diatonic with consonant or dissonant.

Flute Beginner.—The holes of very cheap flutes are generally bushed, and the instrument is much better without them. A concert flute at the flat pitch is what you require. It is in C.

Pierre.—As to which is the best system of pianoforte technique, there is only one reply; the system which is most musical in its results.

Listener.—The chant you heard sung to the Benedictus is by James Turle and in the key of G, not F; it is No. 179 in the Westminster Abbey Chant Book, latest edition.

Student.—Yes, Messrs. Novello publish the whole of Mendelssohn's pianoforte works, and those by Bach and Handel are procurable in the Peters edition.

N. P.—Cane for oboes is bought wholesale. Surely you could get some of a suitable quality in England. Have you tried Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.?

Carol.—See an article on Christmas Carols by the late Sir John Stainer in The Musical Times for December, 1901.

Harold. — Jules de Swert's Violoncello Primer is published by Messrs. Novello, price two shillings.

G.—(1) We cannot give the names of musical critics. (2) That the notes are of even quality.

J. H. B.—Ellis's 'Speech in Song' is a singer's pronouncing primer.

Cortnomo.—Mozart's posthumous pianoforte works may be obtained of Messrs. Novello.

Miss L.—No.

LIVERPOOL PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.—Conductor, Dr. COWEN.

"The great treat of the miscellaneous portion of the programme was the exquisitely dainty singing by Miss Lillie Wormald of the 'Du Mysoli' couplets from David's 'La Perle du Bresil,' the flute obbligato in which was deftly played by Mr. F. Brossa."—Liverpool Courier, Nov. 12, 1902.

HALLÉ CONCERT.—Conductor, Dr. RICHTER.

BACH'S MASS IN B MINOR.—"Miss Lillie Wormald, the soprano soloist, sang the air 'Laudamus te' with remarkable sweetness of timbre and thorough mastery of the extremely difficult part, which is full of unexpected turns of melody, irregular groups of notes, and syncopations. She also took part in three duets, 'Christe eleison,' for two sopranos, 'Domine Deus,' for soprano and tenor, and 'Et in unum Dominum,' for soprano and alto, in each case giving a thoroughly adequate rendering of her part."—Manchester Guardian, Nov. 29, 1901.

"Miss Lillie Wormald, the soprano soloist, has a voice of excellent quality, and sang with great success."—Evening Chronicle, Nov. 29, 1901.

RECITAL (MANCHESTER).

"The bright quality of Miss Lillie Wormald's voice and her excellent vocal training enabled her to give most enjoyable renderings of songs by Mozart, Lassen, and others. The air from 'Il Seraglio' with which she began severely taxes the resources of even the most gifted prima donne, with its exceptionally wide compass and passage-work that is persistently florid and intricate. Here the rendering was a successful tour de force."—Manchester Guardian, Nov. 18, 1902.

"Miss Lillie Wormald may confidently hope to enlarge the scope of her work. We do not recollect an instance of such rapid development in both voice and style as in the case of Miss Wormald. The voice—a pure soprano—has gained considerably in power and beauty, and her singing of Mozart's recit. and aria from 'Die Zauberflote' at once established her claim to be recognised as a clever and artistic singer."—Manchester Evening News, Oct. 10, 1902.

"Miss Lillie Wormald sang songs by Mozart and various modern composers with that kind of intelligence which stamps her as a genuine artist."—Manchester Guardian, Oct. 10, 1902.

LIVERPOOL ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY'S CONCERTS.

"Miss Lillie Wormald's most brilliant achievement, however, was her rendering of the florid bell-song from Delibes' 'Lakme,' which characteristic example of modern French music served admirably to display the range and flexibility of the singer's fine soprano voice, so perfectly trained and controlled. The pleasure of the audience found enthusiastic expression, and Miss Wormald had repeatedly to return and bow her acknowledgments."—Liverpool Courier, March 18, 1902.

SOUTH SHIELDS CHORAL SOCIETY.—Conductor, Mr. M. FAIRS.

GOUNOD'S "FAUST."—"As Margarita Miss Lillie Wormald had a task which requires very high qualities. She gave great satisfaction, and her singing throughout was charming to a degree."—Shields Daily Gazette, Dec. 12, 1901.

PHILHARMONIC HALL, LIVERPOOL.

"MESSIAH."—"Miss Lillie Wormald interpreted the soprano portion of the music with much brilliancy, intelligence, and keen appreciation of the various numbers; the incidental recitatives were enunciated with force and effectiveness."—Liverpool Mercury, Dec. 27, 1901.

PIANOFORTE AND SONG RECITAL, BURY.

"Miss Lillie Wormald has a winning stage presence, and is the owner of a remarkably sweet, strong and exquisitely-trained soprano voice, which should have the makings of a fortune in it. Miss Wormald sang Mozart's Recitative and Air 'Zeffiretti Lusinghieri' from 'Idomeneus,' Brahms's 'Sandmänchen,' Hawley's 'The sweetest flower that blows,' Becker's dainty 'Spring Song,' Taubert's 'Märznacht,' and 'Annie Laurie.' Each song was most daintily sung."—Ramsbottom Observer, Oct. 25, 1901.

STANDARD.

The work is simple in design, and the music direct in expression and dignified, as befits the subject. After a few bars of orchestral prelude, the chorus enters with an emphatic invocation, "Sing soaring voices, sing a joyous tune." The choral writing shortly afterwards becomes more animated and contrapuntal, and is carried up to an imposing climax. A very effective section begins with the words, "Crown him, the seventh of his Kingly name," set in march rhythm, and accompanied by the brass, softly and staccato. The soprano solo, the words of which refer to the Queen, is most sympathetic, and the subsequent final chorus into which it leads is worked up to a gorgeous and imposing conclusion.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR J. STAINER.

PREFACE.

The only way in which the Editor of a book of reference can show his gratitude to the public for demanding new editions on the exhaustion of the old, is by doing his best to keep its contents up to date. The reviser has done so; many articles have been entirely re-written or enlarged—e.g., Copyright and Licensing, Madrigal, Mass, Opera, Pianoforte, Pitch, and many of those little slips which show such persistent survival in works of this kind have been removed. The Editor is grateful to many, whose names are among the authors and helpers, for their share in this last revision.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC
CONTAINING
600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS
BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,
Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A.

November, 1898. E. A. D.

A further reprint of the Handbook affords the opportunity of adding the papers set forth for the recent Mus. Doc. Examination at Victoria University, for the use of which the Author is indebted to the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles.

THE

MESSIAH

A SACRED ORATORIO

COMPOSED IN THE YEAR 1741 BY

G. F. HANDEL.

EDITED, AND THE PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT LARGELY RE-WRITTEN, BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

Paper cover, 2s.; paper boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 4s.
Vocal Parts, 1s. each. String Parts, 21s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 22s. 6d. Full Score (£1 11s. 6d.) in the Press, to be published on the 3rd inst. Organ and Pianoforte Parts in the Press.

In issuing this new Edition of Handel's "Messiah" the publishers may direct attention to two main features of special interest.

First, the assertion of Professor Prout that "it is extremely doubtful whether any other great musical work exists, the text of which is even approximately so corrupt as that of the 'Messiah.'" The Editor, in making the necessary corrections of many deep-rooted errors in the work, has carefully collated the autograph and other manuscript copies, as well as the numerous printed editions of the score, with the result that this edition of Handel's magnum opus may be regarded as practically the only correct version is existence.

Secondly, Professor Prout has in certain instances retained Mozart's additional accompaniments: but he has, to a great extent, re-scored the work in order that the instrumentation shall be practical—in fact, the practical utility of this new edition has been the main object throughout its preparation. The Professor has also written an organ part, and thoroughly revised and largely re-written the pianoforte accompaniment to the vocal score.

The more important discrepancies and alterations, including the discovery of no less than eighty-seven actual wrong notes, are for the most part set forth in detail in the Preface to the Full Score. It may suffice, therefore, to quote an extract from the final paragraph of what may be regarded as a manifesto by Professor Prout on the greatest of Handel's oratorios:—

"I have entered very fully into details in this account of the text, first, because nothing is unimportant that concerns so great a masterpiece as the 'Messiah'; and secondly, because it was only by showing the defects and inaccuracies of existing editions that the appearance of a new one could be justified. I dare not venture to hope that everything found in this volume will meet with unanimous approval; but I can truly say that I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to reproduce Handel's intentions, as I understand them, and so far as they can be realized under modern conditions."

A NEW EDITION

PREPARED BY

H. B. BRIGGS AND W. H. FRERE

UNDER THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE OF

JOHN STAINER

(Late President of the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society).

PREFACE.

THE first edition of The Psalter Noted was published in 1849 under the supervision of the late Rev. Thomas Helmore, and secured for the Gregorian Tones a general recognition of their appropriateness for Divine worship. Subsequently Mr. Helmore's scheme was enlarged by the issue of The Canticles Noted, of A Brief Directory, and of three Appendixes to the Psalter; and the whole collection was issued in one volume under the title of A Manual of Plainsong. The Manual had also two companion books, one of Words only, containing The Canticles and Psalter Accented, the other a collection of Accompanying Harmonies. Thus complete provision was made for the musical performance of the regular services of the Prayer Book. Practical objections, however, to the monotony of the recitation of several Psalms to one Tone without the relief of Antiphons, added to certain difficulties in the pointing, led to the issue of other Psalters which have competed with The Psalter Noted, but without obtaining, any of them, a marked supremacy; and nothing has been issued which covers the whole field so completely as Mr. Helmore's Manual.

Study of the art of Plainsong during the last half century has, however, undergone something like a revolution; on every branch of the question new light has been thrown, and not least upon the principles of pointing. In consequence of repeated demands for a new edition of the Manual, the work of revision was entrusted to the late Sir John Stainer. He readily undertook the task, and called into collaboration Mr. H. B. Briggs and the Rev. W. H. Frere, with the result that before his death he had passed for the press the greater part of the revised proofs prepared by them for the new edition. He had also devoted much time to the consideration, with Mr. Shebbeare, of the Organ Accompaniments, so that the complete work may be considered as his last contribution to the music of the English Church.

His was not the only loss that this book had to undergo in the course of revision, for on the eve of its completion, Mr. Briggs was suddenly called to his rest. So the foregoing words which he had written about Sir John Stainer have now become his own epitaph. Without competing with Sir John Stainer in the wider domain of Church Music he had, in the narrower department of Plainsong, an influence and a competence which were unrivalled; and whatever merits this book may have are due almost entirely to him.

The Manual thus appears in a New Edition, revised in accordance with modern standards of taste and science; it does not cover quite so large a field as formerly, for it contains no music for the Holy Communion; but it has the same counterparts as before in the shape of The Canticles and Psalter Accented, and The Accompanying Harmonies prepared by Mr. Shebbeare, which include accompaniments for the Responses, Te Deum and Litany, as well as for the Tones.

THE VILLAGE TUNE BOOK

CONTAINING

ONE HUNDRED POPULAR HYMN TUNES.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The one hundred hymn-tunes forming this collection have been selected from various sources, old and new. As the earliest can be traced to the year 1551, and the most recent was composed in 1901, they cover a period of three-and-a-half centuries.

In selecting these tunes, care has been taken to provide for all the metres in general use, and the index of first lines may be found useful as a guide to the selection of suitable tunes for particular hymns.

Clergymen and Organists of most Village Churches will find all they need in this collection, and thus be saved the trouble of searching through overladen volumes; therefore, its practical utility, no less than its varied contents, will, it is hoped, render this book of one hundred hymn-tunes acceptable for use in Divine Service and also in the home circle.

MANUAL OF THE ORCHESTRAL LITERATURE OF ALL COUNTRIES

COMPILED AND EDITED BY

A. ROSENKRANZ.

IN CLOTH, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

The Manual contains an almost complete list of the published orchestral compositions by composers of all countries, from Lully and Rameau (1651) up to the present time—Edward Elgar, Camille Saint-Saëns, and Richard Strauss (1902)—a period covering 250 years.

The 5012 separate works for Orchestra scheduled in the Manual are written by 1337 different composers, and are classified as follows:—

Overtures	1272	Miscellaneous Pieces ...	434
Symphonies	588	Marches	467
Various Concert Pieces...	1542	Music for String Orchestra	709

A special table, showing the degree in which the different nationalities of the various composers are represented, is given in the preface.

An alphabetical list of the names of the composers is placed at the end of the Manual, and whenever it was obtainable, the year in which each composer was born is stated.

In order to keep "The Manual of Orchestral Literature" up to date, and make it absolutely reliable as a Handbook of reference, supplementary lists will be issued at regular intervals.

MEG BLANE

A RHAPSODY OF THE SEA

FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

ROBERT BUCHANAN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Price Two Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.

Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

It is satisfactory to be able to say that his setting of Robert Buchanan's "Meg Blane" is one of the best things he has done . . . The declamatory opening is very well imagined, and at the repetition great variety is brought about by allowing a choir of eight parts to answer the soloist's words. A phrase which obviously stands for the idea of intercession is developed and transformed in various ways with very decided skill, and the choral writing, as well as the orchestral, is vigorous and original. The composer, who conducted, was twice recalled and enthusiastically applauded.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Obviously such a subject calls for visibly pictorial treatment, with much energy and equal tenderness. I am glad to say that the composer has fully met the requirements, and that his work gained a distinct success . . . and now expectant eyes will turn once more to the Anglo-African musician, who has again shown his power in a really masterful manner . . . the vivid music makes a consistent picture, wild and gloomy—almost terrible—in its climaxes, yet at moments tender and beautiful as mercy itself. That "Meg Blane" will become a favourite work, and do much for the composer's reputation, I cannot doubt.

STANDARD.

In the late Robert Buchanan's poem the Anglo-African composer has found congenial material, and the result is a composition of great excellence. . . The music is laid out for mezzo-soprano, chorus, and orchestra, the soloist being chiefly employed in the opening and closing portions of the work. Mr. Taylor is successful in painting the relentless fury and power of the sea, and the approach of the huge wave which sweeps the ill-fated vessel on to the rocks and swamps the lifeboat is treated with considerable dramatic power.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Taylor's music is broad in character and direct in its appeal. As usual, colour, both harmonic and orchestral, plays an important part in it. In both kinds the composer is strong. The prologue commences with a few bars of stormy music, and then is heard the central melodic thought of the whole work. From the places where it is introduced it is evidently intended as an "Intercession" theme. The work was admirably rendered under the composer's direction, and received with enthusiasm.

DAILY NEWS.

The subject seems especially to appeal to Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, the more especially as, altogether apart from the important work given to the chorus, it likewise has afforded him an opportunity for the skilful use of the orchestra. The orchestration is, in fact, in some respects more important than in any of his previous compositions . . . The work is comparatively short, but it is beyond question one of the most effective which the young composer has yet given us. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor was present to conduct in person, and had a hearty reception.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It is quite worthy the best efforts of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, who has very picturesquely illustrated in music a tragedy of the sea. At no time during the festival, with the exception of the opening performance of "Elijah," was the choral work characterised by such grandeur and expression. The chorus "Silent upon the shore," and the epilogue, were the gems of the performance.

HYMN TUNES

COMPOSED BY THE LATE

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

SOME HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The fifty-six tunes, with the twelve arrangements, in this volume have been gathered from various sources, and so far as can be ascertained, the collection is complete.

For eleven years (1861-1872) in the early part of his career, Arthur Sullivan held the organistships of two London churches—St. Michael's, Chester Square, Pimlico, and St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, Kensington. To this practical experience of a congregation's needs and capabilities, his success as a hymn-tune composer is in a large measure due. "One of the brightest and last-risen stars of our English musical hemisphere," wrote John Hullah of him. . . . These words, charged with the sincerity of honest conviction, if somewhat prophetic at the moment they were written, have been indelibly endorsed by the hand of Time.

HYMN TUNES AND LITANIES

(276)

COMPOSED BY THE LATE

REV. J. B. DYKES, Mus. Doc.

COLLECTED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES

INCLUDING

MANY HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

The Rev. J. B. Dykes was well known to most people as a writer of beautiful hymn-tunes, but it will come as a surprise to some to find that he had written such a large number as this volume contains.

On looking through the book one is struck by the many tunes that are known and loved by all religious-minded persons—tunes so successfully wedded to the words, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get on without them. . . . They are "on the lips of thousands," and are associated with the most solemn moments of life. But because Dr. Dykes was happy in expressing emotions in a way that was intelligible to the masses, we must not overlook the real difficulty and merit of discovering a musical way to the hearts of men—for not every great composer has been successful with hymn-tunes.

The world is richer for Dr. Dykes's music, and his memory deserves to be loved and honoured by all those who, like himself, strive to follow in the footsteps of the Divine Master.

THE MUSIC, FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY HENRY COWARD.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa (Choruses only), price 1s.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts (in the Press).

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Dr. Coward has laid out his work for the four solo characters named above, with chorus and orchestra, three "acts," and a sequence of pieces in the old melodic style, for which many a choral society will tender its heartiest thanks. It needs some courage to write now in a plain, straightforward, and tuneful manner, but Dr. Coward has essayed the task . . . Dr. Coward had a most hearty reception when he appeared to conduct his work, and a heartier "send-off" when he left the platform after a performance creditable to all concerned.

STANDARD.

The writing is scholarly, the orchestration picturesque, and certain passages are very effective, notably the conclusion of the prayer, "Lord God of Hosts," and the opening of Lionès's relation of Gareth's fight. This number was so finely sung by Miss Muriel Foster that it excited enthusiastic applause.

MORNING POST.

The stirring story lends itself well to musical treatment. Dr. Coward is strongest in the choral numbers, some of which are bold and picturesque. Of the solos the most striking were the spirited "Song of the Sword," rendered by Mr. Ben Davies with characteristic energy, and the expressive "Lionès's Story," sung with exquisite feeling by Miss Muriel Foster.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

In this work the well-known Sheffield composer, conductor, and choir-trainer has fulfilled the expectations of those who are acquainted with other cantatas from his pen. It is bright, tuneful, and ably constructed. Not the least of its recommendations are strong points for the chorus, for which department Dr. Coward always writes with skill and judgment. In this instance he has provided for choralists much highly-coloured and dramatic music that is not only worth all the pains that may be taken with it, but will be received with favour by a general audience.

EARLY BODLEIAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

SIR JOHN STAINER.

The First Volume contains 110 Facsimiles of Manuscript Music—chiefly secular—preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, ranging from 1185 to 1505 A.D., with a description of the MSS. by E. W. B. Nicholson, M.A., Bodley's Librarian.

The Second Volume contains Transcriptions into Modern Notation by J. F. R. Stainer, B.C.L., M.A., and Cecie Stainer, with an Introduction by the late Sir John Stainer.

This important work has been many years in preparation. It affords a survey of the history of Musical Notation and Expression, and illustrates the development of the art of music over a period of more than three Centuries (1185 to 1505).

The Volumes include English and French Songs of earlier date than any hitherto known to exist, besides many examples of early Part-writing that no future historian of music can afford to ignore.

The late Sir John Stainer devoted much time in the latter years of his busy life to the preparation and supervision of this work, which may be regarded as the crowning achievement of his varied musical activity.

PREFACE.

THE following Litany, taken from Dr. Jebb's admirable collection of "Choral Responses and Litanies of the Church of England" (vol. i., 1847), has been sung for many years at Lichfield, probably the only Cathedral where this setting is to be heard regularly throughout the year. It is one of a cycle of five Litanies, the remaining four being the Ferial, and those of Tallis, Loosemore, and Wanless.

Dr. Jebb states that his copy was compiled partly from the MS. part-books in New College Chapel, Oxford, transcribed towards the end of the seventeenth century, and partly from a MS. at the end of the Medius Decani volume of Barnard's "Selected Church Music," in the library of Hereford Cathedral. In the New College copy the upper part was wanting; in the Hereford transcript, the bass. Jebb found that a few differences existed between the two copies, but he followed the Hereford manuscript, as being apparently the more correct. He also pointed out that there are some transgressions against the accepted laws of harmony in the use of consecutive fifths, but such of these as were obviously chargeable to the composer were not altered.

The Litany by King, originally in the key of B flat, formed part of a complete Service, like that of Tallis. Now, although the key of B flat is suitable for the Responses (with the exception of the bass part, which is generally low and ineffective), the Priest's part in that key is ordinarily too high, not only for the normal reciting-note, but for the inflections. Tallis's Litany and the Ferial are, as a rule, printed in the keys of C and G respectively, both having G as the normal reciting-note. The key of A is, however, frequently used (chiefly in Cathedrals and the larger Churches) as a matter of convenience, to suit the voice of the Priest; moreover, it is a better "travelling" note. But although the key of A is here given, that of A flat may, if preferred, be used.

King does not give a part for the Priest, nor are the "Latter Suffrages" included in his setting of the Litany; both should, therefore, be sung according to the Ferial Use.

Owing to the number of iterated chords of the tonic (in lieu of the usual initial reciting-chord) for the first four petitions, the tempo for these petitions should be fairly brisk.

Certain bars will be found to contain six minims instead of the usual four. These "long bars" are of frequent occurrence in old Cathedral music.

For the Responses—"We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord" (repeated twenty-one times), "Grant us Thy peace," "Have mercy upon us," "Lord, have mercy upon us," and "Christ, have mercy upon us," the final chord is not that of the tonic, but either the dominant, or the mediant major, thus making a half cadence in the original key, and its relative minor respectively. It is desirable, therefore, that the choir should make the final chord in each of these phrases somewhat shorter than it is written, i.e., instead of , in order to keep the G sharp (chiefly), the B, and the E sharp quite clear of A, the Priest's reciting-note.

There being no directions in the original copies for the performance of the music, the Editor is responsible for (a) the marks of expression, (b) the re-arrangement of those bars where the harmony was faulty in the matter of consecutive fifths, (c) the necessary transposition of the bass an octave higher in certain places.

It may be added that, considering the comparative antiquity of this Litany, the music is characterised by sweetness combined with well-knit strength. In melody and in harmony, the composition will be found to be anything but archaic; in fact, the phrases (with two exceptional progressions, viz., in the cadences respectively of "Grant us Thy peace," and "Christ, / Lord," have mercy upon us") are all comparatively modern in character, and they certainly might have been written at a much later period.

William King, the composer of this Litany, was the son of George King, organist of Winchester Cathedral (died 1665). He was appointed a lay-clerk of Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1648; chaplain to the same Society on taking Holy Orders in 1652; Probationer Fellow of All Souls in 1654; and organist of New College on Dec. 10th, 1664. He graduated as Mus. B. in 1648, and as B.A. in 1649. He died Nov. 17th, 1680, and was buried in the cloisters of New College. In addition to the Service in B flat, of which this Litany forms a part, King was the composer of several Anthems, only one of which, "The Lord is King," has been printed.

William King should not be confused with another of the same name—Charles King—who also took a Bachelor's degree in Music at Oxford, and who also wrote a Service in B flat. Charles King was Almoner and Master of the choristers at S. Paul's from 1707 to 1748.

EXTRACTS FROM THE EDITOR'S PREFACE.

. . . The appearance in this edition of a musical setting of the Priest's part of the Litany, differing from the inflections generally used, seems to call for the following explanatory remarks:—Wanless's "York Litany" includes a Priest's part, arranged by himself; but in Loosemore's setting this is absent. What is here given is the Editor's own arrangement, made some years ago specially for Lichfield Cathedral, where it has since been sung and found to be satisfactory in the unaccompanied use of Loosemore's Litany. This Priest's part (the outcome of sheer necessity) was made so as to do away with the use of the Priest's part of the Ferial Litany in the key of A, in conjunction with Loosemore's setting of the Responses in D minor, accompanied by the organ—a makeshift arrangement which had been in use in Lichfield Cathedral (presumably for the want of a part in the same key as that of the Responses) since the time of the introduction of this Litany there, many years ago. After a frequent hearing, however, of Loosemore's Litany, rendered as indicated above, the Editor came to the conclusion that the unintermittent alternations of the keys of A major and D minor were tiresomely discordant, and extremely unsatisfactory. To give a single instance: the following inflection  is the one most frequently used by the Priest throughout the Litany; but the position of B natural as the final note is more than sufficient to condemn the use of this inflection in juxtaposition with Loosemore's Responses, some of which begin with the chord of B flat.

It need hardly be said that the two chief inflections of the Priest's part of the Ferial Litany, viz., (1)  and (2)  are the same in Tallis's setting. . . .

Loosemore's music being (unlike Tallis's setting and the Ferial) in a minor key, lends itself in an ideal manner to the penetential character of the Litany as a whole. The Responses are of the true Cathedral type, and dignified and solemn in character. One typically beautiful passage to the words "Spare us, good Lord," is deserving of special mention. It consists of four common chords only; yet the pathos contained in this one simple phrase is not easily forgotten. . . .

No. 3.
SET TO MUSIC IN C MINOR (CALLED THE "YORK LITANY")
BY
THOMAS WANLESS, Mus.B., Cantab.,
(Organist of York Minster, 1691-).

EXTRACTS FROM THE EDITOR'S PREFACE.

. . . This setting differs entirely from those by King and Loosemore (Nos. 1 & 2 of this series), and from Tallis's Festival Litany, inasmuch as the Priest's Suffrages are set to music by the composer himself; whereas King and Loosemore give no Priest's part, and in the case of Tallis, the traditional plain-chant of the Ferial Litany is used throughout, with two exceptions, viz., O Lamb of God, &c., (twice), and Lord, { Christ, / Lord, } have mercy upon us.

Dr. Jebb's comment on the Priest's Suffrage, Remember not, &c., as set by Wanless, is that in it "the true rationale of the Chant seems to be preserved." And again: "This Suffrage here forms, like the Invocation, and like the Collects of the Latin Ritual, a perfect chant; the mediation, or first cadence, concluding with the semicolon after the word sins. This is not observed in the Tallisian and other Litanies, though it is suggested by the punctuation of the Prayer Book, and required by the structure of the sentence, which is complete in itself, and unlike the subsequent Suffrages, does not require the choral response to make the sense perfect."

. . . Wanless (like Loosemore) selected a minor key for his setting, which, on account of its plaintive character, is especially suitable for penitential seasons. It may, perhaps, be worthy of notice that for the first four petitions the composer seems to have (consciously or unconsciously) kept closely to Pelham Humfrey's "Grand Chant," using the bass part of this Chant for the Priest's Suffrage, and its general shape and harmony for the Response; but he has turned it into the tonic minor.

A very original feature of this setting is the Priest's part of the "Lesser Litany," with the fall of a fourth and a third respectively for { Christ, / Lord, } have mercy upon us. This, with the simple and solemn harmonies to the same words repeated by the Choir, seldom fails to produce a very impressive effect. . . .

THE CATHEDRAL PRAYER BOOK

BEING THE

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

WITH THE MUSIC NECESSARY FOR THE USE OF CHOIRS

TOGETHER WITH THE

CANTICLES AND PSALTER

POINTED FOR CHANTING

EDITED BY

SIR JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon.

AND

THE REV. WILLIAM RUSSELL, M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon.

EXTRACT FROM EDITORS' PREFACE.

The inconvenience and costliness of the number of separate Books usually requisite for the members of a Choir, in the performance of an ordinary Choral Service, have long pointed to the desirableness of a manual which should, as far as possible, unite under one cover all that is necessary for the choral rendering of, at least, those portions of the Church's Services which are less liable to variation.

The Music of the Versicles and Responses—Festal as well as Ferial—a Psalter and Canticles pointed for Chanting, are almost indispensable for the careful and accurate rendering of a Choral Service. And yet, hitherto, it has been scarcely possible to procure these, unless in separate numbers; involving not only much additional expense, but also the disadvantage arising from the continual shifting of books during Service time, which is such a hindrance to a devout participation in Divine Worship.

To remedy these evils, and to assist in promoting, as it is hoped, a more careful and reverent performance of the Divine Offices, the Cathedral Prayer Book has been compiled.

This manual provides not only for the daily Morning and Evening Prayer, and the choral celebration of the Holy Communion, in all its completeness, but also for the whole of the occasional Offices contained in the Book of Common Prayer. A special feature of it, moreover, is that it includes an Appendix, in which are contained not only Tallis's Festival Responses and Litany, but a great deal of other additional and miscellaneous matter which it is conjectured will add greatly to its usefulness and value.

The Versicles and Responses throughout the Book (exclusive of the Appendix) and the Litany are from the arrangement used in St. Paul's Cathedral (Stainer and Martin, founded on Goss). They follow Merbecke, although with one or two slight variations which have become traditional in the Cathedral of the Metropolis, and, more recently, in many other Churches.

The Music to the Order for the Administration of the Holy Communion follows the edition of Merbecke given in "A Choir Book of the Office of Holy Communion" (Stainer), and published some years since. The Order for the Burial of the Dead has also been arranged from Merbecke by the same Editor.

The pointing of the Psalms and Canticles is after that known as the "Cathedral Psalter" pointing.

For those having a special collection of Chants in use this Prayer Book is issued with the Canticles and Psalms pointed only: for those who prefer a complete musical manual an edition is issued containing the "Cathedral Psalter Chants."

The Appendix contains, besides the Festal Responses and Litany by Tallis arranged in four parts (Barnby), the Ambrosian Te Deum arranged from Merbecke (Stainer), after that version given in his book by the late Dr. Rimbault; accompanying Harmonies to the Apostles' Creed (Bridge); the Creed of St. Athanasius, set to the Ancient Plain-Song Melody, with Organ Accompaniment (Stainer); the General Confession in the Communion Service, with Inflections from an Ancient Confiteor given in Guidetti's Directorium Chori, 1624, and harmonised (Stainer); the Comfortable Words and Proper Prefaces, with the addition of an organ accompaniment (Stainer); Rules for the Proper Inflections of the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, from the Rev. H. A. Walker's Manual for the Holy Communion; the Psalms in the Burial Office, set to a Plain-Song Melody, from "The Psalter Noted," by the late Rev. Thomas Helmore; the 51st Psalm (Miserere mei), set to the Tonus Regalis, and as used at the Special Lenten Service in St. Paul's Cathedral (Stainer).
